Mr. SMOOT. That is very true. We will make 10 per cent on our money to begin with, without a question of doubt. As soon as the building is erected and we can get into it we shall make more than 10 per cent upon the amount invested by the saving in office rent paid elsewhere, and as the years pass we shall make even more. I can not see why there should be any objection. I know there would not and could not be if the matter were fully understood.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have not learned of any objection whatever to the erection of a suitable archives building. I know when the subject was under discussion a year ago there was a proposition which contemplated the closing of Ohio Avenue for the purpose of utilizing a portion of that avenue and two pieces of ground upon either side for the archives building. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] made a vigorous protest against that proposal, and it was defeated, but those of us who supported Mr. UNDERWOOD expressed the hope that an archives building would be speedily erected.

The controversy was as to whether the Government would be justified in spending money to purchase additional ground in view of the fact that a number of years ago the Government acquired territory, at a cost of millions of dollars, which many Senators believed was suitable upon which to erect an archives building.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to say to my colleague that I was heartily in favor, of course, of putting the building on the block mentioned by my colleague and closing up Eighteenth Street. At the time the discussion was going on I did not know that under the existing law Eighteenth Street, just where we wanted it to be closed, is to be closed. There will have to be action by Congress to the contrary if it is not closed. I did make a proposition to the Senator from Alabama afterwards that we should erect the building, and I had a plan drafted by the Treasury Department showing how it might be erected over the street, leaving a space the width of the street beneath the upper stories of the building so that people and vehicles could pass under, but that was not agreed to.

If we locate the building too far away from the offices which must store records in it, the time that will be expended in going to and from the archives building and the inconvenience of it will not justify us in its erection. It must not be located too far away from the center of the offices that will use it. Therefore, I want my colleague to know that there is a movement on foot to get the ground upon which to erect the building so it will be in a proper place and will not cost any more than if we had purchased the land as originally intended, and perhaps not as much.

Mr. KING. I understand that the Senator from Alabama opposed the construction of the building on blocks 295 and 294 and the closing of Ohio Avenue, and advocated the erection of the building upon the block known as 230 and possibly 229. It seems to me that the position of the Senator from Alabama, upon the occasion to which I have referred, was correct, and that the Government ought to utilize ground which it owns for the purpose of constructing the archives building.

Mr. SMOOT. May I say to my colleague that I know the commission is going to do what is best for the Government, and unless we can save money by the plan which is now under consideration there is no question that we will report here to the Senate and ask for further instructions.

Mr. KING. I would be entirely willing, and I wish the committee had reported an amendment of that character, to authorize either the building commission or the heads of the various departments together with the Public Buildings Commission, to select a suitable place, preferably upon ground owned by the Government, but if they were unable to find a suitable site for the erection of a proper building that they should be authorized to acquire sufficient ground whenever it was proper. I would be willing to vote for a provision of that kind.

Mr. SMOOT. That is the policy which will be followed. I wish the situation were otherwise, because I would like to tell my colleague the details it will involve, but I think he can take my word for it that the commission will not do anything except what it believes to be for the best interest of the Government financially and otherwise.

Mr. KING. In view of the very reassuring statement of my colleague, I shall not press my motion, but I desire to admonish him now in the utmost kindness that if the commission does not make a suitable selection, and if it shall impose a burden upon the United States, my colleague and the commission will be criticized, and I shall be frank in criticizing them.

Mr. SMOOT. I shall not object if my colleague does it in that event.

Mr. KING. We all agree that we must have an archives building. It is very unfortunate that Congress did not construct it years ago. It is very unfortunate that a year ago, when the importance of the building was brought to the attention of Congress, we did not make a sufficient appropriation and authorize the construction of the building. I agree with all my colleague has said about the necessity of the building and the importance of withdrawing these precious papers and archives from insecure places and putting them into some building where they will be preserved.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 28, line 13, after the numerals "$12,000,000," at the end of line 12, to strike out "of which not to exceed $4,000,000 may be used for the payment of such claims accruing prior to July 1, 1920, without special authorization and appropriation by Congress in each individual case," so as to read:

For refunding taxes illegally collected under the provisions of sections 3220 and 3689, Revised Statutes, as amended by the act of February 24, 1919, $12,000,000: Provided, That a report shall be made to Congress of the disbursements hereunder as required by the act of February 24, 1919.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. I send to the desk an amendment, which I move to insert at the end of line 18, on page 28.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Wyoming will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 28, line 18, after the numerals "1919," it is proposed to insert "including the payment of claims accruing prior to July 1, 1920."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 37, line 5, after the word "examinations," to insert "including the amount necessary for the medical inspection of aliens, as required by section 16 of the act of February 5, 1917," so as to read:

For medical examinations, including the amount necessary for the medical inspection of aliens, as required by section 16 of the act of February 5, 1917, medical, surgical, and hospital services and supplies for beneficiaries (other than patients of the United States Veterans' Bureau) of the Public Health Service, including necessary personnel, regular and reserve commissioned officers of the Public Health Service, personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, maintenance, equipment, leases, fuel, lights, water, printing, freight, transportation and travel, maintenance and operation of motor trucks and passenger motor vehicles, transportation, care, maintenance, and treatment of lepers, court costs, and other expenses incident to proceedings heretofore or hereafter taken for commitment of mentally incompetent persons to hospitals for the care and treatment of the insane, and reasonable burial expenses (not exceeding $100 for any patient dying in hospital), $5,627,394.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "New Orleans, La., Mint," on page 41, line 18, after the numerals "$2,500," to strike out "assistant assayer, $1,500; in all, $4,000," so as to read:

NEW ORLEANS, LA., MINT.

Salaries: Assayer in charge, who shall also perform the duties of melter, $2,500.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the matter involved in the amendment which has just been stated, being one of the amendments relative to certain assay offices and mints, is one which is of long standing. In the development of the mines of the country it was found necessary to establish assay offices at various points in Territories which have since become States, as well as the one at St. Louis, Mo. The great corporations which are engaged in the larger quartz-mining operations, as well as in other kinds of mining operations, send their product to the larger assay offices of the East, but the man who is in the field, who takes his sack of flour and his chunk of bacon and goes out and sleeps on the ground, delving about to discover whether he may not find gold and silver or other minerals, in my judgment, is always entitled to the best accommodations which we can give him. Therefore, I think that so long as there may be minerals to be discovered we should maintain these assay offices for the benefit of the man who is seeking to uncover them.

The question arose in the committee, however, as to whether in such cases both an assayer and an assistant assayer are needed, where we have already reduced the salary of the assayer perhaps to $1,800 a year, or not to exceed $2,500 a year, and where the assistant assayer might not be accorded a salary of more than $1,200; but I find upon an investigation of the matter—and I believe the other members of the committee agree with me in that finding—that in many cases, although the senior assayer, who has perhaps devoted almost a lifetime to the work, is not able physically to do all the work, yet because of his knowledge he is indispensable; and that the assistant assayers are also necessary, in order to supplement the lack of physical ability on the part of the principal assayer, to perform all of the duties of the office.

Therefore, I am going to ask that the amendments which have been reported by the committee which are contained in the clauses referring to the several assay offices be disagreed to.

Mr. FLETCHER. I desire to ask the chairman of the committee whether he refers to the amendments which have been reported by the committee proposing to strike out the provision for an assistant assayer?

Mr. WARREN. Yes.

Mr. FLETCHER. And, as I understand, the Senator on behalf of the committee now asks that such amendments be disagreed to.

Mr. WARREN. That is my request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations which has just been stated.

The amendment was rejected.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the subhead "Boise, Idaho, assay office," on page 43, line 9, after the numerals "$1,800," to strike out "assistant assayer, $1,200; in all, $3,000," so as to read:

BOISE, IDAHO, ASSAY OFFICE.

Salaries: Assayer in charge, who shall also perform the duties of melter, $1,800.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was, under subhead "Deadwood, S. Dak., assay office," on page 43, line 15, after the numerals "$1,800," to strike out "assistant assayer, $1,200; in all, $3,000," so as to read:

DEADWOOD, S. DAK., ASSAY OFFICE.

Salaries: Assayer in charge, who shall also perform the duties of melter, $1,800.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was, on page 43, after line 16, to insert:

For wages of workmen and other employees, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Helena, Mont., assay office," on page 43, line 21, after the numerals "$1,800," to strike out "assistant assayer, $1,200; in all, $3,000," so as to read:

HELENA, MONT., ASSAY OFFICE.

Salaries: Assayer in charge, who shall also perform the duties of melter, $1,800.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was, on page 43, line 24, to increase the appropriation for wages of workmen and other employees at the Helena, Mont., assay office from "$900" to "$2,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 46, after line 9, to insert:

Boston, Mass., immigrant station: For protection of site and building and approach work, $73,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 46, after line 16, to insert:

New York, N. Y., barge office: For constructing pent house on bridge, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, in connection with the appropriations for public buildings, I desire to ask the chairman of the committee a question. In a number of instances sites for public buildings were chosen and appropriations were made for the construction of the buildings as far back as 1913. I know of two instances in the State of Florida, for example, where the appropriations have been made for the purchase of sites and for the erection of buildings for post offices and to accommodate the Federal court. The plans for the buildings were drawn, bids were called for by proper advertisement, but it was found that none of the bidders would construct the buildings for the amount of money which was provided in the appropriations for such buildings. There the matter has rested; from 1913 to 1922 nothing has been done in reference to those buildings, the department simply saying that it can not have them constructed for the amount of the appropriations originally made.

One of two things ought to happen: Either the department ought to change the plans of those buildings so as to enable them to be constructed within the appropriation, and proceed to erect them and utilize the appropriation, or they ought to come to Congress and ask for additional appropriations sufficient to meet the conditions which exist to-day.

It probably costs more to construct a public building now than it did in 1914, and it seems for that reason action is suspended, and yet Congress does not supply the additional amount required to proceed with the work. We have said we want a certain site and a certain building erected upon it, and have appropriated money which we thought at the time was sufficient to construct the building, but the department find that the building can not be constructed for the amount of money provided. They have not said, so far as I am aware, exactly how much more is needed in each instance, although from correspondence I am advised that there ought to be a certain sum added to each of these appropriations. I do not know, however, whether the department have ever recommended to Congress or to any committee of Congress that the amount originally appropriated ought to be added to. If they have, the proper committee, it seems to me, ought to provide for those deficiencies.

I wish to ask the chairman of the committee if there is not a possibility of taking care of the situation by appropriating a sufficient amount to complete the buildings which have been authorized?

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senator that he is exactly right in his premises. This, however, is the condition which confronts us: We took rather rapid strides in enacting the so-called omnibus bills providing for the erection of public buildings. As the Senator knows, there were three or more such bills passed containing authorizations and appropriations for a large number of buildings which, evidently, after due consideration, it was deemed proper to construct. Appropriations were asked for from year to year and plans were drawn for many such buildings, and the money stands to-day appropriated in full; in fact, in every instance, I think, an appropriation has been made up to the limit of cost. So it is entirely a question whether the department can go ahead and erect the buildings under the limit of cost prescribed, and whether they will do it.

Before many of these buildings were begun the European war broke out, and subsequently the United States entered the war, and from the beginning of that conflict the price of materials and labor and all the elements of construction began to advance. It was soon discovered that, even though it was desired to erect those buildings, additional appropriations would have to be made. The administration then in power asked us to forbear on account of the war. It was not a time to enter upon such undertakings in any large way; and so the matter went on. A year after the conclusion of the war prices were probably at the highest notch they had ever reached, and it was deemed unwise to go ahead with the construction of the buildings. To-day, more than three years after the war, the department still says, to use the ordinary phrase, that the amounts provided are not "within gunshot" of being sufficient to erect the buildings, and the reports which have been submitted indicated that that is a correct estimate of the situation.

When the new administration came into power and the matter was taken up with them—and I may say it has been taken up by me repeatedly with the Treasury Department—the refusal to proceed with the work was based on the ground that prices were still too high and that costs continued to be in excess of the amounts appropriated. I know that in my own State, for instance, there are three buildings which are very badly needed. The records of the United States Land Office and other records are housed in very poor wooden buildings, but the appropriation in each case lacks $10,000 or $15,000 of being sufficient to construct the new building.

Under the methods we have pursued here—in fact, in accordance with what might be termed the unwritten law—no additional amount can be expended beyond those already authorized by legislation without further legislation; in other words, under the rules which we have followed so long we can not appropriate to enlarge a building in the State of the Senator from Florida or in the State of Wyoming, for instance, without further authorization.

I will be glad to join the Senator in an effort to have the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, which is the proper committee to consider the matter, take up the question of completing all the buildings which we have authorized and appropriated for, and ascertain how much it will require to finish them, and in some omnibus bill to undertake to cover that ground. It will not require a large amount to complete this work; in fact, the amount will be small compared with the great claims that we have to meet from time to time; and yet the convenience throughout the various States of providing adequate public buildings would be immeasurable, and it is likewise essential that better protection be afforded the public records.

I happen to be a member of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and I shall be glad at the first opportunity, as I have already done for that matter, to take up the matter with the committee and request that a movement of the kind indicated be initiated.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I am glad to have the chairman of the committee make that statement. It quite clears up the situation, in my mind, at least, to a considerable extent. The people have been waiting very patiently now for a good many years, and it seems to me that they ought to be served.

It appears to me that this matter stands in rather a different attitude than the case where it is desired to make an addition to or an extension of a building or something of that sort. In such a case I can see that there might be required a new authorization and additional legislation; but in the instances which I have in mind it is not proposed to make any additions to the original building at all; but it is simply necessary to secure an additional appropriation to construct the building which was originally contemplated and designed. It seems to me that the committee could insert such items in this kind of a bill without anything further being necessary than a statement from the Treasury Department that they find that a given building can not be erected for the original appropriation, and that $10,000 or $15,000 more will be required because of the increase in the cost of material, labor, and so forth.

I repeat, it seems to me as if all such cases could be taken care of in a bill such as that now pending without reference to further legislation concerning a change in the plans or anything along that line. I hope the chairman of the committee will see to it that those matters are taken care of, because the Congress intended in 1913 that the work should be proceeded with at once, and for nine years to elapse and nothing to be done is almost inexcusable. Of course the war intervened, and under Democratic administration, with their ideas of economy in every direction, a public buildings bill was never passed; in fact, the last public buildings bill passed by Congress was signed by President Taft in March, 1913, the Democratic Congress never having succeeded in passing a public buildings bill at all. Nine years have gone by since these appropriations were made.

Perhaps it would not be feasible now to put these items in this bill by way of an amendment; but while I have the floor I want to call the attention of the committee to another situation. There are two items in this bill, at page 17, for printing and binding for the Treasury Department, carrying an appropriation of $500,000. There is an item under the head of Bureau of Engraving and Printing carrying a large appropriation, amounting to something like $1,292,265.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator will understand that those items, as large as they seem, are strictly necessary for the credit and good faith of the country. For instance, here is the matter of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. They have the making of all the bonds and currency. We have approaching within two or three months the issuing of new paper of some kind to take up all of the Victory bonds, and probably some portion of the other bonds; but we have cut down the appropriation quite materially this year from last year, and last year we cut it down to some extent from the year before. We consider that we are doing pretty well in that.

Take it here under one class, for instance: Last year the appropriation was $214,000; it is now $160,000. Under another one last year it was $750,000, and now it is $500,000. That is the printing and binding for the Treasury Department, including printing required by the Federal farm loan act. There is another place where last year they had an appropriation of $125,000, and this year it is $116,000, and so on. Those are the necessary and unavoidable expenses of the Government under the condition in which we find ourselves after the war.

Mr. FLETCHER. Of course, this is not itemized, and I can not tell about the reasonableness of the appropriation, but I have no doubt the committee has gone into that subject. What I was proceeding to say was this:

The item of printing and binding in these days has become of very great consequence. It is costing the Government to-day $14,000,000 to do the printing and binding here in Washington. It is costing $2,000,000 a year under private contracts to do Government printing in Washington. It is costing $2,000,000 a year more in plants outside of Washington; so that we are actually spending to-day $18,000,000 to do the printing for the Government.

Mr. WARREN. And, if the Senator will permit me, we rise here every morning and ask for the printing of every kind of material and stuff in the RECORD and in documents, and forget, for the time being, that there is any such thing as economy in printing.

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes. I have been for some time endeavoring to check that as far as possible; but what I want to call the Senator's attention to now is that this item of printing and binding, instead of going into one general bill each year, is parceled out to various departments. The bill affecting the Treasury Department carries its item for printing and binding amounting to $500,000. The bill affecting the Interior Department will carry the item of printing for that department, and the same way with the Department of Commerce, the Department of Agriculture, the Department of Labor, the Department of State, the War Department, the Navy Department, and so forth.

The committee, therefore, will not grasp the enormous aggregate of the various appropriations in these various bills unless they sit down and figure them all up, because, as I say, the item of printing and binding is parceled out in the various bills; but when you go to foot them up you will find, as I have stated, that the total cost to-day is about $18,000,000 a year for doing the Government printing.

What I want to ask the committee to do when these bills come before the committee is to scrutinize carefully the item of printing and binding in each bill, and I am quite sure that if they will do that they will be able to hold down the departments to a reasonable limit in the expenditure of public funds for the enormous amount of printing that each department is doing. I think a lot of it is wholly unnecessary. In the Joint Committee on Printing we are trying as hard as we can to control the element of waste in that connection; but when the head of a department certifies that a certain publication is desirable and needed for administration purposes, and that sort of thing, the Public Printer is usually disposed, of course, to print it. If the law allows him to do it he will do it without any question; but the printing in the various departments can be very largely controlled through the Committee on Appropriations if they will only analyze the different requests and see that money is not wasted in useless publications.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will continue the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 46, after line 18, to insert:

New York, N. Y., post office: For shelter over driveway, in addition to the amount of $5,000 appropriated in the sundry civil appropriation act approved June 12, 1917, $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 47, to insert:

Richmond, Va., post office, courthouse, and customhouse: For installation of lift and construction of driveway, including alterations of buildings on land recently acquired, $40,000, and the sum of $15,000, appropriated in the sundry civil appropriation act approved July 1, 1918, for alterations, etc., is hereby reappropriated and made available hereunder.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 47, after line 7, to insert:

Washington, D. C., Auditors' Building: For repairing or renewing roof, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 47, after line 9, to insert:

Washington, D. C., national archives building: For site of building, including $25,000 for technical services, $500,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 47, after line 12, to insert:

Washington, D. C., Treasury Building vaults: For the construction of a three-story structure in the north court of the Treasury Building, consisting of a two-story vault with office space above, including all necessary mechanical and vault equipment for the same, and all incidental changes required to the Treasury Building in connection therewith, $1,000,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 48, after line 19, to insert:

Columbia River (Astoria), Oreg., Quarantine Station: For repairs to wharf, $11,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 49, line 2, to increase the appropriation for Port Townsend, Wash., quarantine station, from "$25,000" to "$26,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Public buildings, repairs, equipment, and general expenses," on page 52, line 21, after the words "not to exceed," to strike out "$125,000" and to insert "$142,500," so as to read:

General expenses: To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to execute and give effect to the provisions of section 6 of the act of May 30, 1908 (35 Stat., p. 537): For foremen draftsmen, architectural draftsmen, and apprentice draftsmen, at rates of pay from $840 to $2,500 per annum; structural engineers and draftsmen, at rates of pay from $840 to $2,500 per annum; mechanical, sanitary, electrical, heating and ventilating, and illuminating engineers and draftsmen, at rates of pay from $1,200 to $2,400 per annum; computers and estimators, at rates of pay from $1,000 to $2,500 per annum; the expenditures under all the foregoing classes for which a minimum and maximum rate of compensation is stated, not to exceed $142,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 54, line 14, to strike out "$424,000" and insert "$442,100," so as to read:

Provided, That no expenditures shall be made hereunder for transportation of operating supplies for public buildings; not to exceed $6,000 for stationery; not to exceed $1,000 for books of reference, law books, technical periodicals and journals; ground rent at Salamanca, N. Y.; contingencies of every kind and description, traveling expenses of site agents, recording deeds and other evidences of title, photographic instruments, chemicals, plates, and photographic materials, and such other articles and supplies and such minor and incidental expenses not enumerated, connected solely with work on public buildings, the acquisition of sites, and the administrative work connected with the annual appropriations under the Supervising Architect's Office as the Secretary of the Treasury may deem necessary and specially order or approve, but not including heat, light, janitor service, awnings, curtains, or any expenses for the general maintenance of the Treasury Building, or surveys, plaster models, progress photographs, test pit borings, or mill and shop inspections, $442,100.

THE AGRICULTURAL BLOC.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, for the past few weeks there has been displayed upon the part of the administration much activity to block the efforts and destroy the influence of the group of Senators who have been trying to obtain the passage of beneficent legislation for the agricultural interests of the country. That activity has been shown in every way, and has been concerted and most persistent. We saw it first show its head in a message delivered by the President of the United States at the beginning of this Congress, when he spoke for party unity and pleaded with Republican Members of Congress not to ally themselves with groups or blocs. There was no mistaking the fact, and no one doubted it who heard or read that message, that he was aiming from start to finish at the agricultural bloc of the Senate.

A few days later the Secretary of War, evidently as the spokesman and mouthpiece on this question of President Harding and the administration, delivered a speech in the city of New York. I imagine that his audience was composed of manufacturers and bankers, patrons of Wall Street. In that speech, which was published from one end of the country to the other, he criticized the agricultural group, made light of their efforts, found fault with their achievements, and pleaded with the country to discredit and destroy them.

I desire to insert at the beginning of my brief remarks part of the President's message touching the agricultural group, and also parts of the speech of Secretary of War Weeks, made in New York at that time. I shall also insert, by way of analysis, a very eloquent speech made by a very eloquent Senator from New England only a few nights ago, when speaking in the city of New York. It seems that when these spokesmen of the present administration criticize and condemn this group of patriotic Senators, whose hearts are with the farmers and who are trying to pass beneficent legislation for them, they always choose New York City as the most appropriate place for making their speeches. I suppose it is because the environment there is better and their remarks when delivered there are more enthusiastically received.

President Harding in his address to the Congress on December 6, 1921, in part said:

Ours is a popular Government through political parties. We divide along political lines, and I would ever have it so.

Granting that we are fundamentally a representative popular Government, with political parties the governing agencies, I believe the political party in power should assume responsibility, determine upon policies in the conference which supplements conventions and election campaigns, and then strive for achievement through adherence to the accepted policy.

There is vastly greater security, immensely more of the national viewpoint, much larger and prompter accomplishment where our divisions are along party lines, in the broad and loftier sense, than to divide geographically, or according to pursuits, or personal following.

From the New York Times of Friday, December 9, 1921, I quote:

Secretary Weeks's sharp criticism of the congressional "blocs" was regarded by many of those who heard his address as a warning of a fight against the system by the Republican Party leaders. Declaring that it was "impossible to get the type of legislative action which comes from party regularity and responsibility," Secretary Weeks harked back to "the days of so-called Cannonism," when, he said, "the Speaker found ways, perfectly legitimate under the rules, to prevent the enactment of a vast amount of personal and irresponsible legislation." * * *

"I shall not take the time to criticize the legislation Congress has enacted for the farmer," he continued. "It was brought about by a combination of Members of the two great political parties which had sufficient votes to obtain the result desired. Some of this legislation may benefit those for whom it was enacted. Much of it is unsound, however, from an economical standpoint, and I very much doubt if it will be of any benefit even to the farmer. But the so-called agricultural bloc was in control, honestly believing, in all probability, that the legislation enacted was desirable, and that they can return to their constituencies and point out what has been done in their behalf. * * *

"This brought about the farm-loan legislation of a few years ago, which, if limited to the original purposes of the law—that is, to help the farmer under conditions described at that time and which I will not discuss—might have been wise; but under the present law, as I see it, the Government is financing the farmer and is producing a vast volume of nontaxable securities, so that, in effect, the farmer is borrowing his money at a much lower rate than the current market warrants. Encouraged by its success, the agricultural bloc has in contemplation a further legislative program."

Mr. Weeks then reviewed the further program, characterizing as "unwise" the so-called pure wool bill, declaring that the proposed law to regulate cold storage would "make the price of many articles of food higher," and describing the Federal highway bill as a proposal to construct "roads purely local in character" for the benefit of "one or, at best, a few individuals." * * *

"The provision first adopted by the House making the maximum rate 32 per cent would have been infinitely wiser, not only from the standpoint of the taxpayer but the Government itself, which, at that rate would, in my opinion, obtain a much larger return than it will with the rate imposed in the law. However, in this case there can be held directly responsible this organization known as the agricultural bloc, which, united with a solid minority party, had sufficient votes to so raise the rates that for those who have incomes from $5,000 to $100,000 the reduction in the rates imposed by the present law are only nominal. So when we modify laws or even congressional procedure in an effort to get rid of what some people term an evil, we frequently substitute therefor a supplemental list of troubles, any one of which may be infinitely greater than the original one, the removal of which was demanded, even assuming that it possessed all of the bad qualities its critics claimed. The elector can not be assured that when he votes for the declarations made by a political party that he can get responsible action as a result.

Mr. President, the Senator from New Hampshire, GEORGE H. MOSES, has been the apostle and mouthpiece in this body of another bloc, better oiled and more greedy than the agricultural bloc. It does not make so much noise, perhaps, as the agricultural bloc; but the manufacturers' bloc has had its influence here and has exerted it most powerfully for a long, long time. The Senator from New Hampshire has taken offense at the action of the agricultural group, and he makes this speech, from which I quote in part:

The so-called farm bloc of the Senate which controls that body is made up of 20 lawyers, 1 newspaper editor, and a well digger. The only three farmers in the Senate—one from Maine—

I do not know whether he is speaking of the distinguished junior Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] or the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD]. Anybody can look at either of them and tell that he never worked on a farm in his life, and I doubt whether he ever saw a real farmer in his life; but the Senator from New Hampshire says:

Another from New Hampshire—

Referring to his colleague, Mr. KEYES, I wonder what the real farmers of the great West or the far South would think if they could see one of these New England farmers or gaze upon the placid countenance of these anointed New England Senatorial farmers.

And a third from New York—

I do not know whether he is talking about the junior Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] or the senior Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH]. At any rate, when it comes down to voting to pass legislation for the real benefit of the farmers, neither of them, so far as I recall, ever arrayed himself on the side of the farmers where other interests were involved. But these are the three Senators whom the Senator from New Hampshire holds up as the "real farmers" of the Senate, and I doubt whether Mr. MOSES or the three Senators he names know the difference between a "clevis" and an "axletree" or could distinguish a rake from a mowing machine.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, they are the kind of farmers——

Mr. HARRISON. That farm the farmers.

Mr. SIMMONS. That, according to my information, have been invited to attend the farmers' conferences to be held here that there has been so much talk about.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator is right. I continue reading from the speech of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES] in New York:

The only three farmers in the Senate—one from Maine, another from New Hampshire, and another from New York—have never been invited to a meeting of the farm bloc, where they set up ruthless, selfish legislation.

So we have it that this distinguished spokesman for the manufacturing interests of the country says that the legislation proposed by the agricultural group is of a "ruthless, selfish" nature. To continue reading:

The bloc does not know that a farm exists north of the Mason and Dixon line or east of the Mississippi River, and they give no consideration to the truck farmers in that territory. All they know is hogs, corn, wheat, and cotton.

Mr. President, those few Senators who met and discussed legislation in behalf of the agricultural interests of the country did it without respect to party or geographical lines. They came from every part of the country and from both political parties, and it was not selfish legislation and it was not ruthless legislation that they suggested should be passed by the Congress. Why is it, Mr. President, that the agricultural group should be heralded as a selfish lot of freebooters, ruthlessly trying to destroy the Constitution and bent upon passing legislation inimical to the general welfare? Have they not a right to be heard in the Congress of the United States? Are the agricultural interests of this country not great enough and important enough to have a voice in this Chamber and to be considered in some degree at least by the administration? The farmers only cultivate the land, produce the men and women who govern the cities and run the country, feed and clothe the world, and compose the cornerstone of our national life.

May I suggest to the Senate that from 1870 to 1920 the value of the land of farms and farm buildings increased from $7,444,000,000 to $66,316,000,000. That is quite an amount invested in farms in this country and should to some extent merit consideration by this Congress.

May I suggest also, in considering the interests represented by this agricultural group, that from 1870 to 1920 the rural population, outside of the corporations of over 2,500 people, showed a decrease from 71.4 per cent to 48.6 per cent. Is that fact in itself not sufficient to cause the administration to give some consideration to the needs of the farmers that the movement from country to city be checked?

Let me suggest, too, that from 1899 to 1909 the quantity output of farms increased 10.5 per cent, while population increased 21.5 per cent. From 1909 to 1919 the quantity output of products of the farm increased only 10.5 per cent, while population increased 14.5 per cent.

The facts, as revealed by the investigation of the Joint Commission on Agriculture, show that the rural population is decreasing year by year, and that the farm output is not keeping pace with the increase of population in this country. It carries with it problems which must be solved, but the interest is so vast, and it is so important, that it deserves the most careful consideration and heartiest sympathy of everyone connected with this administration.

Mr. President, all will admit that the agricultural interest is one of the most important in this country, and those who will study the facts must know that it has not been treated as fairly as have other interests in America. We have seen legislation passed for this class and that class. The President who appeared in the other House and delivered this message, saying that he did not believe in classes and groups, has seen his party prosper and develop through class legislation. The protective tariff, one of the most beloved of Republican principles, gives advantages to some at the expense of others—robbing the many for the benefit of the few—a species of class or group legislation that is as unjustifiable as it is inexcusable.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. HEFLIN. In its platform of 1908, when Mr. Taft was the nominee for President, the Republican Party said:

We guarantee unto the manufacturer a reasonable profit.

It said nothing about the farmer, merchant, or anybody else. If that was not a guaranty of class legislation, what was it?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes. But in the campaign recently closed not only did President Harding but every other Republican leader, through the press and on the stump, express his undying love for the farmers and advocated legislation in their behalf. The distinguished leader of the majority party in this Chamber [Mr. LODGE], as the temporary chairman of the last Republican convention, spoke loudly and eloquently, and with some apparent sincerity, in behalf of the farmers of the country. They were then in his mind a most important class of our citizenship. But as soon as these gentlemen are inducted into office and take control of the affairs of the country, the influence of other interests becomes more powerful—they disregard their promises, forget their pretended love, and turn their backs upon the farmers' interest.

Why is there opposition to the agricultural group? The country may not know it, but those who were here when the tax bill was being considered in this body and know the discussion touching the amendments which were adopted, that they were adopted through the united efforts of this side of the Chamber, backed by certain Senators on the other side belonging to the agricultural group. They know, and we know, that it aroused the ire of the President and those men who control the destinies of the Republican Party to-day, and that is the reason, and the sole reason, why they are now trying to destroy the agricultural group.

Why do not the President, the Secretary of War, and other leaders of the Republican Party who desire united party action inveigh against the tariff bloc which has been formed and is flourishing in this Chamber? It is composed of more Republicans than is the agricultural group. Its purposes might be said to be inimical to certain interests of this country, and yet that tariff bloc meets regularly, presents its views to the committee, sends forth its threats, and we never hear anything against it. I will tell you. It is working along Republican lines of granting special favors to special interests. The agricultural group is only trying to obtain fair treatment and justice for a class of citizens whose condition is deplorable and whose shoulders are almost giving way under the burden that you have placed upon them. Take the manufacturers' bloc. God bless you, it is so smooth, and it has been working so long, and it knows its purposes and the avenues of approach which really obtain results so well that you do not hear the rumblings from it—whither it goes or whence it comes. In this Chamber it is both omnipotent and omnipresent. But the agricultural bloc is not so experienced. It operates with no such power, and is not so skillfully handled.

Mr. President, when you look at the figures you will see that the agricultural interests of this country have a right to voice their views and have representatives plead for them.

I read from the report of the commission on agricultural investigation, which discloses that in 1920 the farmer's dollar, when compared with other dollars, the manufacturer's, the coal operator's, and those of various other industries, was worth only 89 cents. That was in 1920. In May, 1921, the value of the farmer's dollar was only 77 cents, and to-day the value of the farmer's dollar is only 67 cents.

In the last two or three years the farmer has seen the things he raised depreciate in value at a more rapid rate and to a greater extent than the products of any other industry.

I think it was the distinguished Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LADD] who said that the farmer has lost within the last 12 or 18 months $12,000,000,000. Yet, because they would have men meet and counsel together, and try to work out some solution of their problems, it arouses the President and causes him to come to the Congress and inveigh against it, and use the power of his great office to destroy their influence.

Let me read how a few things raised upon the farm have depreciated in value. Take hogs. In January, 1919, taking the figures 100 as a basis, hogs were worth 209, and in July, 1921, they had decreased to 116, nearly one-half in value in so short a time.

Let us take live stock, on the same basis of 100. In January, 1919, the figure was 192. In May 1921, it was decreased to 111, cut almost in half.

Let us take cattle, steers. In January, 1919, on the basis of 100, they were worth 223. In July, 1921, they had dropped to 99, nearly three times in so short a time. Yet, because representatives from that great country in the far West, where they raise cattle, meet here in groups, it arouses the ire of the President and his Secretary of War, and they condemn it.

Let us take cotton, on a basis of 100. In January, 1919, it was 231. In July, 1921, it had dropped down to 97.

Let us take some other articles which are not raised upon the farm and see if they have depreciated to such an extent; cloth and clothing first, on the basis of 100. In January, 1919, it was 234; in May, 1920, it rose to 353; and then, in July, 1921, it dropped to 179. But the proportion of the decrease was nothing when you compare it with the decrease in the farmers' products.

Let us take shoes—shoes that come from that section represented by the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire, who says that the legislation proposed by the agricultural group is selfish and ruthless, and ascribes to his section the distinction of producing the only three farmers in the United States Senate. How have the prices of shoes decreased? On the basis of 100, in January, 1919, shoes were 208 a pair, and in July, 1921, they were 225 a pair, showing no decrease whatever, but, on the contrary, an increase. Why, of course the Senator has no reason to complain. The shoe manufacturers are getting more for their shoes, or were in July, 1921, than they did back in January, 1919; but the farmer, with his cattle, his cotton, his wheat, and his corn, is reduced from two to three times the former price.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President——

Mr. HARRISON. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. DIAL. In my town the other day I heard of a farmer selling a hide for 25 cents and buying a pair of half soles for his shoes for 35 cents.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; that is no doubt true, and I suppose our friend from New Hampshire would approve of that practice. That satisfies him thoroughly. Why, Mr. President, it has been one of the crimes of the ages, that these high and exorbitant and outrageous prices charged for shoes throughout the fight against the high cost of living went unchallenged and unpunished. They were the most unconscionable profiteers that infested the land.

The farmer's little children were forced to go without shoes because of the high prices he would be compelled to pay for them and the low prices he received for the products of his labor.

Oh, yes; the farmer should be satisfied.

Let us take structural steel and see if there has been a decrease. In January, 1919, structural steel on a basis of 100 was 192. In July, 1921, it dropped only 176, a very few points.

Let us take pig iron. Pig iron in January, 1919, was 196. In July, 1921, it dropped only to 133, a very slight drop in comparison to the decrease in the price of farmers' products.

Let us take bituminous coal. In January, 1919, coal was 186 and in July, 1921, had it decreased? Oh, no. It had increased to 209. Of course, the representatives of the great coal fields of West Virginia and elsewhere in the country had no cause to complain.

Now, let us see about anthracite coal. In January, 1919, it was 152, and in July, 1921, it had increased to 198.

Let us see about house furnishings, goods, and so forth, that the farmer is obliged to buy. Did those decrease in value like the things that he raised? The figures show that in January, 1919, house furnishings and goods were 218 and in July, 1921, were 235.

Is not that sufficient to cause the representatives of the great agricultural interests of the country to meet and confer and try to solve some of the farmer's problems? Is he not entitled to a meeting and conference of his friends in Congress, so that the difficulties and these inequalities may, in part at least, be removed? Can they be expected to look with complacency upon conditions that carry the prices of their products down while the prices of the things they are forced to buy go up?

I shall not read further, although there are some very interesting figures here.

Mr. PITTMAN. From what is it that the Senator has been reading?

Mr. HARRISON. I was reading, in giving the statistics and data, from the report of the Joint Commission on Agriculture recently filed. There was another table from which I desired to read to the Senate. Let us take certain products that are raised on the farm to ascertain what depreciation there was within a certain time.

In this connection I recall that it was only a little while ago when, under the leadership of the distinguished Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER], there was passed through this body what was known as the emergency tariff bill. It proposed to place a tariff on wheat, corn, peanuts, beans, and on a lot of other agricultural products. We heard then that it would be the salvation of the farmer. That was the Republican theory. That was the way you said you would solve the problem. If you solve no other problem any better than you did that, you are not competent even to attempt to solve any problem that may arise here. It was an absolute failure, and you know it. I do not know whether or not you would admit its failure, because by so doing you destroy your theory of protection, but even if you will not admit it I am going to give you the prices on some of the products from the American farm upon which you placed a high tariff, but which within the last 12 months have continued to decrease and drop in price. Oh, the fallacy of a protective tariff! In 1920 No. 2 northern wheat was $2.90 a bushel; in January, 1921, it had dropped to $1.88½ a bushel, and in January, 1922, it had dropped to $1.10 a bushel.

In 1920 No. 2 mixed corn was worth $1.60 a bushel; in January, 1921, it had dropped to 74 cents a bushel, and in January, 1922, it had dropped to 48 cents a bushel, and in some sections I understand had sold for a price as low as 25 cents a bushel.

In this connection I am going to insert a list of farm products showing the prices, respectively, on January 15, 1920, 1921, and 1922. They are as startling as they are indicative of the deplorable condition now confronting the American farmer:

Article.	Jan. 15, 1922.	Jan. 15, 1921.	July 15, 1920.
Wheat, No. 2, northern, cents per bushel	110	188½	290
Corn, No. 2, mixed, cents per bushel	48½ - 48½	71½ - 74½	152 - 160
Oats, No. 2, white, cents per bushel	37 - 37½	44½ - 45½	95½ - 98½
Barley, low malting to fancy, cents per bushel	52 - 65	75 - 90	116 - 127
Rye, No. 2, cents per bushel	77 - 78	169	221 - 222
Flaxseed, No. 1, northern, cents per bushel	208	200	345
Potatoes, cents per 100 pounds	190 - 220	120 - 150	675 - 760
Beans, pea, cents per 100 pounds	470 - 500	425 - 450	700 - 750
Hay, No. 1, timothy, dollars per ton	23 - 24	26 - 28	38 - 40
Butter, creamery, extra, cents per pound	34	48½	55
Eggs, fresh firsts, cents per dozen	38	72 - 72½	42 - 42½
Beef cattle, inferior to prime, dollars per 100 pounds	6.25- 9.25	7.00-10.85	9.40-16.90
Hogs, mixed packers, dollars per 100 pounds	7.50- 8.40	8.80- 9.75	12.90-15.80
Sheep, native, dollars per 100 pounds	3.25-11.25	4.75- 5.50	8.75-10.00

Of course, it is natural that the wheat farmer of the North and of the West should feel discontented over the situation, and resent the action of the President of the United States in coming before the American Congress, and in a special message inveighing against the representatives here who are trying to remedy the situation.

Let me cite in this connection some other figures, showing the purchasing value of the farmer's dollar, based on the price of some of his products as of May 31, 1921. These are products, too, upon which you placed a high protective tariff in your emergency tariff bill. Did it help? Did it bring the relief that you prophesied? Let us see. On the basis of the five-year average before the war, taking 100 as a basis, we find the purchasing value of the farmer's dollar based on corn was 59 cents. If we could take the purchasing value of the farmer's dollar based on the present-day price of corn and without a five-year average, I doubt if it would be 20 cents. On the same basis, the purchasing value of the farmer's dollar, based on oats, on May 31, 1921, was 57 cents; on wheat, 78 cents; on barley, 48 cents; on flaxseed, 45 cents. That is what the purchasing value of the farmer's dollar was when he sold and converted his products into dollars. On beans, 78 cents; broom corn, 42 cents; cotton, 48 cents; cotton seed, 68 cents; cabbage, 64 cents; potatoes, 62 cents; horses, 43 cents; hogs—the purchasing value of the farmer's dollar when he converted his hogs was only 67 cents; sheep—may I say to the distinguished junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. STANFIELD], who sits before me and who honors me with his attention; that notwithstanding the emergency tariff bill, if he had converted his sheep into dollars on May 31, 1921, they would have been worth only 63 cents on the dollar.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President, may I inquire as of what date?

Mr. HARRISON. I am glad that sheep brought the Senator to his feet. This is as of May 31, 1921.

Mr. BURSUM. As compared with what date?

Mr. HARRISON. This is compared with 1913.

Mr. BURSUM. I should like to advise the Senator that sheep to-day are worth as much and more than they were in 1913.

Mr. HARRISON. Sheep have gone up some within recent months.

Mr. BURSUM. They have gone up nearly 100 per cent, and wool has gone up 50 per cent.

Mr. HARRISON. Since May 31 of last year, 1921?

Mr. BURSUM. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. I am giving the figure as of May of last year.

Mr. BURSUM. That was due to Republican tariff legislation.

Mr. HARRISON. Does the Senator think the emergency tariff did that?

Mr. BURSUM. It helped very materially, on wool especially. There is no doubt of that.

Mr. HARRISON. We passed the emergency tariff bill some 12 months ago. When did sheep begin to go up in price?

Mr. BURSUM. The tariff bill was vetoed at that time, was it not? The emergency tariff, as I recall, was passed the latter part of April.

Mr. HARRISON. It will be a year next April when it passed.

Mr. BURSUM. At that time we had a very large surplus of wool, which had been brought in from all over the world. It was necessary, of course, for some time to elapse before that wool could be absorbed in the country; but on account of the tariff act the importations ceased. At the time the tariff bill was passed the Senator will recall that there was an attempt made on the floor of the Senate to place an amendment on the bill which would exempt certain wools which had been contracted for prior to the passage of the act. That involved, I think, several million pounds of wool. The amendment, however, was not agreed to.

During these several months the surplus of wool has been largely absorbed and the price has advanced. This advance is due to two causes—one the tariff, which is absolutely indispensable, and the other the large advances which have been made by the War Finance Corporation as a result of the passage of the War Finance Corporation act. Due to those reasons, wool is now at a fair price, quotable from 90 cents to $1, and is advancing. The price of lambs has gone up from 6 cents to 12 cents.

Mr. HARRISON. What is the price of raw wool to-day?

Mr. BURSUM. On the scoured-pound basis the best Territorial wool is quotable at a dollar a pound.

Mr. HARRISON. What was it on May 31 last?

Mr. BURSUM. It was about 60 cents.

Mr. HARRISON. What is unwashed wool worth?

Mr. BURSUM. The basis of the value of wool all depends upon the amount of clean content. If a scoured pound of wool is worth $1, in the unwashed or raw condition you will have, say, 70 per cent of grease and dirt, and, of course, then there is just 30 pounds of clean content in a hundred pounds of wool which is worth at the rate of $1 a pound. That would mean 30 cents in the raw state on that basis. I have heard of sales of western wools ranging around 27 cents in the raw condition; but that is altogether dependent upon the amount of the clean content. You are not selling dirt, and you do not sell grease, but you sell clean wool.

Mr. HARRISON. Does the Senator think the price of sheep to-day and the price of wool to-day are fair prices?

Mr. BURSUM. I think the price ought to advance more in order to give the grower a proper and reasonable profit; but it is so much better than it was six months ago that the grower is feeling more hopeful.

Mr. HARRISON. What would the Senator think would be a fair price to-day for sheep and for wool?

Mr. BURSUM. I would say, in view of conditions, ewes ought to bring from $10 to $12 and wool ought to be worth $1.25. It is not that high yet, however.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator means it ought to be that?

Mr. BURSUM. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator heard me read a great number of articles here showing that the value of those products, if turned into dollars, would in some instances be worth only 50 cents.

Mr. BURSUM. Those figures are, of course, entirely erroneous, so far as wool is concerned, when taking the basis used.

Mr. HARRISON. I told the Senator the basis was 1913, and the last figures were compiled as of May 31, 1921. They are the latest we could procure. They were compiled by one of the best experts in the country. The only objection I may have to him is that he happened to be a Republican and the Republican adviser to the Republican national campaign committee in the last election. He is a very splendid gentleman and thoroughly competent.

Mr. BURSUM. I have no doubt the statistics were correct at the time they were made, but they are not up to date. There have been a great many changes since.

Mr. HARRISON. So that there has been a change, so far as sheep and wool were concerned, since May 31 of last year?

Mr. BURSUM. Yes, sir; a very decided change.

Mr. HARRISON. But the price is not yet high enough?

Mr. BURSUM. No; it is not quite high enough.

Mr. HARRISON. And the farmer is entitled to a still greater price?

Mr. BURSUM. I think so, and I think we shall get more.

Mr. HARRISON. Then the Senator and myself are both working sympathetically for the farmer; that is why I rose to speak.

Mr. BURSUM. I am sure if we are given the same degree of protection that we have in the emergency tariff law, so far as wool is concerned, that we shall get a higher price for that commodity.

Mr. HARRISON. That is a pretty high protection; that is about three times as much as was carried in the Payne-Aldrich bill; and the Senator knows, does he not, what happened to the Republican Party for passing that legislation?

Mr. BURSUM. No; the protection is not three times as much as that carried in the Payne-Aldrich bill.

Mr. HARRISON. The people rose in revolt and defeated Mr. Taft, the then Republican President, because of the passage of schedule K of the Payne-Aldrich tariff law.

Mr. BURSUM. The defeat of Mr. Taft was not occasioned by the adoption of the wool schedule.

As a matter of fact, the Payne-Aldrich bill gave a much less protection than the tariff law which we have at present. Under the Payne-Aldrich law there was an opportunity for foreigners to ship in wool and avoid a large part of what was supposed to be the protection which the wool growers received.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, if the Senator from Mississippi will permit me, I think I ought to observe in passing that the great contributing factor to the defeat of Mr. Taft can hardly be claimed as having been that which the Senator indicates, for he will remember that, with the support largely of the Democratic Party, Congress passed a reciprocity tariff with Canada which was supposed to be the heart's desire and object of the great effort of Canada. On the other hand, Canada spewed the treaty out with great vehemence and defeated the proposition by a tremendous vote, to the detriment, of course, of those who initiated the legislation both here and in Canada.

Mr. HARRISON. I shall not be drawn into a discussion of the Canadian reciprocity treaty. That was one time when President Taft was right, however. But I am sure that the Senator from Wyoming is in entire sympathy with the remarks I am making, so far as the value of the farmer's dollar is concerned, and as to it being much less than the value of the manufacturer's dollar or that charged for transportation, as I shall show; and that is what I rose to speak upon.

Mr. WARREN. And more especially, while the Senator is upon the point as to the cost of labor, I wish to suggest that, of course, we have to pay in carrying on a farm a dollar and a dollar and a quarter an hour for the labor of those who formerly received but 50 and 60 cents.

While I do not wish to make any comment in reference to the figures offered by the Senator from New Mexico, yet if the Senator will go back to the first of May, 1914, and then take the price of wool a year ago, he will find that wool simply went out of the market; it was impossible to sell wool, so far as the growers were concerned, and the banks would advance on it only 10 cents per pound.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator will remember that the price has somewhat increased. I presume the Senator must have a little later report than I have, although I have the figures for a week ago in my office as to the price of the wool, both in the grease and scoured wool of all classes. The price has appreciated. That appreciation has been due to some extent to the revival of business; but more especially because quantity of undigested stock on hand after the war, of which the Government owned about a year's supply, or 500,000,000 pounds, has to some extent been consumed. However, it does not pay today to raise sheep, either for wool or mutton, under the prices we are now getting and under the expense incident to their production.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President——

Mr. HARRISON. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LENROOT. I should like to ask the Senator whether he believes the present rate upon wool in the emergency tariff bill affects the price of wool?

Mr. HARRISON. Of course, the Senator from Wisconsin knows my views on the tariff question.

Mr. LENROOT. Yes; but I am asking an economic question.

Mr. HARRISON. There are many propositions which enter into the question of the present price of wool. There were piled up here in the warehouses under the supervision of the War Trade Board, as we were told at the time, millions of pounds of wool, which would be kept off the market because there was no sale for that wool. Under those circumstances wool acted in large degree as cotton acted, for there were no markets abroad for cotton and we could not sell it. There was also no market here for it to any great extent. So the price of cotton greatly declined.

Of course, if the high protection which is placed on wool in the emergency tariff law kept wool from coming into this country and there were a market here for the wool which was on hand, that emergency tariff law would have influenced the price of wool to a more or less degree. However, I am against that in principle. Even if a wall of protection would keep cotton out of this country and might increase its price, although my people raise cotton, I would not favor such a policy, for I think it is a selfish and indefensible one. It is wrong in principle to rob one set of people in order to take the money and put it into somebody else's pocket.

Mr. LENROOT. I assumed that was the Senator's view, but does he now say, in view of his statement with reference to the purchasing power of the farmer's dollar—and I am in full accord with him in that respect—that it would be robbing the people to enable the farmer to get a fair price for the wool which he raises?

Mr. HARRISON. Of course, I am against invoking any principle which through unfair and illegal means brings joy to one but sorrow to another, and I am not going to indorse larceny in order to help the farmers or anybody else in the world. There are too many fair and equitable ways to accomplish the purpose.

Mr. LENROOT. How could it be larceny?

Mr. HARRISON. I would not enter into a conspiracy which I thought advocated a wrong principle in order to save the farmers or any other class of the people.

Mr. LENROOT. How could it be larceny if the farmer is not now getting enough for his wool?

Mr. HARRISON. I will tell the Senator how he could have helped the farmer get enough for his wool, and I will tell him how he could have helped the farmer to get a higher price for his corn and his wheat and his other products. The depreciation in the price of farm products was caused by the Senator and those who conspired with him, marshalled by the leader of the majority in this Chamber, who defeated the treaty for the objects of which our boys fought and won the war. That action disheartened Europe, broke down credits, bankrupted industries, and caused such an industrial and commercial chaos in Europe that destroyed every vestage of hope to the American farmer to again find a market there for his surplus products.

That was the reason why wheat and corn and the farmers' other products declined, and they are going to remain low until you can become wise enough to see that we must have foreign markets; until you can appreciate the necessity of a sympathetic relationship with the world and engage in the solution of international economic problems. When that time comes we can sell our surplus products, and then their price will be increased. Of course, the Senator may smile, and all that; that is all right; but the American people will yet see that the decrease of price of our products was caused by the defeat of the treaty here with the consequent destruction of our markets abroad.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WILLIS in the chair). Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to his colleague?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. May I ask my colleague a question which is somewhat personal in character?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Is my colleague engaged in the task of trying to persuade the Republican Party that a world condition which consists of the fact that foreigners have neither cash nor credit to buy from us can be cured by making all of our products more expensive to them? Is he trying to convince them that they occupy a hopeless and mistaken position?

Mr. HARRISON. I must say to my colleague that I am following vain hopes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If my colleague is trying to convince them of that he is engaged in an impossible undertaking.

Mr. HARRISON. I agree thoroughly with the Senator. They will not be convinced.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It can not be done. It has ever been a prevailing obsession of theirs that the proper way to encourage foreign commerce was to trammel it and obstruct it all that was possible.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, though we may have some doubt as to whether wool in recent months has increased in price and whether or not the tariff has helped the situation in that respect, the Senator from New Mexico and the Senator from Wyoming both say—and I think all will admit—that today the farmer's dollar, even though he raises sheep, is not on a par with the value of the manufacturer's dollar.

Mr. WARREN. I beg the Senator's pardon. I did not say quite that.

Mr. HARRISON. I understood the Senator to go that far.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator had a right to assume that, probably. But the way I put it was that the farmer did not receive in return a sufficient amount to meet the expenses of running his business. Some manufacturers, I fear, are also losing money, while others are making money, but I would not like to institute a comparison along that line. I do say, however, with all frankness, that sheep growing and wool production to-day are being carried on at a loss.

Mr. HARRISON. I have read figures from the report of the commission showing that during the time when the products raised upon the farm were decreasing two or three times in value, the manufacturer of shoes was continually increasing his price, and that clothing was decreasing in price but very little.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. HARRIS. I was very much interested in the remarks of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BURSUM] to the effect that the price of wool had been helped by the tariff duty and also by the reestablishment of the War Finance Corporation. It is admitted, I think, that in their economic aspects cotton and wool are more nearly alike, perhaps, than any other two commodities; they are both used in the manufacture of clothing. There is no tariff on cotton; but I know that the price of cotton has been helped considerably by reason of the War Finance Corporation being reestablished. I wish to ask the Senator from Mississippi whether there has been a greater increase in the price of cotton or of wool since the compilation of the figures from which he has quoted? One commodity has a tariff on it, while the other has not.

Mr. HARRISON. I think the price of cotton has increased considerably since those figures were compiled. The latest figures from which I have quoted were compiled on May 31. I have forgotten what the price of cotton was at that time, but cotton is now around 18 cents a pound, I think.

Mr. HARRIS. What I was trying to get at was whether cotton or wool had advanced more in price.

Mr. HEFLIN. Cotton has increased about 9½ cents a pound.

Mr. HARRISON. I think the price of cotton has increased in proportion to the increase in the price of wool, although there was no tariff on one commodity, while there was on the other.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, if the Senator comes to that conclusion, then, he must necessarily conclude, must he not, that the tariff upon wool has not increased the price of wool?

Mr. HARRISON. I have stated in answer to a question that there were many things that enter into the consideration of that question.

Mr. LENROOT. I understand that; but I am asking the question of the Senator now, if he concludes that the price of cotton has increased proportionately to that of wool, must not the conclusion follow that he does not think the tariff upon wool has affected its price?

Mr. HARRISON. I do not know whether or not the tariff on wool has kept any wool out of this country. I suppose the Senator would say that it has; but I do not know whether it has or not. I know that what has increased the price of cotton has been that we have been able to sell abroad some of the surplus cotton which we had on hand.

Mr. STANFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. STANFIELD. For the enlightenment of the Senator from Georgia, in connection with the comparison that he drew, I should like to state that wool could be brought into the United States to-day from foreign countries at an advance of about 15 per cent of what it was bringing in May last, whereas the market here for wool has increased between 50 and 60 per cent since that time. So it is only logical to assume that if it had not been for the tariff or some other agency, aside from the world's market conditions, wool would be coming in here to-day and would be sold in America at an advance of about 15 per cent. That condition does not apply to cotton, because cotton is not imported, of course, into the country except in the case of long-staple cotton.

Mr. HARRIS. I was trying to ascertain how much the War Finance Corporation had aided conditions in the country. I think it has aided a great deal, and I think we are indebted to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] for assisting so admirably in bringing about the passage of the act restoring that corporation.

It will be recalled that an effort was made to have Congress take a long recess, and on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] to that effect the vote was 24 to 27, so that a change of two votes would have involved a practical adjournment of Congress without enacting that legislation, which, I think, has been of great benefit to this country.

Mr. HARRISON. Now, Mr. President, the average reward per farmer for labor, risk, and management—and I hope Senators will pay attention to these figures, for they are correct and they are as startling as they are correct—the average reward per farmer for labor, risk, and management, after allowing 5 per cent return on the value of his investment in 1909, was $311; in 1918 it rose to $1,278; in 1920 it was only $465, showing a drop of three times less than what it was in almost 12 months.

Measured in terms of purchasing power, the farmers' reward in 1909 was $326, in 1918 it was $826, and in 1920 it had dropped to $219.

Now let us take some other industries.

The average reward for employees in the mining industry in 1909 was $590; in 1918 it was $1,280. Measured in purchasing power, it was $618 in 1909 and $808 in 1918. The average yearly earning of employees in railway transportation in 1909 was $773 and in 1918, $1,532. Measured in terms of purchasing power, the earning of employees in railroad transportation was $682 in 1909 and $882 in 1918. If a farmer in 1918 had been employed in the mining industry, he would have received a wage of $1,280, or about what he received for labor, risk, and management on the farm. Had he worked as an employee of a railway or of a bank, and obtained the average wages of an employee in either industry, he would have received more for his labor than he received for risk, management, and labor in 1918 on the farm.

Mr. President, these startling figures show that the man who engages in agriculture, combatting the weather, the climate, vermin, and insects of every kind, does not earn on the average any more than the man who invests no capital whatever and assumes no risk, but who merely goes out and works for a daily wage. I know of no business that you can not insure against losses, except that on the farm. They have never come to that yet. Insurance companies never have been formed to insure farm products against weather conditions, climatic conditions, vermin, and insects. I noted the other day that the motion-picture magnates who have snatched Will Hays from the Postmaster General's office and have offered him $150,000 a year, for which I see he has signed a contract, and whose services the country will lose but the motion-picture industry will obtain, were so fearful that something might happen to this "prize box" that they are going to insure his life for $2,000,000.

Yes; you can get an insurance policy upon the life of Will Hays for $2,000,000 so that the morals and deportment of the motion-picture industry will not suffer. You can insure your automobile against burglars or fires or accidents. You can insure your home or yourself against accident, fire, or storm. There are all kinds of insurance now; but the company has not yet been formed, because they know they can not succeed at it, that will write insurance to the farmer to guarantee a reasonable income from the results of his labors. Yet, with the value of his dollar depreciated to 67 cents while he sees the value of the manufacturer's dollar increased, because, forsooth, the representatives of the farming interests meet and confer and try to arrange a program that might be beneficial to them, the President of the United States lifts his hand and brings the power of his office against it in order to dissolve it and destroy it!

Mr. President, they have called a conference on agriculture for Monday. The new order of things is to confer, to hold conferences. We have heard much of the "meeting of the best minds" and have seen little good flowing from the meetings. What the American people want is less conferring and more action.

I read with delight the other night that a great love feast was given to the new Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PEPPER]. All of the Pennsylvania delegation were there. They dined and they feasted. They glowingly prophesied for him a great future. His colleagues all hope for him a great future.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. HARRISON. Just one moment; let me finish this.

Mr. BURSUM. I simply wanted to make a very short statement to the Senate.

Mr. HARRISON. All right; I will wait.

Mr. BURSUM. I was delighted to hear the Senator refer to the fact that what the people require and want and desire is action.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. BURSUM. I was wondering if the Senator would not agree that the same program should be carried out here in the Senate.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; that is what we are trying to get you to do.

Mr. BURSUM. Why can we not have less talk and more action?

Mr. HARRISON. Our talking is better than your inaction, and until you do act we are going to point out some things about you and your administration. I will tell you, before I finish, something that you can do, and it is founded upon thorough investigation and full consideration, where you can get to work immediately and take action. There will need be little talking about it. You will not have to confer for weeks or for months up here in a conference. You will not have to call in the "best minds" so that you can get a thought and transmit it to the Congress. It is found here in about 14 recommendations of the commission that for months have been studying the agricultural problems.

But, Mr. President, I was talking about this great feast that was extended to the new Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PEPPER]; and I am glad that the governor of Pennsylvania was humorous and wise enough to send down here a man by that name. It is so natural and very opportune that something to wake you up should enter this Chamber. May he put a move on you. I tell you, as one who respects the history of the Republican Party, that the country is thoroughly disgusted with your do-nothing policy and your no-program arrangement here.

While this feast was on and eulogies were pronounced upon the new Senator, and some of those present, including the Republican leader on the other side of the Capitol [Mr. MONDELL], told about the great accomplishments of the administration, there was one guest there, a smart fellow, an able lawyer, who sensed the situation in this country and spoke words of wisdom to you. Here is what he said. I read from the Times:

> A warning by Congressman GRAHAM, of Philadelphia, the Pennsylvania member of the Republican congressional campaign committee, that the American people are expecting action and not words from the Republican Party upset a dinner given here last night by Congressman WILLIAM S. VARE.
> Among other things, he said:
> I may not be accused of wide dissention if I were to suggest the amount of discontent and unrest which prevails not only in our own State but in every State with respect to the accomplishments of the party.

Mr. President, I have said about all that I desire to say; but you will hear from the great Middle West as well as other agricultural sections if you do not do something, and do it very quickly. Conferences may be all right, but this commission investigating agricultural conditions has been meeting for weeks. It has been meeting for months. The head of every farm organization in the country was invited to come before it. Every avenue of approach through which we might obtain information was traveled, and we got all the information that it seemed to us it was possible to get. A report has been made, and it contains 13 recommendations.

Here they are:

The commission recommends:

(1) That the Federal Government affirmatively legalize the cooperative combination of farmers for the purpose of marketing, grading, sorting, processing, or distributing their products.

(2) That the farmer's requirements for credit corresponding to his turnover and having maturity of from six months to three years, which will enable payment to be made from the proceeds of the farm, be met by an adaptation of the present banking system of the country, which will enable it to furnish credit of this character. It is expected that a concrete proposal to carry out this recommendation will be made in part 2 of this report.

(3) That there should be a warehousing system which will provide a uniform liability on the part of the warehousemen and in which the moral and financial hazards are fully insured. To this end the commission suggests the extension of the existing Federal warehouse law and the passage by the several States of uniform laws regulating the liability of warehousemen and the services rendered by them.

(4) The commission believes that an immediate reduction of freight rates on farm products is absolutely necessary to a renewal of normal agricultural operations and prosperity, and recommends prompt action by the railroads and constituted public authority to that end.

(5) That there should be an extension of the statistical divisions of the Department of Agriculture, particularly along the lines of procurement of live-stock statistics.

(6) That provision should be made by Congress for agricultural attachés in the principal foreign countries producing and consuming agricultural products.

(7) The development by trade associations and by State and Federal sanction of more accurate, uniform, and practical grades of agricultural products and standards of containers for the same.

(8) That adequate Federal appropriations should be made for the promotion of better book and record keeping of the cost of production of farm products on the basis of the farm-plant unit as a basis for the development of more efficient methods of farm management.

(9) Provision for an extended and coordinated program of a practical and scientific investigation through State and National departments of agriculture and through agricultural colleges and universities directed toward reducing the hazards of climate and weather conditions and of plant and animal diseases and insect pests.

(10) More adequate wholesale terminal facilities, particularly for handling perishables at primary markets, and a more thorough organization of the agencies and facilities of distribution of the large consuming centers of the country.

(11) The development of better roads to local markets, joint facilities at terminals connecting rail, water, and motor transport systems, and more adequate facilities at shipping points, with a view to reducing the cost of marketing and distribution.

(12) That greater effort be directed to the improvement of community life.

(13) The renewal of conditions of confidence and industrial as well as agricultural prosperity is dependent upon a readjustment of prices for commodities to the end that prices received for commodities will represent a fair division of the economic rewards of industry, risk, management, and investment of capital. These conditions can not be brought about by legislative formulas, but must be the result for the most part of the interplay of economic forces. The Government and the States within their respective spheres should do by legislative and administrative action what it may be possible to do, based upon sound principles to facilitate this readjustment.

Mr. President, can more information be gathered by this conference which is to meet on Monday? I wish for it every success, but in my heart I believe that its calling is a piece of camouflage. When the President came to the Congress and spoke against the agricultural bloc he felt the reaction from the agricultural interests of the country; and when the Secretary of War, speaking for him in New York, inveighed more bitterly against the agricultural group the reaction was still greater; and in order to get from under he called the meeting of this conference on agriculture to meet in the city of Washington. I wish for it success; but what that conference will do will be to accept the recommendations of the Joint Commission of Agricultural Inquiry, and they will pass resolutions to you, who control legislation in this body, and ask you for its immediate passage.

The cooperative marketing bill, for example, has been on the Calendar for months—I might say for years—and up to this good day and good hour it has not passed. What we need, Senators, is to report these bills out of the committees and to pass them. I care not how many conferences you have, unless Congress gets busy along that line, and unless the President urges the necessary legislation upon you and exercises every influence that he can, he will get nothing. It will be a good deal like the unemployment conference that was called here. They discovered that there were six or seven million men out of employment in this country, but accomplished nothing and got nowhere with their recommendations. Let us stop conferring, and let us begin to act.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator has referred to the report of the commission of which he and I are both members, and to the report it has made. Those recommendations were unanimous, were they not?

Mr. HARRISON. They were.

Mr. LENROOT. I want to ask the Senator whether at any time during the many months we have been engaged in that work there was any partisanship whatever displayed?

Mr. HARRISON. Not a particle.

Mr. LENROOT. Did not the Senator find the Republicans just as anxious and just as eager to find remedies for existing conditions as the Democratic members?

Mr. HARRISON. Absolutely; but the members on that commission, if not members of the agricultural group, were in thorough sympathy with their movements. In that commission we acted beautifully, we got all the information possible, and here are the recommendations. Congress should take them and pass them, and we on this side will certainly cooperate to the limit.

Mr. HEFLIN. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. HEFLIN. The Senator from Wisconsin is from a large agricultural State, and his people are in distress, are they not, as our people are? It is therefore to be expected he would be in hearty sympathy with a movement of this sort, is it not?

Mr. HARRISON. Certainly. But the Senator from Wisconsin is not in sympathy with the warfare being waged by President Harding and Secretary of War Weeks against the agricultural group. It is that warfare which has caused me to speak to-day, and about which the farmers of the country are so much interested.

REMOVAL OF INGWALD C. THORESEN.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, some time ago the President removed Mr. Ingwald C. Thoresen as surveyor general of Utah, one of the most efficient and intelligent officers there ever was in the public service. Some time later the New York papers published the letter written to Mr. Thoresen by the President of the United States and Mr. Thoresen's reply. I have received three letters from various parts of the United States questioning the authenticity of the reported letter of President Harding removing Mr. Thoresen. In view of the professions that are being made by some of the Republicans of the nonpartisan administration of President Harding in some of the departments and of their devotion and efficiency, and in view of the letters which I have received questioning the authenticity of the letter written by the President, I desire to have the letter, a photographic copy of which I have before me, placed in the RECORD, together with Mr. Thoresen's reply.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The letters are as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, September 3, 1921.

MR. INGWALD C. THORESEN,
Surveyor General, Salt Lake City, Utah.

MY DEAR SIR: Those of us who are responsible for the activities of the new administration never like to do anything in an inconsiderate way. We are anxious to have men in positions of responsibility who are in full sympathy with the purposes and plans of the administration. I need not tell you of the current demand for the recognition of aspirants within our party for consideration in the matter of patronage. I take you to be a practical man who knows of these developments with a sweeping change in national administrations. Under all these circumstances I would very much like to make a new appointment in the office which you occupy. In all courtesy, I would infinitely prefer to have you recognize the situation and make your resignation available. I am writing this letter in a kindly spirit to express a request that you recognize the situation and let me deal with the situation as you would probably wish to do if our positions were reversed.

Very truly, yours,

WARREN G. HARDING.

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH, September 9, 1921.

MR. PRESIDENT: The receipt of your courteous, considerate, and outspoken letter of the 3d instant is very greatly appreciated, and especially so in comparison with the short, formal note of the Acting Secretary of the Interior, requesting my resignation.

I also appreciate your very proper anxiety "To have men in positions of responsibility who are in full sympathy with the progress and plans of the administration." However, I can not understand how the plans and policies of the administration can in any way change or modify the formal duties of a surveyor general. The surveys of the public lands under the specific directions and appropriations by acts of Congress, making and approving plats and field notes thereof, and paying the expenses incurred thereby, are the sole duties of said office. Every employee therein is in the civil service. No material changes have or can be made therein by any administration.

Were this service affected by foreign policies or even domestic conditions I would admit the consistency for a change, but in face of the facts I can not do so. If, however, any minor changes in the administration of the duties of the office for its improvement are desired by the department, I am ready and willing to assist in their introduction, as I am an interested citizen of our glorious country much more than a partisan Democrat. I am in full and complete sympathy with every move for economy and efficiency in the public service. As proof thereof I respectfully submit herewith copies of recent letters to the department and office employees. I also offer the entire record of my administration in this and other public offices I have held as proof of my integrity in serving the public efficientiy and the economical and strict expenditure of public funds. The greatest good to the greatest number, irrespective of political, social, or religious affiliations, is my creed.

It is publicly well known that, "The current demand for the recognition of aspirants within our (the Republican) party for consideration in the matter of patronage" is exceedingly intense, apparently much more so than ever before in the history of our country. But should all precedents of the past be set aside to pacify this partisan and selfish clamour? All of my predecessors have been permitted to serve their full terms, most of them more, the last served two full terms and six months—13 months after President Wilson's inauguration. It therefore appears to me that I am the first and only person in the public service under an appointment for a specific term, past or present, who has been requested to resign without being accused of any definite failure or neglect of duty. This matter has the appearance of personal spite or extreme radical political prejudice or greed, and I would be very sorry indeed, should you lend the powers of your great office—the greatest in all the world—for the success of such motives.

It is not for the purpose of holding this office a few more months that I dislike to resign, but as a matter of honor, principle, and precedent. During my incumbency I have given the duties of the office my entire time and the very best experienced efforts at my command. I was a surveyor many years prior to my appointment. I know the public and all persons acquainted with my services duly appreciate the same and the numerous improvements I have inaugurated. I have faithfully observed and enforced the laws, rules, and regulations governing the work and am willing to continue doing so until the term for which I was appointed and have given bonds, expires.

I have lived in Utah for nearly 60 years and my friends and relatives here are a legion and for their sakes as well as for my own sake, I desire to maintain my good name and standing which I consider I can not do if I resign this office without good reasons made public and a general ousting of all other Democratic officeholders. It would certainly be considered a blemish upon my character and integrity and I therefore can not consistently comply with your courteous appeal.

Yours, very respectfully,

I. C. THORESEN,
United States Surveyor General, Utah.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR.
OFFICE UNITED STATES SURVEYOR GENERAL, UTAH,
Salt Lake City, Utah, July 9, 1921.

OFFICE EMPLOYEES:

The regulation issued March 23, 1921, placed "each employee upon his or her personal honor to correctly and punctually record their own time"; under instructions that all employees enter on the official time report in charge of Mr. Crow, timekeeper, the exact time each begins official service, mornings and afternoons. If such entry is after 9 a. m. or 1 p. m., sign a tardy slip, giving time late and reason, and enter exact time in red ink on report.

The department regulation provides that: "Time not actually entered will be counted against leave." This will be done after July 15, 1921, and I therefore hope that this regulation be better observed hereafter and your leave saved.

Official time spent on private business in the office or elsewhere must be secured by formal leave cards for days and fourteenths thereof before leave begins, except in case of sickness, when daily reports must be made to me and leave card presented upon return to work. No verbal request for leave can be granted to anyone or by anyone. Don't ask for it.

The time you give or record on time report, which should be seven hours each day and four hours Saturdays, must be spent entirely in official duties, and the morning and afternoon private conversations must cease.

Inclosed please find a blank "employment record," which please fill and return to me at your earliest convenience, as this information is often required.

Yours, respectfully,

I. C. THORESEN,
United States Surveyor General, Utah.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9724) making appropriations for the Treasury Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the committee on page 54, line 14, increasing the appropriation for general expenses of public buildings from $424,600 to $442,100.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, the amendment made by the committee striking out the assistant assayer at three or four of the different assay offices has been rejected by the Senate. I think those amendments were made largely on the theory of putting these small offices on the same footing. The House left out the assistant assayer at Carson City and at Salt Lake, and I think if we restore them in the other cases we ought to put in assistant assayers at those two points, and I express the hope that next year we will possibly be able to do away with several of these smaller offices, unless, of course, the needs of the country should show that they ought to be kept in.

So, Mr. President, I offer the following amendment, really embodying two amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WILLIS in the chair). The Secretary will state the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 40, at the end of line 23, change the period to a semicolon and add the words:

Assistant assayer, $1,200.

On page 44, at the end of line 17, change the period to a semicolon and add the words:

Assistant assayer, $1,200.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I suppose these places were left out because they were not needed?

Mr. WARREN. In a conference where there was a very bitter fight they were left out, and there was a presumption then that they would have to be put in after a time. They are small matters. The old men in those places are getting pretty infirm—they have been there for a long time—and it is considered entirely proper that we should give them the places for at least another year.

Mr. NORRIS. Then the amendment is really not offered because it is necessary for the Government business, but to give a couple of fellows another year's salary because they have been in service for a good while?

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the Senator has no right to make that statement.

Mr. NORRIS. I judged that, I will say to the Senator, from his own statement. If I am wrong about it, I would like to have the Senator correct me.

Mr. WARREN. Let me explain. If the Senator found himself ill and badly crippled up and interested in this business, he would like to have it go along, and he would like to have an assistant to help him carry it along. Those officers have had those assistant assayers, and they were cut off at an inopportune time owing to a difference here. It is a fact that those men are needed there for this purpose, and if we should undertake to throw out the men who occupy the places and put others in, it would cost us more, because the assayer, for instance, at $1,800, the Senator well recognizes, is not employed at a high figure. That is a figure at which you would hardly be able to get an experienced, thoroughly well, able-bodied assayer. In fact, the two together, assayer and assistant, draw only $3,000.

Mr. NORRIS. My question, I think, is still unanswered. What is the necessity of having these men there? It is undoubtedly like the old pension method, where we had a pension agent in nearly every State and nearly every city. Here we have some fellows as assayers scattered around whom the House thought best to eliminate, because, I assume, they were thought unnecessary. If it can be shown that these are necessary for the transaction of Government business, then I am for the amendment; but when it is argued that we ought to prevent these offices from being longer maintained, it is said these fellows are old in the service, are poor, they have been sick, and they would lose the salary if you cut them off, and it is an inopportune time to do it now.

I thought it was an opportune time. Have we not said to the country, and have we not been claiming all the time to the country, that we were going to economize, and in following up that claim and that promise we are attempting to carry men on the pay roll of the United States simply because they need the salary, and it would be inopportune to discharge them at the present time. If that is the economy that is coming, then we will never get anywhere with our program.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator will not ascribe that meaning to me.

Mr. NORRIS. I have not ascribed it to the Senator, but he can put the shoe on if it fits him. I have not ascribed it to anybody. I do not know why the Senator takes it to himself.

Mr. WARREN. When the Senator says they are put on for that purpose, he assumes, of course, that the mover or the supporter of it must mean it for that purpose. Let me say to the Senator that it is true that a large part of the new mineral, where it comes from large companies, goes to the large eastern institutions for assay, but it has been of great benefit to this country that we have hardy prospectors, pioneer men, who are willing to go into the mountains and hunt for metal, simply being furnished, if they had money enough of their own, with bacon and flour. If they have not, there is generally somebody in the towns ready to "grubstake" them. When they find a metal which they believe is important, and which indicates a gold mine or a silver mine, to take their little budget all the way to Philadelphia or New York and wait for the return would be a hardship to those men. This assay office is doing a great deal of service. It is to accommodate those who need it, who can not well do without it, and the benefit of it accrues in the long run to the general public and the Nation.

Mr. NORRIS. Where is the nearest assay office now to Salt Lake City?

Mr. WARREN. The one we are talking about is in Salt Lake City.

Mr. NORRIS. I know that. That is the one you are trying to put in. It does not seem to be there now.

Mr. WARREN. No; we are not trying to put anything in.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator has made an argument in favor of it, as I understand.

Mr. OVERMAN. Does the amendment provide for the assistant assayer or the assayer?

Mr. WARREN. For the assistant assayer.

Mr. NORRIS. Has he been out for a year?

Mr. WARREN. He has been out for one year. Formerly that office had more employees, and they drew higher salaries. It has been cut down from time to time, with the idea of economy, which the Senator always joins us in trying to effect.

Mr. NORRIS. What have the poor miners, with their little budgets over their shoulders, who have come in sick and sore, and with gold and a lot of stuff gotten up in the mountains, been doing? Have they been carrying it to New York during the last year, as the Senator said they would have to do if this were not put in?

Mr. WARREN. This is to provide somebody to take care of that.

Mr. NORRIS. The last year there has been nobody to take care of it. What have they done?

Mr. WARREN. They have probably managed to take care of the most of it.

Mr. NORRIS. Where?

Mr. WARREN. At the office.

Mr. NORRIS. Without an assayer and without an assistant?

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, it is difficult for me, unless the Senator will read what is before him, to explain what we are talking about. We have an office there and an assayer. Formerly there was an assistant assayer and certain workmen; that is, there was a certain amount appropriated to hire workmen. There is an assay office which has been maintained there for many years.

Mr. NORRIS. And it is there now?

Mr. WARREN. It is there now.

Mr. NORRIS. Has it an assayer now?

Mr. WARREN. It has an assayer.

Mr. NORRIS. That is already in the bill?

Mr. WARREN. It is already in the bill.

Mr. NORRIS. This amendment simply is to employ another assistant whom they do not have now?

Mr. WARREN. It is to employ a man at $1,200, and the man is called an assistant assayer, because he is one of those who has heretofore been an assistant in that work, and knows something of it.

Mr. NORRIS. Let us take up the Senator's argument. In the first place, the Senator says he is not asking that this go in. I took it that his argument was intended to be an argument in favor of putting it in.

Mr. WARREN. It should go in.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator said a little while ago that if it did not go in, these poor miners, who had been out in the hills and the gulleys, suffering all kinds of trouble, mining and prospecting, with a bandanna handkerchief strung over their shoulders with what they had found, would have to go to Philadelphia or New York or Boston, or some other place, to have their hard-earned stuff assayed.

The Senator says, when a little further inquiry is made, there is now an assayer at Salt Lake City. He is there now. He has been there. They have not been going to New York with their little handkerchiefs, with some rocks tied up in them, over their shoulders. They have not been going to Philadelphia or San Francisco. They have been going right to Salt Lake City, and they are going there now, and still they have not this assistant assayer, whom this amendment would put in.

Is it not terrible, is it not awful, that without this amendment these fellows would all have to travel across the continent to get their stuff assayed, and that now they stop in Salt Lake City and have it assayed? Of course, I am not able to solve these deep questions, but the question arises in my mind, if we do not adopt this amendment why can they not take it to Salt Lake City next year, just as they do this year?

The Senator said he could not get it into my head. Of course, I am not to blame because my early education was sadly neglected. It may be there is something the matter with the Senator, or he could make it plain to an ordinary individual, such as I am, and such as some of these other Senators are, too.

It has developed, I think, that this office is unnecessary. It is a mighty small thing, I admit; it is a trifle, but trifles, when you get enough of them put together, make perfection, and perfection is no trifle.

Economy in the little things in the aggregate means economy in the great things. The Senator says it is not an opportune time to take these men off the pay roll now, and it develops they have been off the pay roll for a year and are trying to get back on.

Why, Mr. President, should we add to the expense by adding additional officers? Why should we add to the expense at a time when everybody is crying economy by adding on more offices?

I want to say to the Senate that this amendment will not be agreed to, unless some reason can be given why it should be agreed to, without a quorum of the Senate, and you had better send out word, because you will not get it through to-night, little as it is, unless some one will explain why it is that we ought to add these trifling offices in this appropriation bill for any other reason than to give somebody a job. They were cut out last year. Was it because they were of a different political faith that we cut them out? Are we going to get the jobs back in now and get somebody else? It is simply to give an office to somebody, as I see it. I may be wrong. I am willing to be convinced, but I am not going to see it done with half a dozen Senators present unless I am convinced.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, we have consumed considerable time discussing a little office that would cost the Government $1,200. I do not know whether this office is necessary or not. I desire to call the attention of the Senate again to the fact that the New York Federal Reserve Bank officials, with the approval of the discredited Federal Reserve Board in Washington, are constructing a Federal bank building in New York City at a cost of more than $20,000,000. This amount, as I have said before, and I want Senators who are present to hear it stated again, is more than the Capitol Building of the Nation cost; more than the House Office Building, a marble building, cost; more than the Senate Office Building, made of marble, cost; more than all three of those buildings together cost; more than the State, War, and Navy Building in this city cost; more than all four of them cost. They are expending, or have set out to expend, or have provided that amount of money to be handled through what they call a plan to construct this bank building in the city of New York, twenty-odd million dollars.

John Skelton Williams, former Comptroller of the Currency, a man whose integrity nobody questions, has just been to New York and has seen this place where they are going to build this bank building. They have not proceeded very far with it. There is a great hole in the ground, probably 20 or 30 feet deep, where they are just commencing to lay a foundation. He said to me, "I would be willing to guarantee to that bank in New York and the bank in Chicago quarters in which to run the business of both banks. I could do it and save the expenditure of about $20,000,000."

While the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BURSUM] is suggesting that we get action, I submit that situation should call for immediate action upon the part of the President, and he should call upon the Federal Reserve Board to stop the construction of that building. They have already, I understand, issued an order to stop the construction of similar buildings in other cities of the country. Why not stop this one in New York? Why stop the others and let this concern in New York put twenty-odd million dollars in a banking palace, with swimming pools, and gymnasium equipment, and all those things for employees, about 3,000 in number?

In that connection I understand that the First National Bank of New York lends more money than the Federal Reserve Bank, and that it has about 100 employees. The Federal Reserve Bank lends less than that bank and has over 3,000 employees. Why are those men kept on the pay roll at enormous salaries? When the war was on and they had to handle Liberty bonds and various other things for the Government they may have been needed, but they are not needed now. There is a situation calling for action. Cut down the number of people who are on that pay roll, who are feasting and fattening upon the money that is wrung out of the distress and misfortune of the people of the South and West. There is the place where action can be had, and properly had. I call upon the other side to ask the President to get busy upon this matter.

I understand also that the annex which has been constructed in New York by this Federal reserve bank has room enough in it to accommodate the whole bank and that they have a whole lot of it rented out. Why should they rent out floor after floor in that building and build another one in order to use this money and to handle this money at a time like this? Beware, Senators, the people are not deceived.

I said before, and I repeat, that I could submit this case to any honest jury in the world and they would say that it looked like crooked business and graft. The idea of putting twenty-odd million dollars into one bank building, costing more than the Capitol, the Senate Office Building, the House Office Building, and the State, War, and Navy Building. The people will not stand for it. The rate of rediscount was raised from 3 to 7 per cent, and they are dragging this money in from the poor, distressed masses of America and then putting it out into a marble temple, a bank building, just one building in New York City. Of course there is graft.

I know that some of the Republican newspapers in New York criticize me for what I have said about this. I will give them ample opportunity to criticize me on and on and on in this matter. When I have them criticizing me I know that I am smiting them hip and thigh, and I am going to keep it up. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] told you the truth. They deflated the stuff in the hands of the farmer with which he had to pay his debts but they did not deflate the debts. He had enough stuff to pay three times over his indebtedness of $5,000, and you deflated it so that it went down to where he could not pay half of the $5,000. You took his substance and left him owing $2,500.

That is the fruit of this deflation policy, and yet we can not get rid of it. The President has the power to get rid of it. We had a district attorney in Texas, and they called on him for his resignation. That is all right. If the President does not like an officer, if he thinks he is not performing his duty, or if he wants to get him out, he can mildly suggest to him, "I would like to have your resignation." But why is it we can not get this Federal Reserve Board removed? Why is it there is such a power back of it in this Government that the Congress has to go a roundabout way and set up another financial agency, the War Finance Corporation, to do business that the Federal Reserve Board used to do under a Democratic administration? What is it that holds this power over the administration, and keeps this board that is so thoroughly discredited and repudiated by every honest business man in America?

I do not blame the Wall Street crowd for patting those on the back who pursue a policy that pours money into their coffers. I do not blame them for fighting me and others who condemn their cowardly and crooked conduct. But when they criticise me I know that I am right. Sometimes we think more of a man for the enemies he has made, as was said once of a President of the United States.

Sometimes honest people admire a public servant more for the enemies that he makes than for the friends that he makes.

I appeal to the Republican Party, which is in the majority in the Senate, to get busy and see if we can not stop the construction of that bank building in New York and save that twenty-odd million dollars.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, the Senate Committee on Appropriations cut out certain items in the House bill providing for assistant assayers at two or three of the small offices throughout the country. The Senate in its wisdom rejected those amendments and restored those items. I felt that those small offices should all be practically on the same basis, and I felt that, the Senate having rendered its judgment with reference to those other small offices, it was nothing more than just and fair that the other two offices, for which the Budget submitted an estimate for an assistant assayer, should have that item put in the bill.

Personally I feel that all of these small assay offices should be abolished. I do not believe that they are really needed, and I would vote for a proposition of that kind. I make this statement so far as I am concerned as a sort of notice for the future. I can see that to strike them out without having any intimation given heretofore might work some hardship, but I do believe we ought to consider very seriously hereafter the abolition of those small offices.

Mr. President, I understand that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] would insist upon calling for a quorum before allowing us to come to a vote on this amendment; therefore I withdraw the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment offered by the Senator from Washington is withdrawn. The bill is still in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator from Wyoming if the item has been reached in regard to the personnel of the Public Health Service?

Mr. WARREN. It has been reached and passed. The bill has been finished, so far as the Committee of the Whole is concerned.

Mr. KING. We have been assured from time to time that there was to be a reorganization of the Public Health Service branch of the Government. It has been the most expensive and extravagant branch of the Government, in proportion to the responsibilities resting upon it, I think, of any branch of the Government. The senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] has stated, and in the utmost good faith, that it was the plan of the administration to effectuate reforms in the Public Health Service and to strip the officials of that service of their military titles and to put it upon a medical basis and medical foundation instead of a military basis.

I should like to ask the chairman of the committee what is being done toward carrying out those promises and statements which were made when the Democrats were in power that as soon as the Republicans obtained control of the Government they would effectuate great reforms in this branch of the service? What is being done by the Republicans to carry out those promises?

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, let me say to the Senator from Utah, when he speaks of changing the Public Health Service from a military status, that is hardly possible now, because during the last administration, to which the Senator alludes as a Democratic administration, many of the officers of this service were carried practically into the Army. They have been given that status for life; they are to receive full pay until they shall have reached the age of 64 years, and then they will be retired with three-fourths pay. That is something we do not feel that we can deal with now, certainly not in an appropriation bill. It would require legislation of a nature that might leave upon us claims of large amounts from every one of such officers.

However, as for the pending appropriation bill, I will give the Senator from Utah some information by way of comparisons between present and former appropriations. Here is an item which last year was $1,060,000, but which is now but $913,000; here is another one which was $160,000, and which was estimated for at $90,000, but which has been reduced to $50,000; here is another item which was $50,000, but which has been reduced to $45,000; here is another item of $5,000 which has been reduced to $3,000. In other words, all of the appropriations which refer to the emoluments of these officers which we can reach have been reduced.

As to the extra pay which was put on for the time being, that time having expired, we do not extend it nor do we allow the extra compensation which has heretofore been allowed.

As to reorganization, we have done much to prevent a certain style of reorganization which involved bringing some hundred officers under the mantle of the Public Health Service in the way of commissioning others than those already in the service with, we might say, the Army token, and putting them in the same line of service as the medical service of the Army.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator whether men are now being inducted into the military service for the purpose of performing duties in the Public Health Service?

Mr. WARREN. So far as I know, that is utterly prevented for the time being. Of course, the officers of the Public Health Service are promoted from time to time. The Senator from Utah will recall that oftentimes in executive session we have before us the names of men in the Public Health Service who are promoted to a higher rank. That is incident to length of service; in a certain number of years the officers acquire a certain grade.

Mr. KING. Would the Senator from Wyoming consent to an amendment providing in effect that no part of this appropriation shall be employed in paying the compensation of any persons in the Public Health Service who may be advanced from a nonmilitary to a military status?

Mr. WARREN. I had rather the Senator would not offer such an amendment, because it is not necessary. We have already effectually provided for that.

I had not, however, concluded my statement in regard to the reduction in the pending bill of former appropriations which have been made. Here is an item which formerly carried an appropriation of $500,000, but which is now reduced to $400,000. The matter to which the Senator refers, I think, is proceeding entirely along the line which the Senator wishes to have it proceed. I feel confident that the Senator, on further examination, will ascertain that we are doing all that it is possible to do.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I wish to suggest to the Senator from Wyoming and to other Senators that we are now advancing in the military and naval branches of the Government and also in the Public Health Service a large number of officers, so that the higher grades are being congested. We shall soon, I hope, have an Army of not to exceed 60,000 or 75,000 men; and yet we shall have enough brigadier generals and major generals and colonels and majors and other higher officers for an Army of two or three hundred thousand men. The same statement is true as to the Navy and also of the Public Health Service. Practically all of the officers will be in the higher grades. It seems to me that the time has come to call a halt in regard to these promotions, when we know that, answering the demands of the public and our own duty, we are bound to restrict the number in the Army and Navy. We shall not have done our duty with respect to the Public Health Service until we entirely divorce it from the Army and make it a medical branch of the Government instead of a military branch of the Government.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment. If there be no further amendments, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

ADJUSTMENT OF FOREIGN LOANS.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8762) to create a commission authorized under certain conditions to refund or convert obligations of foreign Governments owing to the United States of America, and for other purposes.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator from North Dakota does not propose to proceed with the consideration of the bill this evening, does he?

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not. I expect the Senate to proceed to the consideration of executive business immediately after the bill shall have been taken up.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from North Dakota.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 10 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, January 23, 1922, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, January 21, 1922.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, our Heavenly Father, we come again to the solemn yet tender mystery of Thy throne. We believe that there is one God over all, and blessed forevermore. Thy judgments are full of wonder, yet merciful. Gently correct us by that loving pity that redeems us from distress and grants us sweet release. Be unto us an abiding reality and make Thy presence like unto the nearness of a dear friend. Give us larger conceptions of the truth and a richer and a profounder knowledge of all things needful. Then O help us to bring the vision to the task, the revelation to the duty, and, above all things else, the truth to everything. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

LEGISLATION FOR EX-SERVICE MEN.

Mr. SWEET. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD, giving a brief history of the legislation that has been passed for the benefit of ex-service men.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 9981, the independent offices appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 9981.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were 59 ayes and 13 noes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote, and make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of no quorum. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 324, nays none, not voting 106, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A quorum being present, the doors were opened.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 9981, with Mr. TOWNER in the chair.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time on the majority side has expired. All time has expired except 33 minutes, in the control of the minority.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. WRIGHT].

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the safety and perpetuity of the Government of this Republic and of each State of the Union depend upon the maintenance and enforcement of the laws and the protection of the citizen in the enjoyment of his constitutional and inalienable and inherent right of life, liberty, and property, and without the protection of these rights confusion and anarchy would inevitably result.

I do not palliate or condone the violation of law, and condemn lynching and mob law in any form. One of its dangers is, there is no limit to its jurisdiction. But I am equally opposed to a violation of the Constitution under the guise of the enactment of a law which if enacted and enforced would be clearly subversive of the plain terms of the Constitution and destructive of our system of government and the institutions and principles upon which it was founded.

The Dyer antilynching bill is not only pernicious and unjust but is clearly violative of the plain terms and provisions of the Constitution and contrary to the genius and spirit of our institutions and time-honored traditions.

It not only encroaches upon but obliterates the rights of the sovereign States and seeks to substitute Federal for State laws, and transfers from the State to the Federal courts a class of offenders for the trial and punishment of whom ample provision has already been made by laws of the several States.

Have the States become impotent and helpless and can no longer enforce police regulations and criminal laws on their statute books? Such an accusation would be a fearful arraignment of a sovereign Commonwealth.

Aside from the unconstitutionality of the bill its terms and provisions are absurd, ridiculous, and nothing short of a monstrosity. A "mob or riotous assemblage" is defined by the bill to mean "an assemblage composed of five or more persons acting in concert for the purpose of depriving any person of his life without authority of law as a punishment for or to prevent the commission of some actual or supposed public offense," and by the terms of the bill officers of the law who fail to protect the life of a person against such a "mob or riotous assemblage" are guilty of a crime as well as persons participating in such "mob or riotous assemblage."

If the bill has any worthy object, it would seem to be to maintain law and order, suppress crime, and protect human life, and yet any number of persons less than five may unlawfully act in perfect accord and concert and with a common and felonious design to deprive a person of his life and actually take his life in the most unlawful and brutal manner and not be amenable to the proposed law, and any officer who fails to protect the life of a person against the unlawful and felonious conduct of any number of persons less than five is likewise not subject to its provisions.

Besides, it is not made penal for such "mob or riotous assemblage" to deprive a person of his life except "as a punishment for or to prevent the commission of some actual or supposed public offense," so that the mob could with impunity take the life of a person for any cause or reason except "as a punishment for or to prevent the commission of some actual or supposed public offense." The so-called race riots would not be covered by the provisions of the bill.

The proponents of this measure seek to justify its constitutionality and passage by attempting to bring it within the terms and provisions of that part of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution which provides that no State shall deny any person the equal protection of the laws of the State.

This position is far-fetched and untenable, and this constitutional provision has no application to the subject matter of the bill. The fact is the framers of this provision of the fourteenth amendment never dreamed that the most imaginative mind could ever conceive of stretching it to cover anything akin to the subject matter of the pending bill.

The amendment was adopted soon after the Civil War, and this provision was framed for the sole purpose of preventing any State from enacting a law which would discriminate against the slaves who had been emancipated and for no other purpose.

In seeking to bring the bill within this provision of the Constitution, it is provided—

> That if any State or governmental subdivision thereof fails, neglects, or refuses to provide and maintain protection to the life of any person within its jurisdiction against a mob or riotous assemblage, such State shall by reason of such failure, neglect, or refusal be deemed to have denied to such person the equal protection of the laws of the State, and to the end that such protection as is guaranteed to the citizens of the United States by its Constitution may be secured, it is provided—

And so forth.

Therefore, under the terms of the bill before any person would be amenable to its terms and before a United States court could take jurisdiction of a person thereunder it must be determined in some way, not pointed out or provided in the bill, that the State in which a person had been deprived of his life had failed, neglected, or refused to provide and maintain protection to the life of such person; and this failure, neglect, or refusal on the part of the State must be established as a condition precedent to a Federal court acquiring and taking jurisdiction in the premises. What person, officer, or tribunal is to determine this vital question?

Could it by the most strained legal construction be held that because a "mob or riotous assemblage" had in a given State deprived a person of his life that such State had denied to such person the equal protection of the laws of the State?

The act of five or more persons acting in violation of the laws of the State would not be the act of the State, and how could the State by the unlawful act of such persons be deemed to have denied to any person the equal protection of the law? The act of the individuals composing the mob could not be held to be the act of the sovereign State. Moreover it can not be successfully contended that the act of any State or municipal officer in failing, neglecting, or refusing to make all reasonable efforts to prevent a person being put to death at the hands of a mob or in failing, neglecting, or refusing to make all reasonable efforts in apprehending or prosecuting persons participating in the mob can be attributed to or held to be the act of the State or a denial by the State of the equal protection of its laws to any person. Such officers are chosen to carry out and enforce the laws of the State or municipality and in failing, neglecting, or refusing to do so they act in violation of their sworn duty and become themselves culprits and thus do not represent the State or municipality. In other words, such officers are chosen to perform perfectly proper and legal acts and are presumed to do their duty, and if they do the exact opposite they are not representing the State or municipality. If there is one question well settled in American jurisprudence, it is that a municipality, county, or State is not bound by the unauthorized, tortious, or illegal acts of their officers, the familiar doctrine being that no principal is bound by the acts of his agent when such agent acts without the scope of his authority. For a State to deprive a person of the equal protection of its laws there must be some affirmative act on the part of its legislative, executive, or judicial departments which in reality so deprives a person.

Some of the most abominable and iniquitious features of the bill are contained in sections 5 and 6, which provide that any county in which a person is put to death by a mob or riotious assemblage shall forfeit $10,000, payable in the first instance to the family of the person lynched, and in the event that any person so put to death shall have been transported by such mob or riotious assemblage from one county to another during the time intervening between his capture and putting to death each county in, or through which he was transported, shall be jointly and severally liable to pay such forfeiture.

These provisions would penalize the innocent, law-abiding taxpayers of a county who had no part in and who stoutly condemn the act of the mob and who had no knowledge of or opportunity to prevent the act of the mob. These provisions would add unjust burdens on taxpayers, including helpless and innocent women and children, and can not be justified in law, good conscious, or common honesty. Indeed, the very female who had been ravished by a brute might be called upon to bear her proportion of the taxes required to pay the family or dependents of the human brute the $10,000 penalty.

This penalty provision of the bill and its modes of enforcement are clearly unconstitutional. A State, being sovereign, is not subject to suit, except one State may, under the Constitution, institute a suit against another State. A county is but a political subdivision of a State, created and organized under the authority of the State for governmental convenience, and, being a part of the sovereignty, is not subject to suit, except where the sovereign voluntarily consents by appropriate legislative enactment.

Mr. Chairman, the general debate upon this bill for the most part has been characterized by dignity, and it has displayed a high order of research and scholarship. It is unfortunate, indeed, that some gentlemen during the general debate upon the floor of this House have seen fit to single out Georgia, the empire State of the South, and make her a target in the discussion. These attacks are, or should be, unworthy of the gentlemen who made them. Georgia does not claim to be superior to all of the other States, but she does claim to be as good as the best. The high stand which she has taken in the proud galaxy of States and in the sisterhood of States has placed her where she needs no defense at my hands. She has made a rich contribution to the art, literature, professions, statesmanship, and patriotism of this Nation. I wish I had time to enumerate to you some of Georgia's achievements. For instance, do gentlemen know that the first sewing machine which was ever made was invented and manufactured in the State of Georgia? Do gentlemen realize that the first steamboat which ever plied across the Atlantic sailed from the port of Savannah, Ga.? Do gentlemen realize that it is very well conceded that the first machine for the manufacture of ice was manufactured in the congressional district of Georgia which I have the honor to represent? Do gentlemen realize that Georgia can justly boast of the first chartered female college in the whole world which granted to women a diploma? The cotton gin was invented in Georgia. Do gentlemen realize that the people of this world are to-day indebted to a Georgian for the discovery and use of anesthesia, a thing that has brought so much relief to suffering humanity?

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me for a brief question and statement?

Mr. WRIGHT. Yes.

Mr. TILLMAN. Touching upon this question as to how Georgia treats her Negro citizens, is it not stated in effect in the majority report accompanying the bill that the laws of Georgia and the people of Georgia are so fair in the treatment of her colored citizens that in that State Negroes pay taxes on 1,664,368 acres and own property assessed at $47,723,499?

Mr. WRIGHT. That is absolutely true. If I had time I could show you in detail that the colored people of Georgia are properly treated by the white people. Of course, now and then there will be a sporadic violation of law. The percentage of crime in Georgia is no more than in the other States of the Union. If I were disposed to draw an invidious comparison, which I refrain from doing, I might say that Georgia and the enforcement of her laws, compared to some of the States from which some of these gentlemen who make these attacks come, is a literal paragon. Georgia needs no defense at my hands, and I say in conclusion that she is inhabited by as grand a people as have ever resisted the advance of tyranny or nourished the spirit of freedom. The achievements of her chivalric, noble, and patriotic men and women will live in story and in song when her cowardly slanderers and maligners are forever forgotten. [Applause.]

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I yield now to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. McSWAIN].

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, I venture to renew the discussion respecting the constitutionality of the antilynching bill. I observe that the distinguished and learned gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] places the constitutionality of the proposed legislation third and last in the order of discussion, and presumptively of least importance. But it seems to me that the constitutionality is the very first question to meet a Member of Congress on any proposed legislation. Members will remember that the only oath of office they took was an oath to protect and defend the Constitution of the United States, and they did solemnly swear that such obligation was without mental reservation or purpose of evasion. Therefore, a Member can not reason to himself privately that questions of expediency and policy and popular demand for legislation can override the primary and fundamental question of its constitutionality. I was glad when I heard the scholarly and thoughtful gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] tell us that he deplores the tendency to centralize powers of Government in the hands of Federal officials to the loss of initiative, dignity, pride, and independence of the States. But imagine my surprise and disappointment to hear him say in the next breath that any effort to restrain Federal jurisdiction is merely fighting against time. He tells us that despite our oaths the boundary line between the States and the National Government is beyond our control. If that be true, then, indeed, should our oath of office be amended. Certainly the States are not breaking over and invading the jurisdiction of the National Government. It is equally certain that the tendency of the proposed antilynching bill and the argument of the distinguished gentleman from Ohio is to greatly increase and encourage the unconstitutional invasion by the Federal Government upon the reserved rights of the States.

AMENDMENT IS THE CONSTITUTIONAL METHOD OF ENLARGING FEDERAL POWER.

It seems to me that our duty is, when the progress of science, invention, commerce, and social development necessitates a change in the relations between the State and the Nation, to introduce and to fight for constitutional amendments. And in this connection I wish to say with reference to all the "good-natured chaffing about the part that southern Members had in the passage of the eighteenth amendment and the Volstead Act," that the Southern States which supported the adoption of the eighteenth amendment went about it in an open, manly, and constitutional way. Practically all of them had adopted State legislation prohibiting the manufacture and sale of alcoholic beverages within their respective borders. But owing to the very liberal construction placed by the Supreme Court upon the interstate-commerce powers of the Federal Government the States were rendered almost helpless to enforce prohibition. Whisky by the carload was brought in under the guise of "original packages," and the questions of "what was an original package" and of when the same "arrived," and of what was the "destination" of an original package of liquor, were fought out in the courts of nearly every State in the Nation for many years. We recognize that when the people of the Nation lawfully adopt an amendment to the Federal Constitution all matters properly included within the amendment cease to impinge upon State rights. All the arguments made as to the wisdom and expediency and necessity for the Federal Government to take over the right to punish lynching would be good arguments in favor of a constitutional amendment to that effect, but the same can have no weight whatever in deciding the question of constitutionality as it now exists.

FEDERAL COURTS PROTECT FEDERAL RIGHTS ONLY AND STATE COURTS PROTECT ALL OTHER RIGHTS.

I respectfully submit that confusion amongst the cases that have been cited in this argument will disappear if these fundamental propositions are kept in mind. First, it is the duty of the Federal Government to enact such legislation as the discretion of Congress may determine will be suitable and proper to enforce all the powers expressly conferred upon the National Government, and to enact punitory legislation making criminal the act of any person or persons who invade the rights of any citizen predicated upon and derived from any part of the Federal Constitution. Second, in like manner it is the duty of the State governments to exercise their discretion in enacting legislation to enforce the rights of the citizens based upon and derived from the reserved powers vested in the States and to make invasion of these rights criminal and punishable as such.

Third, within their separate and respective spheres these two governments operating over the same territory and upon the individual citizen are separate and distinct, and neither can impose any obligation or burden upon the agencies or officers of the other, because, however light the burden and obligation may be, if the right to impose the same be granted, then the burden may be made so oppressive as to destroy the agency upon which it is imposed. Fourth, that neither Government, State or Federal, is or can be made responsible for the lawless acts of individual citizens who happen for the time being to be exercising some sort of official power. In order that the State may be said to act through an official, whether legislative, executive, or judicial, that State officer must act in pursuance of his office, must act by virtue of official position, and must be clothed with some power and authority which he seeks to exercise. It is not every act of a man who holds a State office that is official. The sheriff of a county in sudden heat and passion resents a personal insult and kills a man. The State has not committed the homicide, though the sheriff did the killing, and the sheriffs of many States have been tried for murder. Of course, it is the duty of a sheriff to protect his prisoner, but it is also his duty to protect all lawful citizens who are not under arrest. If the sheriff conspires with a mob to surrender his prisoner to be murdered by the mob, called "lynching," the sheriff is just as guilty of murder as any member of the mob, and the moral guilt would be greater than if he had waylaid a personal enemy and had killed him with the pistol furnished by the State to exercise the duties of the sheriff's office.

PERSONAL CRIME AND OFFICIAL ACTS DISTINGUISHED.

Citizens within the States in the peace of God and of the country have as much right to live and to have their lives protected by the officials of the State government as have persons arrested for crime and in the custody of the sheriff. Yet if one citizen murders another we are told that the Federal Government can not exercise jurisdiction unless five citizens join in committing the murder. So we are told that if the sheriff resents an injury or avenges an old grudge by killing a man, it is not State action; but in the same breath we are told that if five or more persons take a prisoner from a sheriff then that becomes a Federal crime. Merely because the sheriff has breached his duty to the State and violated the State law by failing to defend his prisoner at the risk of his own life, his one personal offense does not constitute "State action."

LOGICAL CONSEQUENCES.

I respectfully submit that the proponents of this antilynching bill have not carried their argument to its logical consequences. If, under the fourteenth amendment, the crime of the sheriff in virtually participating in the murder of a prisoner is punishable in a Federal court, and under Federal Statutes, because the sheriff has violated some Federal right of the prisoner, then the crime of murder by one private citizen would also be made a Federal crime. If the right to "life, liberty, and property" is a Federal right, then that Federal right may be protected by Federal statute and the invasion of the Federal right punished in a Federal court. As crime breeds crime, and as failure to properly punish one crime may encourage the commission of another crime, so it could be logically contended that the lawlessness within the States which permits lynching and permits the crimes that provoke lynching indicates the general failure of a State to exercise its primary duty to protect the lives, liberties, and properties of all the citizens, and that this State-wide failure and inaction on the part of the State by making possible an orgy of crime demonstrates that the State has abdicated its independence and right of autonomy, and that the Federal Government can step in and enact legislation predicated upon the assumption that the States are not doing their duty in protecting the life, liberty, and property of the people, and that under the fourteenth amendment the "life, liberty, and property" of the people is a Federal right, and that Congress can legislate to protect all Federal rights and, therefore, Congress can make punishable in a Federal court not only the killing of one citizen by another but the stealing of property and the failure to support wives and children and the vast multitude of crimes.

"EQUAL PROTECTION OF LAWS" MEANS "EQUAL RIGHTS IN COURT."

As I gather it from hearing and reading carefully the arguments of the distinguished gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE] this antilynching bill is necessarily predicated upon the assumption that the States have in some cases failed to exert sufficient physical force to protect the life of each individual prisoner. I gather from his argument that so long as "the sheriff does his duty" there is no Federal right in question, but the instant that the sheriff "fails to do his duty" the Federal right immediately arises. Though this gentleman is a learned lawyer and has placed the country, and especially the legal profession, under profound obligations to him for his magnificent work in compiling and arranging the general statutory laws of the United States, yet he is preeminently an advocate, and his speech is that of an advocate rather than the opinion of a judge. Now, I propose to him this question, and before this legislation can become effective these questions must be answered in the words of the legislation: When does the sheriff fail to do his duty? And that question depends upon the further question, Who prescribes the duty of the sheriff?

We have always assumed from the unbroken current of decisions for more than 125 years that the States by their statutory and common law prescribe the duty of a sheriff to his prisoner. I imagine, therefore, that the measure of duty and the penalties and consequences for failure to perform that duty vary in the different States of the Union. Furthermore, the law prescribing the duties of sheriff is subject to amendment by the States from time to time, so that the measure of duty not only varies from State to State but varies from time to time. Then how could Congress say when a sheriff has failed to do his duty? If Congress does set up a measure of duty as it seeks to do in the general terms of the bill under consideration when it says, speaking of a sheriff "who fails, neglects, or refuses to make a reasonable effort to prevent such person from being so put to death," then Congress is prescribing the duty of a State officer and fixing the measure and bounds of his duty and imposing penalties for failure to live up to the standards fixed by Congress. But the gentleman from Kansas, being learned in the law, knows that question of "negligence" and of "reasonableness" are mixed questions of law and fact. In this case the ingredient of law is furnished by the State governments, and that ingredient differs in the different States, and if a sheriff were being tried under this statute not only would the "facts" surrounding the case be introduced in evidence on the issue of "negligence" and "reasonable effort" but the law of the particular State with reference to the duty of the sheriff under the circumstances would also have to be offered in evidence, and as the law will differ in the different States, then we will have the Federal courts in one State prosecuting for violation of the antilynching law hold a sheriff to one measure of duty and in another State to another measure of duty. In one State under given evidence the sheriff will go free and in another State, under an identical set of facts, the sheriff will go to the penitentiary. Then what will become of the ideals of equal protection of the laws in the Federal courts? It will manifestly be unfair and unequal and unjust for the Federal courts for the avowed purpose of affording equal protection of the laws to set up machinery that will accomplish such unequal results.

JURY TRIAL IN STATE COURT NOT A FEDERAL RIGHT.

In reading over the argument of the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] I observe that he seems to rely almost as much upon dissenting opinions as upon the opinions of the court. I admit that dissenting opinions are often instructive for the purpose of illustrating the real decision of the court by way of contrast. But I must confess to astonishment at the concluding point made by the gentleman. Evidently he has given this bill earnest consideration. He has had long and honorable experience in both the House of Representatives and the Senate; he is one of the most conspicuous advisers of the majority party and a gentleman of liberal scholarship. This gentleman tells us—> the strongest argument for this bill is one which has received only scant attention. * * * The Constitution says the trial of all crimes, except in cases of impeachment, shall be by jury. * * * Now, do you mean to say to me that the National Government does not have the power to enforce that provision of trial by jury where it is disregarded on so large a scale? Is that provision of the Constitution for trial by jury a vanishing shadow without substance?

And again, in answer to a question by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HERSEY], asking if a man lynched in Ohio is denied equal protection of the law, the gentleman from Ohio replied:

> He is entitled by the Constitution of the United States to a trial by jury.

Now, the gentleman from Ohio argues that merely because a small percentage, a very small percentage of all persons charged with crime in the country are lynched by mobs, that the State courts have abdicated and are to be displaced by Federal courts. I am very slow to take issue with such an eminent statesman as the gentleman from Ohio, but I must be bound by the decisions of the Supreme Court rather than his personal opinion.

If the gentleman will refer to the case of Walker v. Sauvinet (92 U. S., 90), he will find that the opinion of the court was to the effect that the citizens of a State are not entitled to jury trial as a matter of Federal right. He will find that article 7 of the amendments, and, in fact, all of the first 10 of the amendments, restrict and regulate only Federal power and the Federal courts. He will find that due process of law under the fourteenth amendment merely means that the prisoner shall be tried by the "general law of the State"; that is, that all prisoners shall have due and fair notice of the crimes with which they are charged and shall have a reasonable opportunity to prepare and to make their defense, and that all charged with the same crime shall be tried in the same way. State courts may reduce their juries from 12 to 8, or to 6, or to 4, or may provide that a bench consisting of several judges may try issues of fact, as well as law, in criminal cases. Chief Justice Waite was one of the soundest and most conservative lawyers that ever sat upon the Supreme Bench. Born in Connecticut, he was admitted to the bar in Ohio in 1839, and was appointed Chief Justice from that State in 1874. If the gentleman from Ohio will refer to Rose's Notes upon the case of Walker v. Sauvinet (supra), he would observe that the same has been followed and confirmed in numerous cases from the Supreme Court of the United States and of most of the States. The right of trial by jury for a crime committed in a State and against the laws enacted by a State in pursuance of its police powers for the protection of life, liberty, and property is not a Federal right, and not being a Federal right the same can not be protected by Federal legislation. What the gentleman from Ohio calls "anarchy" is mere lawlessness, mere crime, his opinion to the contrary notwithstanding. Before the Federal Government can step in and constitutionally take charge of the administration of justice within a State the State government must cease to be republican in form; that is, it must cease to be a representative government resting upon the will of the majority. If this argument by the gentleman from Ohio that the right of trial by jury for a crime against the laws of a State is a Federal right and should be protected by Federal legislation is the strongest argument that can be adduced, then the language is inadequate to depict the weakness of the other arguments. I do not dispute with the gentleman that he is correct in saying that his argument is the strongest, because he is capable of judging; and judging by the length of time allowed him for the discussion it is evident that his colleagues on that side esteem his opinion upon such matters as the very strongest. Yet all such opinions combined could hardly be expected to overrule the unbroken line of decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States. In the face of those decisions the strongest argument for the antilynching bill crumbles like a house of cards upon a sand pile in a rainstorm.

NO CHANCE TO CHANGE CONSTRUCTION OF FOURTEENTH AMENDMENT.

The distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] reminds us that some contemporary writers, including Mr. Blaine, thought that the Supreme Court by its decisions had unduly restricted the scope and force of the fourteenth amendment, and presumably the gentleman from Ohio shares the confidence of Prof. Burgess, whom he commends by quoting from, in the belief that the day will come when such decisions as the Slaughterhouse cases will be found to be intensely reactionary and will be "overturned." The gentleman will find that controversy referred to in the opinion of the court itself at page 96 of the case of Twining v. New Jersey (211 U. S.), where eight of the judges, Justice Harlan alone dissenting, concurred in an opinion using this language:

> On the other hand, if the views of the minority had prevailed, it is easy to see how far the authority and independence of the States would have been diminished by subjecting all their legislative and judicial acts to correction by the legislative and review by the judicial branch of the National Government. But we need not now inquire into the merits of the original dispute. This part at least of the Slaughterhouse cases has been steadily adhered to by this court, so that it was said of it, in a case where the same clause of the amendment was under consideration (Maxwell v. Dow, 176 U. S., 581, 591): "The opinion upon the matters actually involved and maintained by the judgment in the case has never been doubted or overruled by any judgment of this court." The distinction between National and State citizenship and their respective privileges there drawn has come to be firmly established.

Does the gentleman from Ohio think as a practical proposition that the Supreme Court of the United States will ever consent to overturn the scores of its own decisions based upon the Slaughterhouse case and the thousands of decisions in the State courts and in the Federal courts of inferior jurisdiction predicated upon the doctrines of that case? The Slaughterhouse case was only one of about 700 cases in number where the opinions of the court were written by that great jurist, Justice Samuel F. Miller. Though a native of Kentucky, he was an ardent abolitionist and moved to Iowa in 1850. He was the leader of his party in that State and was a disciple of the political philosophy of Alexander Hamilton and the constitutional principles of John Marshall, thus believing in a strong central Federal Government. Appointed by President Lincoln to the Supreme Court in 1862, he served on the court for nearly 30 years, during a trying period, and it was said of him that the—> finding (1862) of such a judge by the President was scarcely less fortunate than the finding of such a President [Lincoln] by the country.

To his dying day he was proud of the moral courage and intellectual acumen manifested by him in the Slaughterhouse case. Does the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] think there will ever be found upon the Supreme Bench justices who will likely be more friendly to his view of the purpose and intention of the fourteenth amendment than were those judges who composed the court when the Slaughterhouse case was decided in 1872, and the case of United States v. Cruikshank (92 U. S.) in 1875, Virginia v. Rives (100 U. S.) in 1879, United States v. Harris (106 U. S.) in 1882, the Civil Rights cases in 1883, and Barbier v. Connolly (113 U. S.) in 1884? All the members of the court on those several dates were Hamiltonian Federalists and Republicans except Justices Fields and Clifford and sympathized deeply with the original purpose of the fourteenth amendment to save the Negroes from oppressive State action at the hands of State governments controlled by white people. In view of the remoteness of that period, when some statesmen hoped to create not only political but social and civil equality between whites and blacks, and in view of the fact that saner convictions have come upon the people of all sections, and in view of the present composition of the Supreme Court of the United States, does the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] think that the confidence of Prof. Burgess that the Slaughterhouse case and the scores of other cases predicated upon it will ever be reversed and overturned by the Supreme Court of the United States?

WAS THERE ANARCHY IN ARIZONA?

Referring to what the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] characterizes not as crime and ordinary lawlessness but as "anarchy," which, in effect, would justify supplanting and sidetracking the whole State government, what does the gentleman think of the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, filed December 13, 1920, in the case of United States v. Wheeler (254 U. S., 281)? The gentleman will recall that in that case 25 citizens of Arizona were indicted in a Federal court charging them with oppressing, intimidating, and threatening 221 persons, citizens of the United States, residing in Arizona, but not citizens of Arizona, by seizing with force of arms and placing said 221 persons on a train and transporting all of them into the State of New Mexico, releasing them in said State with the threat of death or great bodily harm if they ever returned to Arizona. Would not the gentleman call that "anarchy," and would he not think that citizens of the United States had a right to stay in Arizona as long as they wanted to so long as they obeyed its laws, and if any citizens of Arizona with guns and pistols drove them like cattle into a freight train and hauled them across the State line and dumped them in New Mexico, would not the gentleman think that some "Federal right" was violated and that the offenses thus committed should be indictable and punishable in the Federal court?

Would it not be a good idea to amend the pending bill so as to meet just such an emergency? Yet the Supreme Court of the United States followed this much-criticized Slaughterhouse case by a unanimous opinion, save one, holding that these private citizens of Arizona committed no invasion of any "Federal rights" by forcibly driving and carrying 221 citizens of the United States at one time out of the State and expressly approved the case of United States v. Harris (106 U. S., 629) and the Slaughterhouse case.

ARGUMENT OF CHARLES E. HUGHES FOR "STATES RIGHTS."

I assume that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] and all the gentlemen who say that they believe that this antilynching bill is constitutional will agree that Hon. Charles E. Hughes is not only a great lawyer and statesman and diplomat but was a great justice of the Supreme Court of the United States. Mr. Hughes was the attorney who represented the 25 citizens indicted in the Federal court of Arizona when the case was argued in the United States Supreme Court, and the brief of Mr. Hughes is a brief supporting the contention of those who charge that the antilynching bill is unconstitutional. Therefore, for the benefit of Members and for the benefit of the country I will extract and place into the RECORD a portion of the brief of Mr. Hughes in that case, in which he cites the same cases that I and others opposing the antilynching bill have cited to establish the propositions that there is a "Federal citizenship" and there is a "State citizenship," and that there are rights respecting each of them, and that Congress can not legislate under the fourteenth amendment to protect those rights which the citizens derive from the States. It is plainly stated in the brief that "the right of life, liberty, and property is left to the protection of the several States and that the jurisdiction of the United States is excluded therefrom." Herein follows the extract:

[From brief of Charles E. Hughes, now Secretary of State.]

This distinction between Federal rights which protect the citizen simply against State action, and Federal rights which protect the citizen against the action of individuals, abundantly established by decisions of this court (United States v. Cruikshank, 92 U. S., 542, 554, 555; Virginia v. Rives, 100 U. S., 313, 318; United States v. Harris, 106 U. S., 629, 639; Civil rights cases, 109 U. S., 3, 11–13; James v. Bowman, 190 U. S., 127; Barney v. City of New York, 193 U. S., 430; Hodges v. United States, 203 U. S., 1, 14–16), has been disregarded in this prosecution. (See also Karem v. United States, 121 Fed. Rep., 250; United States v. Moore, 129 Fed. Rep., 630; United States v. Powell, 151 Fed. Rep., 648, affd. 212 U. S., 564.)

It thus appears that it is not enough for the Government to establish that there is a Federal right, in order to invoke paragraph 19, if it appears, as we submit it does clearly appear in the present case, that the right is of that class which connotes protection only against State action.

The decisions may be searched in vain for any authoritative precedent applying paragraph 19, unless there is a right to protection as against individual action and not simply as against State action. (Ex parte Yarbrough, 110 U. S., 651; Guinn v. United States, 238 U. S., 347; United States v. Mosley, 238 U. S., 383; United States v. Butler, Fed. Cas. No. 14,700; United States v. Crosby, Fed. Cas. No. 14,893; Felix v. United States, 186 Fed. Rep., 685; United States v. Stone, 188 Fed. Rep., 836; Aczel v. United States, Fed. Rep., 232, 652; United States v. Waddell, 112 U. S., 76; Haynes v. United States, 101 Fed. Rep., 817; Buchanan v. United States, 233 Fed. Rep., 257; Logan v. United States, 144 U. S., 263; in re Quarles, 158 U. S., 532; Motes v. United States, 178 U. S., 458; United States v. Lancaster, 44 Fed. Rep., 885, 896; United States v. Patrick, 54 Fed. As examples of prosecutions which have failed because of the prosecutor's inability to point out, to the satisfaction of the court, the constitutional provision securing the right said to have been conspired against see United States v. Cruikshank, 92 U. S., 542; Hodges v. United States, 203 U. S., 1; United States v. Gradwell, 243 U. S., 476; Karem v. United States, 121 Fed. Rep., 250; McKenna v. United States, 127 Fed. Rep., 88; United States v. Eberhart, 127 Fed. Rep., 254; United States v. Moore, 129 Fed. Rep., 630; United States v. Powell, 151 Fed. Rep., 648, affd. 212 U. S., 564; United States v. Bathgate, 246 U. S., 220.

The right of a citizen of the United States to reside and work within the bounds of the United States wherever he may choose is a fundamental right pertaining to his individual liberty. Like other fundamental rights of life, liberty, and property, so far as interference therewith on the part of individuals is concerned, it is a right which the Constitution of the United States leaves to the protection of the several States having jurisdiction. So far as there is a right pertaining to Federal citizenship to have free ingress or egress with respect to the several States, the right is essentially one of protection against the action of the States themselves and of those acting under their authority. (Slaughterhouse cases, 16 Wall., 36, 76; Corfield v. Coryell, 4 Wash. C. C., 371.)

The privileges and immunities clause of Article IV, paragraph 2, does not confer a right of protection against the acts of individuals, but is aimed at the hostile action of the States. It is this clause which gives the citizens of the several States "the right of free ingress into other States and egress from them." (Paul v. Virginia, 8 Wall., 168, 180; Slaughterhouse cases, 16 Wall., 36, 75; Corfield v. Coryell, 4 Wash. C. C., 371, 381; Ward v. Maryland, 12 Wall., 418, 430.) It confers no right whatever with respect to the action of individuals, but only affords protection as against the hostile action of the States and their agencies. (Slaughterhouse cases, supra, 76, 77; U. S. v. Harris, 106 U. S., 629, 643; see also Hodges v. U. S., 203 U. S. 1, 15.)

The provisions of the fourteenth amendment are also concerned with action by the States and do not confer a Federal right to protection as against the action of individuals in the absence of action by a State. (Slaughterhouse cases, supra, 77; Civil Rights cases, supra, 11; U. S. v. Cruikshank, 92 U. S., 542, 555; see also Va. v. Rives, supra, and U. S. v. Harris, supra.)

DENNISON v. KENTUCKY STILL LAW IN PROPER CASES.

A brilliant and striking argument was made by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE] on January 10, and in common with many advocates he pronounces that "there is absolutely no question about the constitutionality of the antilynching bill." The great confidence of this gentleman in his position would justify a reexamination of the cases and principles announced by him. I believe that the gentleman will find that he has assumed that merely because a case proves something, that therefore it proves his proposition. In the first place, the gentleman from Kansas refers to the case of Kentucky v. Dennison, (24 Howard, U. S., p. 66), and tells us that if the doctrine of said case stands, then the supporters of the antilynching bill are "licked"; but he announces that the case of Dennison against Kentucky has been "reversed." I think if the gentleman will consult Rose's Notes on the Dennison case, he will find that it has been frequently approved and followed in cases relating to interstate extradition, and I believe that every Member who has been a governor of a State or the attorney general of a State, and every lawyer who has had cases relating to interstate extradition will agree with me that the Dennison case is the law to-day, unreversed and not overruled. Therefore, accepting the postulate of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE], if this were a mere debating society, we could pronounce him out of court. But the question is a large one and involves several considerations of constitutional law, and we will proceed to examine the cases which the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE] vociferously and emphatically announces sustain beyond a doubt the constitutionality of the antilynching bill. He confines himself mostly to the cases found in One hundredth United States, and to opinions written mostly by Mr. Justice Strong, who was on the bench from 1870 until 1880. He was a distinguished lawyer and advocate of Philadelphia. Mr. Hampton L. Carson, of the Philadelphia bar, in part 2 of his History of the Supreme Court, on page 463, uses this language respecting Mr. Justice Strong:

Upon certain questions his convictions were so strong—stubborn, in fact—as to amount to what his critics pronounced to be prejudice, while his friends admired the boldness of his views and the tenacity with which he adhered to them.

Now, if we will remember the principle that the Federal Government undoubtedly has and always had from its very beginning, the power to enforce by appropriate legislation all constitutional authority, so as to maintain itself and all its agencies, then the case will be plain and dicta that have been quoted will appear in their true relation. The first case of Tennessee v. Davis (100 U. S., p. 257) merely upholds the constitutionality of the statute removing into the Federal court the criminal prosecution commenced in the State court of Tennessee against a revenue officer charged with the murder of a Tennessee citizen. But the officer charged in his petition that the killing was done in self-defense and while exercising and enforcing his duty as a United States officer. Undoubtedly the United States has the power to collect revenue, and must collect revenue by officers, and must protect its officers in collecting revenue, and as a means of protection can remove to a Federal court a case against an officer for an act committed by him in pursuance of his power and authority as a Federal revenue officer. That power existed for 90 years before the fourteenth amendment was adopted, and so the fourteenth amendment was not involved in the case, and was not even mentioned in the case, and therefore the case throws no light upon the present controversy. In like manner the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE] announces that the case of Ex parte Siebold (100 U. S., 371) supports his construction and interpretation of the fourteenth amendment. I respectfully submit that the Siebold case was a prosecution against certain judges of election in Maryland, charging that they had violated the acts of Congress at an election where Members of Congress were being voted for. The opinion of the court was delivered by that great jurist, who also wrote the opinion of the court in the Civil Rights cases, in One hundred and ninth United States, Mr. Justice Bradley, of New York, a great lawyer, who was appointed to the Supreme Court in 1870, and continued to serve until his death 22 years later. That case involved no consideration of the fourteenth amendment, which is not even mentioned in the lengthy opinion, and there is no doubt about the proposition that the Federal Government has always had authority to punish persons, whether they happened to be officers of the States or not, for violation of constitutional Federal statutes. So the case of Ex parte Clarke (100 U. S., p. 399) raises the question as to the power to punish the judges of election in Ohio at an election where Members of Congress were being voted for, and involved in no way the fourteenth amendment, which is not even mentioned.

ACT OF CONGRESS UNCONSTITUTIONAL IN NEWBERRY CASE.

The Supreme Court about one year ago sustained the power of Congress to regulate elections for Federal offices, but held to be unconstitutional the corrupt practices act of Congress so far as the same undertakes to limit the amount of money that may be spent by a candidate for a party nomination in a primary election. Though the court was divided and vigorous dissenting opinions filed, yet the court adopted a conservative and logical construction of the Constitution, to the effect that at the time the corrupt practices act was enacted by Congress, and at the time the acts for which Mr. TRUMAN H. NEWBERRY and associates were indicted were done, there was no Federal law for the election of United States Senators by the people, and therefore a law regulating a primary before the people was unconstitutional.

If the Supreme Court would thus override the act of Congress expressing its judgment against the expenditure of vast sums of money in order to obtain nomination and thereby ultimately to be elected, whereby the doors of the penitentiary were opened and a seat in the United States Senate was confirmed, surely it can not be reasonable to expect that the Supreme Court will, after 50 years since the Slaughterhouse case was decided, overturn its doctrines and follow with the iconoclastic bludgeon and overturn United States against Harris, and the Civil Rights case, and the case of James v. Bowman (190 U. S.), decided in 1902, and the recent case of United States v. Wheeler (254 U. S.), decided in 1920.

"OBITER DICTA" BY JUSTICE STRONG.

We next come to the case of Virginia v. Rives (100 U. S., 313), which merely held that the petition for the removal of the case from the State court to the United States court came too late and was not in proper form. It is true the opinion of the court by Mr. Justice Strong has many things to say, like the dissenting opinion of that wonderful personality Mr. Justice Field. I quote the following from the opinion of Mr. Justice Strong, at page 321:

> But when a subordinate officer of the State, in violation of State law, undertakes to deprive an accused party of a right which the statute law accords him, as in the case at bar, it can hardly be said that he is denied or can not enforce in the judicial tribunals of the State the rights which belong to him.

And at page 322 we extract this line with special reference to the language of the same justice in the case of Ex parte Virginia:

> If, as in this case, the subordinate officer whose duty it is to select jurors fails to discharge that duty in the true spirit of the law; if he excludes all colored men solely because they are colored; or if the sheriff to whom a venire is given, composed of both white and colored citizens, neglects to summon the colored jurors only because they are colored; or if a clerk whose duty it is to take the 12 names from the box rejects all the colored jurors for the same reason, it can with no propriety be said the defendant's right is denied by the State and can not be enforced in the judicial tribunals.

Thus Mr. Justice Strong acknowledges that mere lawless and unauthorized acts of State officials, even if those acts do deprive certain citizens of their equal rights under the law, are not the acts of the "States," and are not chargeable against the States, and on account of such acts the State as a State can not be said to have deprived a person of the equal protection of the law.

THE REAL POINT DECIDED IN EX PARTE VIRGINIA.

The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE] quotes extensively from the case of Ex parte Virginia (100 U. S., 339), and seems to be entirely confident that this case concludes the question forever beyond the shadow of a doubt and beyond the vale of dispute. An examination of that case will disclose the fact that Judge Coles, of Virginia, was indicted in a Federal court for violating section 4 of the civil rights act of March 1, 1875, making it a criminal offense tryable in the Federal court for any person, or officer, to exclude or fail to summon any citizen as a juror in either the United States court or in the State court on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

There was a demurrer to the indictment and appeal from order overruling the demurrer directly to the Supreme Court of the United States, and the State of Virginia intervened, praying for a writ of habeas corpus for the discharge of its officer, claiming that Judge Coles was essential to the administration of justice in Virginia. The questions were presented, therefore, as between the United States (whose act of Congress was charged to have been violated) and Judge Coles and the State of Virginia, asking for his release under a writ of habeas corpus on the other hand. Mr. Justice Strong, in delivering the opinion of the court, did not discuss the constitutionality of the act itself, which sought to force by congressional action the States to place both white and Negro jurors in the jury box. Mr. Justice Strong based his opinion upon the assumption that the act in question was constitutional, and from that point of view the effect of his decision, leaving out mere dicta and irrelevant arguments, is logical. If the act of Congress on which the indictment is predicated was constitutional, then it made no difference who violated the act. The mere fact that County Judge Coles or even the governor of the State happened to be the person who violated the act of Congress would not exempt such violator from accountability in a Federal court. If the governor of a State sells whisky, in violation of admitted Federal laws, the governor may be arrested, tried, convicted, and punished. If the chief justice of a State violates the laws of Congress punishing interference with an election for Federal officeholders, such as Members of Congress, then the chief justice may be indicted, convicted, and punished. So we see that Judge Coles was not liable to indictment and prosecution "because he was a State officer" and "because as a State officer he was selecting only white persons to serve as jurors and was excluding all black persons because they were black," but was prosecuted because he was violating what Justice Strong thought was a constitutional act of Congress, and Judge Cole could not interpose his official connection with the State of Virginia to exempt him from liability to answer in a Federal court. He was liable in spite of being a State officer.

VIEWS OF DISSENTING OPINION LATER ADOPTED AND STILL PREVAIL UNDISTURBED.

Now, it will be observed that Mr. Justice Field, with whom Mr. Justice Clifford concurred, dissented from the majority opinion and attacked the constitutionality of the act of Congress itself and expressed their opinion that the United States could not lawfully and constitutionally enter within a State and undertake to control the laws for the administration of justice by prescribing the qualifications for juror in State courts. They pointed out that service as a juror is not a fundamental right, but is a privilege conferred by the State and a duty imposed by the State. In effect they argued that the United States could no more force colored jurors in the jury box than they could force colored judges on the bench or colored governors in the executive chairs. The sentiment back of the attitude of Mr. Justice Strong is shown by this extract from his opinion:

> One great purpose of these amendments (thirteenth and fourteenth amendments) was to raise the colored race from the condition of inferiority and servitude in which most of them had previously stood into perfect equality of civil rights with all other persons within the jurisdiction of the States.

That being his political philosophy, it is easy to understand his mental processes in arriving at the constitutionality of the act.

"THE CIVIL RIGHTS CASES" FOREVER FIXED THE LAW.

But we will pass on to the Civil Rights cases, which the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE] seems to think support the proposed legislation, "to punish a sheriff in a Federal court," and this "the Supreme Court—inferentially in the Civil Rights case—has held to be very proper." In the Civil Rights cases decided in 1883 after the most elaborate arguments in five cases coming from the States of Kansas, California, Missouri, New York, and Tennessee, just 14 years after the decision in Ex parte Virginia, the view expressed by the dissenting opinion of Mr. Justice Field in Ex parte Virginia as to the constitutionality of the civil rights act of March 1, 1875, was followed, adopted, and confirmed. The only dissenting opinion in the Civil Rights cases was by Mr. Justice Harlan and the opinion of the majority was written by Mr. Justice Bradley. While the indictment in the Civil Rights cases and the causes of action were predicated upon violations of sections 1 and 2 of the civil rights act of March 1, 1875, and, therefore, strictly and technically only those two sections, Nos. 1 and 2, were held to be unconstitutional, yet the reason and logic of the court would extend to the entire extent of the act. Therefore, I feel safe in stating that if section 4 of the civil rights act had been specifically before the court, it would have gone down and would have been declared null and void, just as sections Nos. 1 and 2 were. But we must remember that section 4 of the civil rights act of March 1, 1875, is the Federal legislation upon which the prosecution of the opposition in Ex parte Virginia were based. If that section was unconstitutional, as the purport and logic of all the subsequent cases would force us to conclude, then the decision itself falls, and the logic of the decision falls and the language of Mr. Justice Strong falls with them. The decision in Ex parte Virginia, like the house of the parable in the Bible, was built upon sand. It did not endure and fails in force and effect with the decision in the Civil Rights cases, which have been followed and affirmed time and time again up to the last case of United States v. Wheeler (254 U. S.).

PROF. BURGESS AGAINST PROF. BURGESS—"APPEAL FROM CÆSAR DRUNK TO CÆSAR SOBER."

The distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] quotes from Prof. Burgess, but he does not identify which Prof. Burgess, nor cite us to the volume and page of the quotation. If he refers to Prof. John W. Burgess, author of "Reconstruction and the Constitution," the professor of constitutional law in Columbia University, then I respectfully refer the gentleman and Members to pages 244, 245, 254, 255, 257, 296, 297, and 298 of said work, published by Charles Scribner's Sons in 1902. There seems to be some inconsistency in the views and position of Prof. Burgess, assuming that we both quote from the same man. Speaking of the civil rights act of May 31, 1870, Prof. Burgess plainly points out that the fourteenth amendment is addressed to "action by the State," and is intended to relieve against discriminatory and unfair and unequal class legislation and uses in part this language:

> There is not the slightest doubt in the mind of any good constitutional lawyer at the present time—1902—that Congress overstepped its constitutional powers in that part of the enforcement act of May 31, 1870, which related to the exercise of suffrage and intrenched upon the reserved powers of the States.

Again, on page 258 he tells us that the first part of the act of April 20, 1871, known as the Ku Klux act, was "unquestionably unconstitutional and an encroachment" upon the powers of the States, and that the fourteenth amendment could not be stretched to reach the acts of one or more private persons. If it be the same Prof. Burgess, then if his opinion is worth something on constitutional law it may also be worth something upon matters of political science, and he tells us at the bottom of page 244 that "from the point of view of sound political science the imposition of universal Negro suffrage upon the southern communities, in some of which the Negroes were in large majority, was one of the 'blunder crimes' of the century." There are many pages of interesting political philosophy in that volume of Prof. Burgess that I earnestly hope the gentlemen supporting this antilynching bill will read.

Dr. W. W. Willoughby, professor of jurisprudence at Johns Hopkins University, formerly an attorney at the District of Columbia bar and son of one of the attorneys in the prosecution of Judge Coles, reported in Ex parte Virginia (100 U. S.), is a well-grounded constitutional lawyer, and from a review of his commentaries I must conclude that he is a strong Hamiltonian Nationalist. After a review of all of the cases respecting the interpretation of the fourteenth amendment, Dr. Willoughby, at page 193, volume 1, of his work on the Constitution, summarizes the results as follows:

By way of résumé we may say that, as interpreted by the Supreme Court, the adoption of the fourteenth amendment has not brought about any fundamental change in our constitutional system. No new subjects have been brought within the sphere of direct control of the Federal Government. No new privileges and immunities of Federal citizenship have been created or recognized. To Congress has been given no new direct primary legislative power. It has not been authorized by the amendment to determine and define the privileges and immunities of Federal citizens nor to define and affirmatively to provide for the protection of the rights of life, liberty, and property, nor by direct legislation to enumerate and describe the privileges which shall constitute the equal protection of the laws. The only legislative power granted to Congress by the amendment is the power to provide modes of relief in cases where the States have deprived individuals or corporations of life, liberty, and property without due process of law, or denied to anyone within their jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws. The supervisory powers of the Federal courts have been enormously increased, as by the amendment, they may examine every claim of illegal violations by States of the prohibitions laid upon them by the amendment and where the claim is sustained grant the necessary relief, either by the issuance of the appropriate writ or by holding void the offending State laws. In fine, then, the fourteenth amendment has operated rather as a limitation upon the powers of the States than as a grant of additional powers to the General Government.

ONLY CASES ON FOURTEENTH AMENDMENT HELP HERE.

It is irrelevant to the issue here, which is the ascertaining of the true intent and effect of the fourteenth amendment, to cite such cases as those under the Mann white slave act and the safety appliance act and others based on the admitted power in Congress to regulate by affirmative legislation interstate commerce, or the Legal Tender cases based on the power to borrow money and raise revenue, or the appropriation of money to build post roads, or to prescribe punishment for violation of law by those conducting a Federal election, or by outsiders even in such cases. While the makers of the Constitution never saw nor dreamed of a steam train, nor telegraphs and telephones, nor a Federal reserve banking system, nor hundreds of other such matters, yet where Congress is given affirmative power over the general subject, such as interstate commerce, or finance, taxation, and money, or to raise an Army and Navy and conduct war, or to prohibit slavery or involuntary servitude, or to prohibit the manufacture, sale, and transportation of intoxicating liquors, then any legislation logically and reasonably relating to such subjects will be sustained by the Supreme Court as properly within the power of Congress.

SECTION 1 OF FOURTEENTH AMENDMENT ANALYZED.

But we are here dealing with an entirely different subject and a different kind of power in section 1 of the fourteenth amendment. A full and fair statement of the language is:

No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges and immunities of citizens of the United States, nor shall any State (make or enforce any law to) deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, nor (shall any State make or enforce any law which shall) deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the law.

While a State may act by its judicial and executive departments as well as by its legislative, yet the acts of its courts and governor, sheriffs, constables, and others must be so continuous and consistent—not an occasional instance of unfairness and inequality; no government can prevent occasional miscarriages of justice—as to amount to a rule of action, and a rule of action is law, and in such case if the same rule of action is applied in all similar cases—e. g., if all Negro prisoners were lynched, or even all charged with capital crimes, or even all charged with rape, were uniformly lynched—it might be held "State" action.

LANGUAGE OF FOURTEENTH AMENDMENT KNOWINGLY CHOSEN.

A prohibition against State action being found in section 10 of Article I of the Constitution was well understood by those who framed the fourteenth amendment, and they saw there the prohibition against any State levying any impost or duty on imports or exports was guarded by the condition, "without the consent of Congress," and, further, that "all such laws shall be subject to the revision and control of the Congress." Therefore, Congress had no "power to revise and control" the laws of the States as to other prohibited matters, such as laws impairing the obligations of contracts.

Section 5 of article 14 of amendments can not, therefore, mean the same thing as "power to revise and control" State laws. Section 5 of amendment 14 being identical with section 2, amendment 13, and section 2, amendment 15, could relate only to the affirmative—several in number—powers contained in the fourteenth amendment. Amendment 15 will mean the same thing if it be stated thus:

Neither the United States nor any State shall deny or abridge on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude the right of citizens of the United States to vote.

Yet section 5507, Revised Statutes, was held unconstitutional because in terms it applied to all elections, State and Federal, condemning individual acts of private citizens, where "Congress has no constitutional power to punish bribery at all elections."

The court distinctly said in James v. Bowman (190 U. S., 127) that the "amendment (15) relates solely to action by the United States or by any States, and does not contemplate wrongful individual acts." The distinguished gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE] told us that said case of Bowman v. James, supra, was "simply another instance in which the Government needed a good lawyer." He says the indictment was merely defective because it failed to allege that the intimidation of voters was "because of race, color, and previous condition of servitude." But the court held the statute (sec. 5507) unconstitutional. We have never heard that a statute can be held unconstitutional merely because an indictment is defective. In such case the action alone would be merely dismissed for failure of material allegations. The Government not only needed a good lawyer in court, but it needed a good lawyer in Congress. Will the gentleman from Kansas, in addition to other amendments he will propose, also propose to amend the bill to this general effect: "Whoever shall lynch or assist in lynching any person on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude"?

The able and eloquent gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE], quoting from the dissenting opinion by Justice Field (100 U. S., 414), commends his "logical deductions" as to the consequences of the majority opinion in that, and also such cases as Ex parte Virginia. And here, indeed, is the "logical deduction," the revolutionary destruction of our wonderful Federal system:

These decisions do indeed, in my judgment, constitute a new departure. They give to the Federal Government the power to strip the States of the right to vindicate their authority in their own courts against a violator of their laws when the transgressor happens to be an officer of the United States or alleges that he is denied or can not enforce some right under their laws. And they assert for the Federal Government a power to subject a judicial officer of a State to punishment for the manner in which he discharges his duties under her laws. The power to punish at all existing, the nature and extent of the punishment must depend upon the will of Congress and may be carried to a removal from office. In my judgment—and I say it without intending any disrespect to my associates—no such advance has ever before been made toward the conversion of our Federal system into a consolidated and centralized government.

Such, indeed, would have been the "beginning of a new era" of centralized federalized bureaucratic red-tape tyranny, except for such clear-headed and courageous men as Justice Stephen Johnson Field. Well might he say (100 U. S., p. 353):

It is difficult to speak of this ruling in language of moderation.

What would he say of this antilynching bill? Born in Connecticut, the son of a Congregationalist minister, 1816, the brother of Cyrus W., who united the world by submarine cable, of David Dudley, the reformer of legal procedure, and of Henry Martyn, a great editor, he was appointed by President Lincoln in 1863 to the Supreme Court, and served 36 years, the longest in the history of the court, and later his nephew, David J. Brewer, came in 1890 to sit beside him on the Supreme Bench. Justice Field was no apologist for lynching, and he himself once saved a man charged with stealing gold from being lynched during the "gold rush" in 1850. His own life was frequently threatened and was saved once, only when the deputy United States marshal killed the assailant.

This great judge saw the argument of his dissent in Ex parte Virginia and Ex parte Clarke adopted as the basis of decision in the Harris case, 1882, when Justice Harlan alone dissented, and in the Civil Rights cases, 1883, when Justice Harlan alone dissented, and his own nephew, Justice Brewer, wrote the opinion in James v. Bowman (190 U. S., 135) in 1902, and again Justice Harlan dissented with Justice Brown. Now, in 1920, 41 years after Ex parte Virginia was decided, in the Wheeler case (254 U. S., 289), argued by Hon. Charles E. Hughes for the winner, the Chief Justice, White, follows the reasoning and authorities inspired by the logic of Justice Field, and now Justice Clarke alone dissents. But for such strong and brave judges as Waite, Miller, Field, Bradley, Woods, Gray, Matthews, and Blatchford, who resisted the frenzy of fanaticism and the fury of partisanship, we would to-day indeed be in the "medieval fogs" of Federal imperialism and the "sunlight of human freedom" would be gone from the States which foster liberty and local self-government. The stars representing States would have fallen from the flag and the blue field, symbolic of justice and truth, disappear from sight in the consequent darkness.

THE ONLY POSSIBLE GROUND FOR THE BILL.

I sincerely believe that if any part of this bill ever passes Congress, it will be only that section, to be much amended and modified, dealing with the neglect of a sheriff to protect a prisoner in his custody. This part is, I believe, demonstrably unconstitutional. Let us frame the syllogism. All rights of citizens under our dual government are either State or Federal, and the Federal Government can legislate to protect only Federal rights. (The Wheeler case, 254 U. S.) The rights of life, liberty, and property of individual citizens as against each other are State rights and must be protected by State laws and enforced in State courts. (The Cruikshank case, 92 U. S., 553; the Harris case, 106 U. S., 638-639; the Civil Rights cases, 109 U. S., 17.) Therefore direct and affirmative legislation by Congress to protect the life and liberty of a citizen of a State in a State and in the exercise of a State right is unconstitutional.

DISSENTING VIEWS OF JUSTICE HARLAN.

As previously stated, much can be learned by way of contrast from a dissenting opinion, because if the language of the majority opinion fails to express clearly the full meaning of the decision the dissent often clears it up, because the dissenting justice surely understands the mind of the majority, with whom he has consulted and debated, each side honestly seeking the truth. All the argument made for this antilynching bill was made by Justice Harlan in 36 pages against 17 pages of the majority opinion. Justice Harlan contended, as gentlemen for the bill contend here that "such legislation"—civil rights bill by Congress—"may be of a direct and primary character, operating upon States"—counties here—"their officers and agents"—sheriffs here—"and also upon at least such individuals and corporations as exercise public functions and wield power and authority under the State, as hotels, opera houses, railroads, schools, and so forth." Basing his opinion upon that now famous expression, mere obiter dictum, in Ex parte Virginia (100 U. S.), a decision predicated upon an unconstitutional act—section 4 of civil rights bill, March 1, 1875—as to how a State acts in part by its "executive officers," Justice Harlan contended vigorously that hotel keepers, and so forth, conducting business impressed with public interest, having special rights and duties as such under the law, were "public officers," executing public law, and their acts were the "acts of the State" and could be controlled by Congress under the fourteenth amendment. Again, Justice Harlan, page 34, says:

> This court has uniformly held that the National Government has the power, whether expressly given or not, to secure and protect rights guaranteed by the Constitution. * * * That doctrine ought not now to be abandoned.

Thus he asserts that the rights he and others not on the court thought were secured and protected by the fourteenth amendment—viz, life, liberty, and property—were, in their opinion, being abandoned.

TRUE MEANING OF CIVIL RIGHTS CASES.

Some gentlemen supporting this antilynching bill exclaim that the Civil Rights cases do not stand in their way. Some say it can be distinguished and explained away, and the distinguished gentleman and able lawyer from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE] says it actually "decides this very issue"—presumably in their favor. I respectfully submit the contrary, and submit that Justice Harlan, whose disciples they are, fully understood the decision of the majority of eight to one, and, on page 44, he tells us:

> The theory of the opinion of the majority of the court—the foundation upon which their reasoning seems to rest—is that the General Government can not in advance of hostile State laws or State proceedings actively interfere for the protection of any of the rights and immunities secured by the fourteenth amendment; * * * that congressional legislation must necessarily be predicated upon such supposed State laws or State proceedings, and be directed to the correction of their operation and effect.

Again, at page 52, Justice Harlan tells us what the court decided in the Civil Rights cases:

> The opinion of the court proceeds upon the ground that the power of Congress * * * is to correct and annul State laws and State proceedings. * * * In the absence of State laws and State action adverse to such rights and privileges the Nation may not actively interfere for their protection and security, even against corporations and individuals exercising public or quasi public functions. So I understand to be the position of my brethren.

Need there now be any doubt about the effect of the Civil Rights cases?

IS THE CRIME OF A SHERIFF THE "ACT OF A STATE"?

But gentlemen supporting this antilynching bill, picking over these old dry bones, hunting some morsel of comfort, tell us that when the sheriff, a public official, "neglects" the duty the State itself has imposed upon him and his prisoner is lynched such is "State action" and "State proceedings." Some of our friends for this bill take comfort from expressions of the majority opinion in the Civil Rights cases, page 23, "such, for example, as taking private property without due process of law"—necessarily by State laws or State proceedings, otherwise Congress could legislate against stealing—"or allowing persons who have committed certain crimes—horse stealing, for example—to be seized and hung by the posse comitatus without regular trial." This "allowing" must be continuous and with knowledge of the State authorities, and by a legal agency. The posse comitatus is not a mob but a legally summoned body of citizens to assist the regular law officers. This refers to a very common practice in colonial days, and in some States, even after independence and later in the frontier Territories and States as the "frontier" moved gradually westward. They were called "regulators" in some States and "vigilance committees" in others. In North Carolina Gov. Tryon tried to suppress them, and hanged a few of them May 16, 1771, and just four years later the survivors and associates of these same "regulators" joined in the first formal challenge to royal tyranny, the "Mecklenburg declaration of independence," May 20, 1775. The blood of patriots is the seed of liberty. It was the recognized practice for the sheriff to summon the posse comitatus as he rode in hot pursuit of the horse thief, and when apprehended all openly joined in a public hanging, went home to their families feeling only a sense of stern duty performed, and all was approved by State authority. It is true there was no such formal written statute, but it was a common and approved practice, a rule of action, a uniform course of conduct in the premises similar to the customs from which the English common law sprang. This is the practice to which Justice Bradley referred, and his full meaning must be gathered, not from a few sentences but from the whole opinion, for in the same paragraph, near the top of page 24, he says:

> The fourteenth amendment extends its protection to races and classes, and prohibits State legislation which has the effect of denying to any race or class or to any individual the equal protection of the law.

In the very next paragraph the opinion asks:

> And is the Constitution—fourteenth amendment—violated until the denial of the right has some State sanction or authority?

And in the next paragraph:

> If those laws—of the State—are adverse to his rights and do not protect him—as one of a class—his remedy will be found in the corrective legislation which Congress has adopted, or may adopt, for counteracting the effect of the State laws or State action prohibited by the fourteenth amendment.

WHAT ARE "STATE PROCEEDINGS" OR "STATE ACTIONS"?

We have no dispute as to what are "State laws." Advocates of the bill cite us to Home Telephone Co. v. Los Angeles (227 U. S., 287) as evidencing "State action" held in violation of the fourteenth amendment. Here the municipality, created by an agent of the State, with charter power to regulate telephone rates and exercising such discretion, passed an ordinance fixing rates admitted by demurrer to be confiscatory. In legal effect it was the same as if the legislature itself had passed the act. The court uses such expressions as these: "Possession of State power" and using same to do a wrong; "where an officer or other representative of the State in the exercise of the authority with which he is clothed misuses the power possessed to do a wrong forbidden by the amendment"; "State officers abusing powers lawfully conferred on them"; "that State powers might be abused by those who possessed them"; and, finally and conclusively, "The subject must be tested by assuming that the officer possessed the power if the act be one which there would not be any opportunity of doing but for the possession of some State authority."

Would the sheriff have no opportunity to lynch a person except as incident to his office as sheriff? Are not most of the lynchings cases where the person lynched has not yet passed into the custody of the sheriff? Will any partisan ever charge that any sheriff anywhere at any time ever used his official power to arrest a person charged with crime just for the purpose of lynching or of letting the accused be lynched? The lynching is done, not by reason and virtue of official power in the sheriff, but in spite of and in defiance of such official power. The sheriff does not by "color of office use his power to do," affirmatively, an official wrong, as did the City Council of Los Angeles, but it is only claimed here by friends of the bill that some sheriffs in rare instances, compared with all arrests, "failed and neglected," negatively and passively, to exert the full limit of personal and official power to protect a prisoner, and they must even also admit that such "failure and neglect" is in violation of duty imposed by State law, and in no sense "in pursuance of and by virtue of and by reason of official station and power."

EXAMPLES OF "STATE ACTION" BY SUBORDINATES.

A leading case is Yick Wo v. Hopkins (118 U. S., 356), where the city of San Francisco officially passed an ordinance giving "discretion" to say what individuals might not carry on a laundry business in a given section, and this "discretion" was shown to be "arbitrarily" exercised to run out only Chinamen. Also Ex parte Young (209 U. S., 123), where a commission was created by the legislature with authority to fix railroad rates, and so exercised its discretionary official power as to confiscate the railroad's property. So, in Raymond v. Traction Co. (207 U. S., 20), a board of tax assessors exercised official discretion to assess certain property unfairly, unequally, and in a discriminatory manner. There were the official acts of a public agency. Will any person claim that any sheriff ever "failed or neglected" to protect a prisoner as an "official act," "by virtue of his office," as in discharge of "official authority with which he is clothed by the State"?

INDIVIDUALS NOT PUNISHABLE AS "CRIMINALS" BECAUSE A STATE BY "STATE ACTION" OR "STATE PROCEEDINGS" DENIES THE EQUAL PROTECTION OF THE LAWS.

The fourteenth amendment is satisfied when all persons of the same classes and all classes enjoy equal and impartial justice under the laws of the State, however much the laws may vary in the different States. (Texas v. Leeper, 139 U. S., 462). The action of a State can never be reviewed in a Federal court unless there be an invasion by the State of affirmative Federal power. (New Orleans v. L'Hote, 177 U. S., 587.) Mere miscarriage of justice in a State court is not a denial of equal protection of the laws. It is understood that ideal justice by any Government is impossible. (Gibson v. Mississippi, 162 U. S., 565.) Even though it be made to appear that a State court is denying a person due process of law and the equal protection of the laws, a Federal court can not enjoin the proceedings in the State court, but must wait and give the highest appellate court of the State an opportunity to correct same. (Harkrader v. Wadley, 172 U. S., 148.) It is absurd to say that "because of denial by a State to any person of the equal protection of the laws is prohibited (to a State) therefore Congress may establish laws for their equal protection." (Civil Rights cases, 109 U. S., 3.)

THE "ACID TEST" APPLIED.

The precise question is, Has a prisoner charged with a State crime the right to be protected then and there by physical force to the full limit of reasonable possibility? Remember rights are both State and Federal. (Wheeler Case, 254 U. S., 289.) If such be a Federal right under the fourteenth amendment, then all persons who invade that right may be made liable under a Federal law. But persons who invaded that right and took a prisoner from a sheriff and killed him (lynched him) were held not to have violated any Federal right in United States v. Harris (106 U. S., 629). The Cruikshank case (92 U. S., 553) holds that even after the adoption of the fourteenth amendment the rights of "life, liberty, and property" depend solely upon State protection. The fourteenth amendment did not convert what was always a State right into a Federal right. Said fourteenth amendment only prohibited the States in their laws and legal proceedings from destroying these rights of life, liberty, and property except by due process of law, and prohibited the States, by their laws, or proceedings of agents authorized by law and clothed with power under the law, and acting by virtue of official station and power, to deny to any person the uniform protection of the laws, so far as any law enforced by due process can give protection. It contemplates possible miscarriage of justice.

WHEN DO THE LAWS GIVE "EQUAL PROTECTION"?

Yick Wo v. Hopkins (118 U. S.) tells us it means the "protection of equal laws." It was the death knell of class legislation. It means no unfair, discriminatory, partial, favorite-serving, class-oppressing legislation. It referred to "laws" and not to persons. It also has been construed to include rulings, orders, and ordinances of such State agencies as municipal corporations, railroad commissions, tax commissions, and so forth, having discretionary power to promulgate orders having the force and effect of laws. But all such must be "in pursuance of authority conferred by the State." The official position must be "the opportunity to do the wrong." (Los Angeles case, 227 U. S., 288.) But where the act done by the agency was not authorized by the State and was in fact prohibited by the State, no Federal right is violated. It is a mere personal wrong, an individual crime, which the State must redress. (The Barney case, 193 U. S., 430.) Sheriffs are prohibited by the State laws to fail to protect prisoners, and in most States such failure is a crime and cause for removal from office.

THE REDUCTIO AD ABSURDUM OF THE ARGUMENT BASED ON "NEGLECT" AND "INACTION."

The same argument was made as to "State action by executive officer" to support the civil rights bill. (See dissenting opinion of Justice Harlan.) Now, it is the duty of a State government to give all citizens the "equal protection of the laws," and if that means actual physical defense to each individual by officers of the State, then, indeed, it would include the murder of one citizen by another or the murder by any sheriff, constable, or policeman of his personal enemy. It could just as fairly be argued that a State by "inaction," "neglect," "passivity," "failure," in not making or enacting proper criminal statutes to deter criminals and electing judges and selecting jurors who let criminals escape unpunished have thereby failed to "afford equal protection to her citizens," and that because of such failure the United States Government could step in and legislate against crime and try criminals in Federal courts.

ARE FEDERAL LAWS IDEAL AND FEDERAL COURTS FAULTLESS AND FEDERAL OFFICERS PERFECT?

To ask the question is to answer it. Federal and State laws are human. So are Federal courts and State courts. So are Federal officers and State officers—all human and liable to err. A sheriff is human. It is his duty to protect his prisoner, but it is his duty also to protect all citizens not prisoners. The sheriff has a delicate duty. When shall he begin shooting and order his deputies and the posse comitatus to shoot? That may result in the death of many innocent persons not members of any mob but innocent bystanders, attracted by idle curiosity, or perhaps persons passing on business, pleasure, or missions of mercy. This antilynching bill is not only unconstitutional but is unwise. It will demonstrably increase lynchings. As the United States marshal can not be everywhere at the same time, he will not be present with his deputies to defend the prisoner threatened by a mob.

Admittedly the marshal can not intervene till the sheriff "fails and neglects." How can the marshal decide until it is too late to save the prisoner without producing an armed conflict with State officials? Suppose the United States marshal says, "Sheriff, deliver me that prisoner. You have failed to do your duty to protect him." The sheriff answers, "It is false. I have done my duty. Here is the prisoner safe and alive." Armed conflict follows, and while State and Federal officials fight over who shall afford to the prisoner "equal protection of the law," the mob lynches the prisoner whom both State and Federal officers fail to protect. But if the marshal waits till the sheriff has actually "failed and neglected" it is too late. The prisoner is dead. Then what will be the result of any such unwise legislation? It will be that in cases of crimes where sheriffs conclude a mob will assemble to lynch a criminal, the sheriff will stay away, decline to learn anything about it, for two reasons: (1) To avoid an armed conflict with Federal officials; and (2) to escape liability in a Federal court on charges of "failure and neglect" to protect a prisoner. He will be studiously ignorant in self-defense. He will "not set foot in Michigan." The next consequence will be good, honest, brave men will not seek nor accept the office of sheriff, always a place of peril and now with doubled dangers and perils. With inferior men as sheriff, and similar State peace officers, the criminal instincts will be let loose and an orgy of crime will follow.

Mr. Chairman and Members, State officials and State citizens are Americans. They are gradually wiping out this stain on America. Do not, I beg you, increase their difficulties and aggravate the trouble. Let them build up State pride and county pride, and let all of these units of American local self-government vie with each other building healthy, vigorous, self-sustaining sentiment for law enforcement to protect life, liberty, and property. In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I reproduce a voice from the distant past, but thereby more impressive and convincing. In speaking in the United States Senate on February 26, 1875, on the "civil rights bill," which became a law March 1, 1875, and was declared unconstitutional in One hundred and ninth United States, page 3, year 1883, Hon. Thomas F. Bayard, of Delaware, used these words:

I do not comprehend altogether the motive for pressing such a measure, and I do not wish to impute motive unless it is very clear. I can see no good to be accomplished by this bill. I can see only new and increased heart-burnings and unkindness between those races whom every good man must wish to see at peace with each other in their relative spheres of life and usefulness.

I have had much encouragement of late in the belief that a more liberal and kinder tone and sense of justice was being aroused in the breasts of men of my own race toward the black men all over the country, by which their educational facilities were being increased, and by which a better understanding was being brought about between the races. I fear this bill will create cause of collision, of unkindness, and misunderstanding, in which pecuniary loss must occur to the white, with no benefit whatever to the black. The good sense of both parties must in some degree prevent it; but I trust such speedy decision of the court will be had as to deprive this measure of the sting, and take from it all capacity for mischievous interference by those who are disposed to find profit and power in public disorders and contention. It is in the interest of this ill-omened class that this measure is devised and pressed. It will be found to be totally without benefit to any, but fruitful of annoyance and trouble to thousands.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama is recognized for 17 minutes.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, the inconsistencies of the present administration when dealing with questions of labor and industry are something fearful and wonderful to behold.

We are about to have the greatest coal strike in the history of this Nation. On April 1 next, the existing contract between the operators and the miners will expire. The operators have declined to negotiate with the miners for a new contract. They have declined to consider making a new contract. They want a strike, they are courting a strike. Yet in the face of this impending calamity, the administration lifts up its hands in helplessness and says that it will make no effort to prevent the struggle which will prove so costly to the Nation.

This coal strike will prove little less than a national catastrophe. What will it mean? It will mean first the greatest shock that business can possibly have. It will mean the most depressing influence upon economic conditions that imagination could well conceive. But more than that it will mean suffering upon the part of the public, shivering and cold to thousands of people, innocent women and children. It will mean that many lines of industry will be paralyzed, with thousands of workers thrown out of employment, and that hunger will stalk. Conditions will be even worse than they are now, when some three or four million men are out of employment, and literally tens of thousands are suffering for the common necessaries of life. It will mean that the miners and their families will be thrown out of their homes, naked to the elements. It will mean that their wives and children will suffer for bread, as well as for shelter.

On the other hand, it will mean on the part of the coal operators no great sacrifice, because the coal business is greatly depressed. They have profiteered upon the American people and along with the display of vaunted "patriotism" in the trying days of the war they have extorted from the consumers of this country profits which attained the verge of actual dishonesty. Of all the conscienceless profiteers none have been more ruthless than those who charged extortionate prices for coal during 1920. From 1916 on have been the fattest years in the history of the coal business—the aggregate profits of the operators run literally into billions. They have fattened their bank accounts and have invested in Liberty bonds and other securities, and now when business is bad and they are not making any money anyway, they can well afford to shut down for a few months and take a turn at trying to destroy the miners' organization.

In the face of this appalling situation, or perhaps it may be because of the last fact I have just assigned, the administration now throws up its hands and confesses its helplessness. In yesterday's Washington Herald appears an inspired article, including an interview with Secretary of Commerce Hoover, in which he announces to the people of the United States that it is not the purpose of the administration to try to do anything whatsoever to avert the strike. I quote from that article:

FEARS STRIKE IN COAL FIELDS IS INEVITABLE—SECRETARY HOOVER SAYS ALL CONCILIATION HAS FAILED—OPERATORS WANT FINAL SHOW-DOWN.

Soft-coal miners and mine union leaders believe they have cause to call a gigantic strike on April 1 next unless granted a new and satisfactory wage agreement by the operators. But they hope the strike may be averted.

Administration officials hope the strike may be averted, but see no way now of averting it.

Coal operators would like to see the strike go into effect for a real "show-down."

These are the outstanding phases of a serious economic situation literally saturated with politics both within the American Federation of Labor and in the field of national parties, pregnant with suffering and business losses and charged with threats and counter threats involving the "open-shop" campaign, which has stirred labor.

FEARS STRIKE INEVITABLE.

That a strike would seem inevitable in the bituminous fields at the expiration of the miners' present national agreement, March 31, is the belief of Secretary Hoover. If the bituminous workers walk out, say labor leaders, the anthracite miners will follow them, throwing 500,000 men into the strike.

"There seems little possibility," Secretary Hoover said, "that any machinery might be set up to avoid the strike. The Government has taken no further steps to avoid the walkout. Unless something unforeseen occurs to adjust the difficulty, it seems that the stage is set for a strike."

The Government's position has long been known to be that sooner or later there would have to be a show-down in the mine fields. Its attitude is that if a strike must be, it must be, and the sooner the issue is disposed of the better.

Again I quote:

On the other hand, the miners' officials hold that some operators and other undefinable forces are slackening the industry to aid the alleged fight of finance for the open shop.

James Lord, chief of the mining division of the American Federation of Labor, puts it thus:

"What good would Government intervention do if the fight against organized labor is ignored?

"That issue is even beyond the living-wage question. Can a reduction in wages bring any increased employment when there isn't any employment?

"The miner's problem is not the only one. It is merely one typical product of the frenzy against the rising tide of organized labor."

ALL OFFERS FAIL.

Secretary Hoover, during the unemployment conference here last fall, attempted to effect an agreement in advance between coal operators and mine union officials to arbitrate the wage question. He was told by the miners' leaders that this could not be done.

President Lewis, of the United Mine Workers, sought to bring a conference, but called it off when some of the operators declined to participate.

So the situation stands just there. The Government sees nothing further to do. Union leaders see no possible hope in Government intervention because they hold that refusal of the operators to meet them means nothing but a fight against organized labor.

Meantime, the public may wonder what is to be done.

It is not merely for the incapacity of the administration that I complain. There is something more sinister. It is the smug complaceny with which Mr. Hoover says that no further effort will be made to avoid the strike.

What a strange contrast, what a shocking contrast, between the statements now made on behalf of the administration and the address which the President delivered in this Chamber only six weeks ago. Then he was for stopping strikes. Then he was for intervening with the strong arm of the law. Then he advocated industrial courts which would effectually prevent strikes. Now, it seems, he is willing for the struggle to come. He spoke in the abstract on December 6; the administration spoke in the particular on yesterday.

The administration is complacent toward the strike because it believes that it can come to but one end. Four millions of men are out of employment in the country. It will be easy to hire strike breakers. The miners have had slack work for many months; they have been barely able to exist; they have exhausted their slender reserves. They can carry on an effective labor struggle only with the greatest difficulty. It seems to the administration that they are bound to lose; that men who have no savings will be easy to starve into submission. The administration is complacent because the hard-hearted and arrogant coal operators are ready and want the strike to come on.

What a contrast between the exceeding tenderness of the administration toward the railroads. [Applause.] The transportation employees, engineers, conductors, and trainmen hold the key to transportation. These crafts were well organized. Their threatened strike meant possible success. They had a chance to win. No effort was spared on the part of the administration to prevent it. Public opinion was marshaled to drive the railroad workers back into submission. There was no strike. But it does not take the same high degree of skill to work about a coal mine. Plenty of men are out of work, practically starving, who are skilled enough to work around coal mines. The administration feels that it will not hurt the operators to have a great strike at this time; that the industry will not seriously suffer and that the strike will have just a single result—the destruction of the miners' organization. So that the administration is smugly and complacently lending itself to the "open-shop" crowd that aim at nothing less than the destruction of all labor organizations.

Now I yield to the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. HERSEY. I am interested to know, before you close your speech, whether you are going to develop a recommendation to the President of the United States as to how he is going to stop the strike on your advice?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I could develop many——

Mr. HERSEY. Name one.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Let him use the influence of the administration to get the operators to meet their employees to talk over their differences; that is the least that he can do. Why does not the President call a conference between the operators and the miners? It will place the blame for this strike so that the American people can see clearly where it belongs. Let them talk their troubles over in public. If they can not agree we will then see who is at fault.

Mr. HERSEY. The remedy is a labor conference, then?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. That is merely one remedy—the easiest one, the most obvious. This struggle has been coming on for months. Every man acquainted with the labor situation in this country and who knows nothing about the mining industry knows that the operators have been waiting and watching and longing throughout the last two or three years for an opportunity to "go to the mat" with the miners' organization. A man who does not know that is not fit to be President nor Secretary of Commerce. Men who are well informed and know the animus of the operators know that they have been looking for this chance and that they welcome the occasion for a struggle with their employees now, as it seems to them the time is opportune. And the administration turns its thumbs down—"Do what you will; the Government of the United States will not intervene, either by the influence of the President or through the forms of law."

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman state when this agreement that expires in April was entered into?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. It is a continuation of a contract made during the war.

Mr. WALSH. And is it not a fact that there are a large number of coal miners who do not belong to an organization, and that are willing to continue to work?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I do not know. I will say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that there are a large number of coal miners who are not permitted by their employers to belong to any kind of an organization. Their employers have the power and the tyrannical spirit to say to the men who work for them, "You shall not belong to a labor organization and continue to earn your bread in this community." With these men it is a choice of renouncing their membership in the organization or of starvation. What the administration is fixing for is to bring hundreds of communities in the United States into the condition of suffering and lawlessness existing in West Virginia, where a barbarous fight between the miners and their employers has been waged for the past two or three years.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Certainly; any question.

Mr. WALSH. Is it not a fact that this agreement which expires in April was entered into after the strike which occurred in 1919, which was settled through the intervention of President Wilson?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Oh, no——

Mr. WALSH. I think the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Not "settled through the intervention of President Wilson." I respect Mr. Wilson. Let us not put that atrocity upon his shoulders. While the President was sick in his bed and unable to give the matter his attention, a member of his Cabinet took advantage of the situation and used the powers of the United States to throttle the strike; not to settle it, but to crush it. And in the same tyrannical spirit the strike which now threatens would be crushed if it was not believed by those in power that to let it run its course will mean the destruction of the miners' organization; that spirit is behind this complacency and this willingness for the strike to come on.

Mr. UPSHAW. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Yes.

Mr. UPSHAW. Does the gentleman believe that if the President would take the initial step of calling a conference between the operators and the miners the effect would be composing and wholesome?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. The effect would be wholesome. Let me say to the gentleman from Georgia that I know coal operators pretty well. I have a lot of them in my own district. I know their spirit and disposition. Of course, some of them are good men. But I want to tell you that the dominant element among the coal operators is thoroughly un-American. They care little who may suffer so long as it is not themselves. Their consuming desire now is to go down to battle with their employees for the purpose of destroying the miners' organizations. I have grave doubts whether even the President of the United States, close as he is to those great interests, could by his intervention stop the strike. But I do say that common good will and loyalty to the public welfare and to his country demand that the President shall do all that in him lies to prevent this great catastrophe. [Applause.] I say that if the President allows this strike to come on without using his influence with these oppressive employers—without asking the intervention of Congress, without lifting his hand, without doing anything whatsoever—he will mark himself so that he will be known throughout the history of our country.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Surely.

Mr. WALSH. Has the gentleman information to the effect that the supposed intervention of President Wilson in 1919——

Mr. HUDDLESTON. There was no "supposed intervention of President Wilson." There was the intervention of a Federal judge out in Indiana; there was the intervention of the Department of Justice for the intimidation of the miners. There was no intervention of President Wilson. The President was sick. Nobody can say that any influence was used except the might of the strong arm.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman will recall that a conference was called in Washington at that time, supposed to be called by the President.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. In August, 1919, there was a conference held. It should be known as the "Gary conference," for the president of the Steel Corporation dominated it, and prevented the adoption of any program for peace in the industrial world. Gary thwarted its purpose, which was to adopt a program for peace between employers and wage earners in all lines of industry. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT.

Salaries: Secretary, $7,500; executive clerk, $5,000; chief clerk, $4,000; appointment clerk, $3,500; record clerk, $2,500; expert stenographers—one $3,000, one $2,500; accounting and disbursing clerk, $2,500; two correspondents, at $2,500 each; clerks—two at $2,500 each, four at $2,000 each, seven of class 4, two of class 3, four of class 2, three of class 1; messengers—three at $900 each, three at $840 each; three laborers, at $720 each; in all, $80,880: Provided, That employees of the executive departments and other establishments of the executive branch of the Government may be detailed from time to time to the office of the President of the United States for such temporary assistance as may be necessary.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON] has devoted some time to the discussion of the pending situation in the coal-mining industry, and seeks to take to task the President of the United States and the administration for not doing something to relieve and remedy conditions.

As a matter of fact, I think the gentleman will find that an agreement was entered into between the operators and the coal employees in 1919 as the result of a conference being held here in an attempt to adjust difficulties, and a situation that was threatening then somewhat similar to that which the gentleman says is pending now. I wonder if the gentleman is recommending to the President of the United States to take the same steps that his predecessor in office took when he came before Congress and demanded that we pass the Adamson law, which was put upon the statute books, and which is at the basis of most of the troubles that confront the railroads of the country to-day, notwithstanding that later we provided the Railroad Wage Board for adjusting difficulties which arose between the railroad managers and owners and their employees. At that time we were told that we would be asked for further legislation to alleviate certain other conditions arising out of transportation problems.

The fact is that this coal dispute which is threatening is a serious question, but as yet there is no indication that there is need for the strong arm of the law to be placed either upon the operators or upon those who are working for them. In many States of the country there is a large number of coal miners who are willing to return to work, who are willing to accept the pay that is offered to them, but who have been prevented because the leaders and officers and managers of certain organizations that have within their control vast numbers of aliens who have been taken into these unions will not permit them to do so in peace; and while it may result in some discomfort and in some suffering until there has been an utter failure on the part of these men to agree and on the part of the operators and the miners to come to some understanding whereby this agreement which was entered into might be renewed or some other contract or agreement might be entered upon, I submit that there is no occasion for the distinguished gentleman from Alabama to rise and condemn the administration or the President, because the gentleman well knows that the people who toil in this country have no better friend than the present administration or the present Chief Executive of the United States.

And if their problems are brought here to this House they will find that upon the majority side and upon the minority side they will give respectful attention and that whatever relief or remedy is required will be afforded them. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON] has become a spokesman for the minority side whenever questions affecting organized labor arise. They have their spokesmen upon this side, and we must remember that organized labor, powerful as it is, has men of influence holding positions under high salaries, who are not recreant to the trust imposed in them and who do not let slip any opportunity to bring to the attention of the American people and of legislative bodies, both this Congress and the State legislatures, questions for which they demand solution. When they are right, their demands will be acceded to, and once in a while they are right; but they certainly were not right when they succeeded in holding a gun at the head of Congress in 1916 and put through that measure which has been called the Adamson law. [Applause.]

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I have heard a lot of silly talk on this floor about the labor leaders being eager for strikes, that they always use their influence for strikes. There never was a sillier thing said in this or any other body. The real fact is that the labor leader is always the most conservative member of his organization. I will not take the time to tell why that is so, but it is a fact known to all men who know anything about the subject.

It is also a fact that for a time there has been dissension in the ranks of the United Mine Workers. That dissension grows out of the fact that their president, John Lewis, is more conservative than many of the men that he is supposed to lead. That is really the origin and the root of the trouble. I do not take any side in this dissension. It is not a matter that I feel free to speak upon, except to say that the troubles which Mr. Lewis has in holding his leadership lies in the fact that he holds to more moderate and conservative views than a substantial and important element of the membership of his organization.

And let me say this further to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], that Mr. Lewis, just as every other real labor leader, leads merely because he is pushed on by those whom he represents. No labor leader will ask more than his members want him to ask—many leaders ask much less and so soon cease to be leaders. There will be no strike unless the plain coal diggers want that strike. They are the men who will force action. They are the men who move their organization into activity.

The matter involved in the threatened strike is not, as the gentleman seems to believe, a question of wages, nor is it a matter of labor conditions. It is the life of the miners' organization. The proposition is not merely to reduce wages. That is not what the fight is about. The operators refuse to negotiate with the organization. They want to destroy it; they want to take away the miners' only means of protection. That is the trouble. The real purpose of the operators, now that they have got the mine workers on the hip, due to the depression in the industry, due to the thousands of men being out of employment who will be available as strike breakers, now that this is their golden hour, their purpose is to destroy, once and for all, the mine workers' organization. I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts, does he sympathize with that purpose?

The President the friend of the workingman! The present administration the friend of the men who work! How does he prove it? What has he done for the men who toil? How has he demonstrated that he is their friend and that he is interested in their concerns? Has he demonstrated it by proposing here in his address on December 6 measures designed to throttle them and to render their organizations ineffective? Is that the great thing that he has done for them? Did he show himself their friend by putting the machinery of the Government into motion to suppress the threatened railroad strike—to suppress it not in the interest of the public, not in the interest of the workers, but in behalf of the railroad managers and financiers, who feared that there was a chance for the workers to win in a strike? How has the President proven that he is the workers' friend? Heaven save them from such friends!

The President has a splendid opportunity now in front of him. If the President be the friend of labor, let him use a little of his influence as President of this great Nation to get the coal operators to talk to their employees about making another contract. Ought not a contract to be made? Every man will admit that it ought to be made, every man who is fair. Why does not the President try to get these friends of his, these big business men, these profiteers, these people who furnished the money and the brains to put him in there as President—why does he not use his influence with them to get them to talk with these humble, hard-handed men who dig the coal out of the ground miles away from the daylight?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For ordinary care, repair, and refurnishing of Executive Mansion, to be expended by contract or otherwise, as the President may determine, $50,000.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, in line 10, page 3, after the word "determine," I move to strike out the figures "$50,000," and insert the figures "$35,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Amendment offered by Mr. BLACK: Page 3, line 10, after the word "determine," strike out the figures "$50,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$35,000."

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, on page 3 of the hearings on this independent offices appropriation bill I find the following testimony with reference to this particular item now under consideration:

Mr. WOOD. For a long while the annual appropriation for the ordinary care, repair, and refurnishing of the Executive Mansion was $35,000.

Col. SHERRILL. Yes, sir.

Mr. WOOD. For 1916, 1917, and 1918 it was $35,000, and then the amount jumped to $50,000.

Col. SHERRILL. That is largely due to the increased cost of both materials and labor. This is indicated in the different rates paid to mechanics, laborers, and for most of the supplies used there. I have a table showing how those rates have changed.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we find that for many years the appropriation was $35,000, and up to 1918 it was $35,000. For 1919, 1920, and 1921, and the present fiscal year 1922, it has been $50,000. I think it is time we were getting back to the ordinary rate of expenditures on these different matters, and if we ever get back we have got to make a starting place. Looks to me like now is a good time to begin it. I recently visited my congressional district, and I found the people hopeful and optimistic and striving to overcome the difficulties of the present industrial and business depression, but I also found that they are all thoroughly convinced that it is getting high time that the municipal governments, the State governments, and the Federal Government practice the same kind of formula that we recommend to them, to-wit, to work and save. The people are right. It is getting time that the Federal Government should practice actual economy. I do not state this from any sort of partisan standpoint, and do not propose this amendment at this particular time merely because the present occupant of the White House happens to be of a different political faith from the party to which I belong. I propose it because the record shows that for many years the appropriation was $35,000 and was ample for all purposes, and because I believe that the White House can still be adequately maintained with $35,000.

Mr. LAYTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. LAYTON. If we cut the amount down from $50,000 to $35,000, is not it really a strike at labor?

Mr. BLACK. No; I do not think that any reasonable economy that we can make is a strike at labor. I do not know of anything that would be of greater benefit to labor, to business, and to farming than a substantial reduction in the burdens of taxation. If we ever get it, we must begin paring appropriations to the bone.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. We examined particularly into this item, and the same gentleman now in charge of the public buildings and grounds that was in charge during the last days of President Wilson's administration called our attention to the fact, and it was impressive that during the last month of Mr. Wilson's administration, because of his illness, the White House was closed. It was in need of repairs then, but in order that there might not be any disturbance to the President when he was ill the repairs were not made. Immediately after the advent of the present administration the public grounds were thrown open and the White House was thrown open, and from that time to this goodly hour there have been thousands of people going through there every day. Every time they go through there is more or less wear and tear. They are not as thoughtful as they should be for the privilege of going through, and there is much useless destruction of property. In order that the building may be put in the condition that it should have been during the last days of President Wilson's administration and in order that it may be properly protected it was thought wise to make an appropriation of $50,000, with the hope that with the added improvement it may be reduced next year. The committee wants to economize and retrench as much as possible, and I believe our reputation points truthfully to that assertion. On the other hand, we are equally interested in seeing that the public property is properly maintained and repairs made when it is necessary to preserve the property as it should be.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Certainly.

Mr. BLACK. This $50,000 would apply for the fiscal year 1923. As I understand, they have $50,000 for the rest of the fiscal year.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes; but in their opinion that is not enough. We felt that it was warranted, and I trust that the amendment of the gentleman will not be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For improvement and maintenance of Executive Mansion grounds (within iron fence), $10,000.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, on line 19, page 3, by striking out the figures $10,000 and inserting $5,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Page 3, line 19, strike out the figures $10,000 and insert in lieu thereof $5,000.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, this item of $10,000 for improvement and maintenance of Executve Mansion grounds is an actual increase of $5,000 for the same item over the appropriation for the present fiscal year. The appropriation for the present fiscal year is—for improvement and maintenance of the Executive Mansion grounds within the iron fence, $5,000.

This bill proposes to increase that 100 per cent and make it $10,000.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Perhaps the additional damage was caused by the sheep. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLACK. Well, of course, my friend from Illinois is speaking facetiously. I admit that these items are small, but I am proposing the amendments in all seriousness. I believe we should be economical in the small items as well as the large ones. I am determined, for my own part, that whenever an item in this bill or in any other bill which may come before the House carries an increase in a given appropriation, unless some real substantial reason can be given for it, I propose to oppose such increase whether I get successful support or not. Our amiable President in the campaign of 1920 used as his slogan that it was time to get "back to normalcy," and I say so, too. But in the matter of economy our Republican brethren are not getting back to it very fast, as such items as this so forcibly attest.

If any man will go among the people of the United States—the business men, the bankers, the farmers, the laboring men—and learn at first hand the difficulties and the hardships under which they are laboring, he will conclude that it is really time to reduce unnecessary expenses, and thereby enable a reduction of taxation. Every item in these appropriation bills should be most carefully scanned, and wherever reductions can be fairly made, even if it is not but $5,000, it should be done.

That is all I wish to say. Of course, it is up to the House as to whether it will adopt my amendment and save $5,000 or defeat it and spend $5,000 more for this particular item than is being spent during the present fiscal year.

I hope my amendment will be adopted and the money saved.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] is right in raising the objection that he has to this item, and unless there is justification for it it should not be allowed. The justification we have, I think, is worth while and well merited. The grounds have had but little attention in the last five or six years. Many of those old giant trees are dead and some of them are dying. Many of them need immediate attention in order to preserve them by proper tree dentistry and otherwise. Some of them must be taken out. Some kind of peculiar disease attacked the trees in the White House grounds. Somebody suggested to President Wilson that it could be cured by putting in sheep. He put in the sheep, but that did not seem to cure the disease, however. The sheep ate up all of the shrubbery there was that was get-at-able, and that has also made necessary some of this item of expense. In order that the proper fertilization may be had for those grounds, in order that these trees may be attended to as they should be, and in order that the hedges destroyed by those sheep may be replaced and rebuilt, it is essential that this additional $5,000 be allowed. That is the only excuse for it, and we think it is well warranted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of calling the attention of the Congress to a rather interesting incident. On the 8th day of January the President commuted the sentence of a manufacturer who had been found guilty of a violation of the antitrust act. With a great deal of blowing of trumpets the district attorney announced the first triumph of the people, the first case of a prison sentence for violators of the antitrust act. I am not protesting against the commutation of the sentence. The sentence was only for four months. I applaud every impulse of humanity which relieves a man in distress. Nor am I revengeful, nor do I hate the rich, nor would I like to send them to jail. As a matter of fact, I am opposed to the so-called antitrust legislation. It is a farce. Every time the court ordered the dissolution of a trust the stock of the trust rose in value. It is absurd to punish a man because he has succeeded over his competitor.

The final object of competition is to eliminate all rivals and to triumph by removing opposition. Unless the methods employed are dishonest, it is silly to brand as a criminal the successful competitor. Modern industry and modern commerce require concentration, efficient cooperation, and coordination of capital. The punishing of a business man because he had succeeded in getting owners of capital to cooperate and to eliminate competitors runs counter to the law of economic evolution.

What I do deplore is that the administration, which has found it necessary to reduce a four months' sentence of a rich manufacturer by three months, at the same time keeps in jail the victims of war hysteria, many of whom have been sentenced to 10, 15, or 20 years for delivering an address, for expressing an opinion, for trying to tell a story, or presenting a viewpoint that was unpopular. Is it because their views are considered antagonistic to capital? Is it because they have been preaching the necessity of cooperation among the workers?

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. In what respect had this manufacturer violated the law?

Mr. LONDON. This particular manufacturer violated the antitrust act, as far as I am informed, by helping to form a combination which culminated in the stifling of competition in the tile industry. His conviction, along with the conviction of three other manufacturers in the Federal court, resulted after a very thorough investigation made in connection with the evils of the building industry in the city of New York. Those labor men who happened to be caught in the net of law were sentenced to long terms of imprisonment, and are still in jail. Nobody thought of commuting their sentence. I am protesting against the continued imprisonment of 118 political offenders. They released Debs because the name of Debs attracted millions of men and women. Debs is a great figure; Debs was a candidate for the Presidency; but I am as much interested in the plain man who is in jail, in the fellow who distributed a circular and got himself sent to prison for 10 years because some fool of a reactionary judge was anxious to intimidate all dissenters. These unheard-of sentences can be explained only by the excitement and the stress of war. There is no earthly excuse for keeping the political offenders in jail, and there are 118 of them.

The Clerk read as follows:

For lighting the Executive Mansion, grounds, and greenhouses, including all necessary expenses of installation, maintenance, and repair, $8,600.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, has the gentleman from Indiana considered the advisability of changing that expression "Executive Mansion" to "White House"? All official communications from a number of Presidents have been dated "The White House," and they are all now dated the "White House" when sent from there.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I do not think we would have any right to do it. Somebody called that to our attention a year or two ago. The building is referred to in the act authorizing the erection of it as "The Executive Mansion."

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Then it would be a change of existing law.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes; that is the point.

The Clerk read as follows:

ALIEN PROPERTY CUSTODIAN.

For expenses of the Alien Property Custodian authorized by the act entitled "An act to define, regulate, and punish trading with the enemy, and for other purposes," approved October 6, 1917, as amended, including personal and other services and rental of quarters in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, per diem allowances in lieu of subsistence not exceeding $4, traveling expenses, printing and binding, law books, books of reference and periodicals, supplies and equipment, and maintenance, repair, and operation of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles, $370,000: Provided, That this appropriation shall not be available for rent of buildings in the District of Columbia if suitable space is provided by the Public Buildings Commission.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, in order to inquire of the gentleman from Indiana why, if we are short of needed office room here, perfectly good buildings on the Mall are being pulled down?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The only reason that the buildings near the Mall were pulled down is because they were very temporary buildings. The only buildings pulled down were those of a very temporary character, and the reason they were destroyed was because of the fact that it was felt that they could better protect the other buildings by getting rid of these. They were of the cheapest manufacture. That is the excuse given for doing it. As far as the other space is concerned, I have but a limited knowledge about it, but it seems they are trying as best they can now to get these activities that are only temporary in nature into these so-called temporary buildings as fast as they can, and they have been doing considerable work in that direction.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman, I have no doubt, is correct in what he says about the nature of the buildings. I was not aware that there was any difference in the construction of the buildings on the Mall. I was aware that some of those buildings are very well constructed.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. There was quite a difference. I am not able to tell the gentleman the technical difference, but there was quite a difference in the construction of them. Some of them were of the cheapest possible character, and some of them were more or less permanent in construction.

The gentleman will recall that during the time appropriations were being made for the erection of these temporary buildings, it was estimated it would take 10 years after the war was over to wind up the business that was incident to the war, and during that portion of time more or less of these temporary buildings would be needed, and that they should be built in proportion to that necessity, with the idea of taking them down in proportion. The Navy Building and the Army Building down in the Mall are permanent in their character, and I expect will stand for ages, and it was because of that fact that they were made permanent, and some of those that were built, even after the first lot of temporary, were more temporary in their construction than the others. And those of that nature have been torn down first.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I would like to inquire a little further in regard to this lump sum of $370,000 that was appropriated. What is the reason the gentleman could not find any way of segregating the items that go into this sum?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Because of the fact that there has been a lump-sum appropriation from the beginning and the business is such that while we asked allocation be made for the various parts of it, it consists of so many items that it would be practically impossible for us to proportion it ourselves. The gentleman will understand that there are some 37 trusts in the hands of this Alien Property Custodian. And as I advocated in the speech I made here the other day, some steps should be taken by the proper committee at the earliest moment to wind up this whole affair. There is no reason on earth, in my opinion, why it should be longer continued.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I agree with the gentleman's desire, and I hope the Appropriation Committee will use some pressure in that connection, if possible.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. There is one bill that I know of—and I think possibly two—that have been introduced for this purpose, providing the character or means by which it can be wound up, and it is now in the hands of the Commerce Committee, and I think we can render a splendid service by getting early action on this proposition.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will permit, I think there will shortly be presented to Congress, probably, some recommendations on this subject, which probably would have been presented before except for the peace conference in Washington. Of course, it involves our foreign relations in some respects, and I think those who have to deal with the subject have not had very much time in recent months. I have been told it is the expectation before very long that information and recommendations would be presented to Congress with the idea of closing up most of the work of the Alien Property Custodian.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Do I understand the gentleman from Illinois that we are waiting on the State Department, then?

Mr. MANN. Well, I prefer not to make a definite statement on the subject.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. As I was about to state, Mr. Chairman, in line with what the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] has said, I think this whole department ought to be closed out, and closed out speedily. There is certain property held by the Alien Property Custodian at this time that ought to pass out of his hands and into the hands of the original owners, and yet, as the law now stands, there is no way of doing anything with it except for him to retain it. And, in addition, this bureau costs $370,000, and we do not know how much of that is for attorneys' fees or salaries, as far as the bill is concerned.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have two additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BRIGGS. I want to ask the chairman of the subcommittee if there is not a great deal of available space in these permanent buildings in Potomac Park that could be utilized as quarters for the Alien Property Custodian instead of paying for this expensive building on Sixteenth Street that he now occupies?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I am informed that there is not. The Alien Property custodian is not the one. We could better keep the building that he is now occupying than some others. I am not chairman of the committee disposing of public space, but we have made some inquiries about the matter, and I am advised that the committee having this in charge is using its best endeavors to get Government offices into Government-owned buildings.

Mr. BRIGGS. Has the committee any information as to how much space is used by the various offices here?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That information is available to any Member of Congress. We inquired into it as many times as we could as far as our committee is concerned, and we encourage their getting out of these temporary buildings into other temporary buildings. We are paying many hundreds of thousands of dollars less this year than last year because of this very thing.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I find from the hearings had on this bill that the Custodian of Alien Property has leased on the most exclusive street in the city of Washington, Sixteenth Street, one of the most exclusive apartment houses for offices for this bureau; that they have employed 26 lawyers, according to a statement from the chairman of the committee, at salaries of $4,500 each per year. The custodian asks for an appropriation of $375,000, to be spent in managing the affairs of this bureau. One hundred and sixty-four people are employed in this department. In addition to the 26 attorneys mentioned, there is employed a general counsel, an associate counsel, and one special litigation counsel, a former Congressman, Mr. William W. Wilson. All of these gentleman are drawing $6,000 each per year. An editorial clerk is drawing an unreasonable salary for his imaginary services, and a large number of others are drawing big salaries which I would like to discuss, but in my limited time I can not.

Mr. Chairman, this bureau was created during the war, and no one ever dreamed that it would be continued after peace was declared. There is absolutely no use for it. It only furnishes soft jobs for political pets. We were promised last year by this administration that this bureau would be abolished, and all those unnecessary employees would be discharged, but to-day the expense is just as great as it was then, and the prospects for a continuation of those easy berths for those gentlemen is no doubt encouraging to them.

But, Mr. Chairman, I want to talk some about the United States Shipping Board. The Government of the United States has spent about $4,000,000,000 on this board. Much of it was spent at a time when waste could not be easily avoided, but more of it was spent after the armistice when waste and extravagance could easily have been avoided. Last August, I remember very well, the chairman of the committee having in charge the appropriation, deficiency appropriation bill, gave this Congress to understand that the Shipping Board should be done away with, the ships disposed of, and all those employees should be discharged from the Government pay roll. Mr. WOOD of Indiana, who is chairman of the subcommittee having the present bill under control, made a lengthy speech at the time Chairman MADDEN reported the deficiency bill last August, in which he made the charge that graft and corruption permeated the organization. He said that nothing in all history compared with this Shipping Board for waste and corruption, and he urged that something be done to correct the awful abuses practiced by that organization. It has now been six months since he made his speech. At that time he was asking for $125,000,000, for money that had already been spent by this board in excess of the amount allowed it. This Congress—but not with my vote—gave the board the $125,000,000, every cent of which has been squandered, and it is here to-day asking for $105,000,000 more in addition to some other large items amounting to a very large sum. I do not have the figures at hand just now, but the sum is very large. It proposes to spend this money in operating and conducting the business of the Shipping Board which, admitted its chairman, Mr. Lasker, in testifying before the committee, is losing more than $4,000,000 per month. On page 951 of the hearings Mr. Lasker said:

It will never become paying.

And yet, with this information before this Congress, you are seriously considering and no doubt will permit this organization to put its hands into the Treasury of the United States and waste all the vast sums that are asked in this bill.

Let us see what is going to be done with this money. There are 78 lawyers already employed. A large number of them were employed this last fall at fabulous salaries. This bill proposes to permit this board to employ seven additional attorneys at salaries of $11,000 each per year. It proposes to create a new commission consisting of seven members whose salaries shall be $12,000 each per year, with a secretary whose salary shall be $5,000. This commission is to sit in judgment on claims propounded against the United States.

Now, let us see something about the lawyers employed. For instance, a man by the name of Gendron, whose salary was $1,000 a year, has been by this board increased to $6,000 per year; Henry P. Anewalt, whose salary has been raised from $1,500 to $4,800; Benjamin Y. Martin, whose salary has been raised from $1,500 to $4,200; Allan McLain, whose salary was increased from $1,200 to $4,800; James R. Frase, an attorney, was employed at $7,500; he was let out and hired over at $10,000. Many others that I have not time to mention have been increased proportionately. Mr. Small is paid $35,000 a year. Mr. Frey had his salary raised from $8,500 to $10,000. He said he quit a $25,000 job to take this job, and he says he feels he can go back to a $50,000 a year position, but that he is so valuable to this organization that the board will not let him go. Mr. Lasker says that Mr. Frey had an offer of $60,000 per year recently to go into the steamship business; yet this peace-time patriot, who cares nothing for money, although admits he is not a very wealthy man, holds on to the Shipping Board. Next we have Mr. Powell, who says he made $300,000 from one corporation, the Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corporation, just before he came to this board, and he is now working for the United States Government for a salary of $12 per year, $1 per month. Mr. Powell left the Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corporation, that has millions of dollars' worth of claims against the United States unadjudicated at this time. He brought with him a number of Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corporation employees, who are working with this board at this time, yet he says he has no interest in the shipbuilding company and is prompted solely by patriotism to work a whole year for $12, but finally admits that he has a contract with the Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corporation, and if certain claims of the company against the Government are adjusted that he could not make more than $5,000 or $10,000. No doubt this patriotic gentleman would refuse to have $5,000 or $10,000 if offered to him. He just naturally does not like Uncle Sam's money. He wants to work for nothing. I think the people of the United States have been gorged on these dollar-a-year patriots, and so far as I am concerned I am in favor of getting rid of all of them. I believe the Treasury of the United States will be safer in the hands of the men who are willing to accept a salary for services rendered.

There are a large number of attorneys drawing $8,000 or $10,000 and upward, in addition to the $5 subsistence per day allowed them by the Government. We have men on this pay roll drawing $35,000 per year, but why should I discuss this further? Any intelligent man in this House can read the hearings and be convinced that the whole thing is a colossal fraud and steal from the Government. Why, we even have a man by the name of Bull, who was employed by this board at $6,500 per year, but it became necessary to send him off on business and he was given $10,800 while away to cover his traveling expenses. No doubt his name—Bull—was very valuable to the board on this occasion.

On page 935 we find that it is proposed by this Shipping Board to spend $900,000 of the people's money to advertise for business for the Shipping Board. Of course, this advertising will be given by Mr. Lasker, who is an advertising man and who owned advertising interests before he came to the Shipping Board, to friends of the Republican Party. It will be to reward them for what they did in the last campaign and to stimulate them in their efforts next November. This dirty scheme ought to be stopped. Every good Democrat and Republican in this House ought to rebel against such a bold attempt to rob the Treasury.

The night before Abraham Lincoln was assassinated he was called upon by his friend, Mr. Amunson, to appoint a commission to consider certain claims Mr. Amunson had against the Government. Mr. Lincoln said:

Amunson, I am done with commissions. I believe they are contrivances to cheat the Government.

And so, Mr. Chairman, I believe a hundred million people in the United States share the opinion expressed by Mr. Lincoln that most commissions do not faithfully serve the people of the United States but represent selfish interests. Of course, there are some commissions no doubt that are absolutely honest, but you will find in the Shipping Board, gentlemen, that it is an organization filled with graft and reeking with corruption. Its operation is the most prodigal and shameful waste and extravagance of the taxpayers' money that was ever tolerated in the United States. It would disgrace hell in its palmiest days.

It is shown that ships leaving ports of the United States for foreign ports, having been furnished with supplies for the voyage, have had these supplies thrown overboard in order that additional purchases could be made for the ships in foreign ports, thereby enabling the purchasers to graft on the Government. This is almost unbelievable, but nevertheless it is shown to be true.

It has been shown that the Shipping Board has gone out into the open market and bought anchors for ships when in the warehouses of the board there were hundreds of anchors that could have been used. In one instance the Shipping Board bought an anchor for 6 cents a pound and the company from which the Shipping Board purchased it paid 1 cent a pound for the same anchor, and it was bought from the warehouse of the United States Shipping Board.

Men who have been working for the Shipping Board for small sums, for supposedly patriotic reasons, are to-day immensely wealthy and have gone into other businesses. There are many connected with it now who are just as guilty of such corruption, and yet this administration retains them.

We have been promised economy and the people of the United States were promised economy and retrenchment by this administration. Where is your economy? You have increased appropriations hundreds and hundreds of millions of dollars since you have gone in.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. I wish the gentleman would specify.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. From the beginning of this bill to the end you have increased appropriations. You have increased the appropriation for the President's Mansion and grounds around the White House from $35,000 to $50,000. You have created soft jobs for seven new lawyers at $11,000 each per year and seven commissioners at $12,000 each per year for the Shipping Board; you have provided for 200 additional employees for the Civil Service Commission; you have increased the subsistence fees from $4 to $5 per day; you do not put any limitations at all on the expenditures in several places in this bill, but leave it open for those who disburse the money to increase salaries and waste the money just as they see fit. You leave it to Mr. Lasker, the politician advertiser, who is to spend the $105,000,000 that you are asking the American people to give him. I know you are going to do it. I know you Republicans, who are in the majority, are going to vote for it. Many of the Republicans can not help themselves because they are hog tied. Many of them will vote for this bill feeling in their hearts that they are doing wrong and voting against the interests of the oppressed taxpayers of this country, but political pressure will force them to do it.

Mr. Chairman, there have been several conferences held at the request of the President supposedly to help the farmers and workers of this country. There will be another conference held here next week, supposedly to correct some of the abuses practiced against the farmers of the country, but nothing will come of it except they will get their pictures made with the President of the United States, get a clever handshake and be told that they should go back home, work harder, save their money, and bring the country back to "normalcy."

Why does not this Congress provide for the establishment of a farm-credits department in each farm loan bank? Why does not this Congress reduce freight rates? Why does not this Congress dispose of Muscle Shoals to Henry Ford or some one else who will develop it and aid the farmers, thereby helping the whole country?

Mr. Chairman, there is nothing constructive being done by this Congress. We are wasting the taxes faster than the people can pay them into the Treasury. It ought to be stopped. This country can never return to a normal condition unless the prodigality and waste in governmental affairs is stopped.

There is a small section of this country that dominates all the other. This Congress is dominated by a small body of men who live in the East. Most of the money of this Nation has found its way into the East, into the hands of a very few men. These men exert great influence at this Capitol. Mr. Chairman, I fear the baneful influence of the money power. No legislation that will hurt the money power and make it carry its just share of the burdens of government can be passed. I do not fear that the people of this country, if they ever learn the true conditions that exist, will not correct the evil, but how are they to learn it? The same power that I mentioned a few moments ago prevents them from gaining the information as to how things are run up here, but in so far as I am concerned I propose to tell it as it is. You are creating unnecessary offices, paying fabulous salaries, and paying political debts with these offices. It ought to be stopped and will some day be stopped, for the people are going to hold you responsible for it.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] said a few days ago in Baltimore, speaking of the Republican Members who have not been voting with the regulars of the Republican Party, that those who "got off the reservation" will get no campaign funds this fall. Mr. FESS is the man through whom the funds will be spent. He is chairman of the Republican congressional campaign committee. There are many of the Congressmen here on that side who want to vote for the interests of the people, but the old guard reactionary forces are absolutely in control of this Congress, and you know, and no one knows it better than the gentleman from Chicago. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I do not fear that my Government will ever be destroyed by forces from without. I do not fear that any foreign Government can ever come to the shores of America and destroy this Government of ours, but the thing that concerns me and every thinking man of this country is the baneful influence of the money power. The giant oak in the forest that has withstood for hundreds of years every storm and to the casual observer appears almost indestructible, can be destroyed by unseen insects that gnaw into the vitals of the giant oak. So it is, Mr. Chairman, with this great Government with its 107,000,000 people, the richest Government on earth, the most intelligent people. It would seem almost indestructible, but this invisible government that is sapping the very life of our Government by its clandestine methods has become a cancer on the very heart of this Nation, and as sure as we live, unless something is done to stop it, this Government of ours will pass like Rome did when the Prætorian Guards offered her upon the auction block.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves to strike out the last two words.

Mr. MADDEN. I would like to put just a few facts into the gentleman's speech. [Laughter.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. I have no objection if the gentleman lets me revise what he puts in. [Laughter.]

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman makes a lot of charges about putting hundreds of millions of dollars onto the expenses of the Shipping Board. Of course, there is no accuracy in that statement. He knows that. I will give him a few facts.

In the first place, notwithstanding the charge that he makes to the effect that a good many attorneys have been employed, that high salaries have been paid, the number of employees of the Shipping Board since last August has been reduced from 8,324 to 5,035, or a reduction of 3,289, with a pay roll on June 15 of $15,861,400 reduced to $10,919,081, or by $4,942,319. That is a reduction of 39 per cent in the cost of administration.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. How much do you appropriate this year?

Mr. MADDEN. If we appropriate what is in this bill, it will be $100,000,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Is it not indefinite? Can anybody tell?

Mr. MADDEN. No; it is not indefinite. It is absolutely definite. If we appropriate what is in this bill, it will be $100,000,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Can anyone tell how much is going to be spent yet?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; you can not spend more than $100,000,000, and $50,000,000 of that can not be spent in any way but in operation, and the other $50,000,000 proposed to be appropriated is to pay claims that have been filed against the board for bad management under previous administration.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. You say they can not spend any more than the amount appropriated. I want to ask the gentleman if the gentleman did not bring in a deficiency bill on the 10th of August last for $61,855,633?

Mr. MADDEN. What was appropriated was $48,500,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Not one cent of that has been brought back here. If you appropriated a billion dollars, they would waste it all.

Mr. MADDEN. Of course, the gentleman's statement is not in accord with the facts.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Of course, the gentleman will agree that the appropriation for the Shipping Board next year is not limited to the $100,000,000, because this bill gives them the right to use the receipts arising from operation.

Mr. MADDEN. I say the $50,000,000 appropriated in this bill, if it is appropriated, is appropriated in anticipation of the needs of the service over and above the income from the service. Of course, we might as well be frank about that. That is the truth.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The truth about it is that Mr. Lasker has expended $300,000,000.

Mr. MADDEN. As to what they will spend from operation, you can not tell what that will be.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. I notice from the hearings that Mr. Lasker says he can not tell how much money it will take. He would like to have $50,000,000, but he can not tell.

Mr. MADDEN. There is one thing that Mr. Lasker has done, however, and that is he has reduced the annual losses of the past of $200,000,000 to $48,000,000 per annum.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman from Mississippi claims that we have retained many of these former employees who caused the waste. I am perfectly willing for my part to admit that we have not thrown out as many Democrats as we ought to have.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. DOWELL having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 7601) to amend an act incorporating Prospect Hill Cemetery, and for other purposes.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I can not let pass without reply the statements which have just been made, and I desire the attention of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. JOHNSON]. Without any warrant of authority and entirely gratuitously he has sought to slander a man who, I think, is rendering a splendid service to the United States. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. JOHNSON] voluntarily charges that the president of this Shipping Board, Mr. Powell, is making contracts with himself as the head of the Bethlehem Steel Corporation. Mr. Powell is not the president of the Bethlehem Steel Corporation. Before he came here he entirely severed all connections that he had with that corporation. He was offered what might be counted a goodly salary to come here and give the benefit of his experience, so that some order might be brought out of the rotten, chaotic condition brought about by the previous administration.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No; I will not yield. Mr. Powell absolutely refused to accept a cent other than the nominal sum of $1 a month, giving his time and his service to his country without compensation, and I say it ill becomes any man who has any regard for the future of his country and her economic condition, precarious as it is, to attack and attempt to blacken the name of a man who is patriotically trying to be of some service and who is giving his time and his intelligence gratuitously to his country. In my opinion Mr. Powell is entitled to more credit for the reorganization of this disorganized corporation than any other one man, and he feels it to be his duty to do it, because the Government that he loves gave him his education. So I say instead of trying to blacken the character of men who are endeavoring to be of service to this country we had better hold up their hands and encourage them in these days when we need men of this character. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Now will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. I call the attention of the gentleman to the hearing conducted by himself, in which Mr. Powell appeared before the committee, and having reference in his statement to what Senator BORAH had said about him, put into this record a letter which he had directed to Mr. BORAH, and one from Mr. Lasker to him; and he also said that he had a contract with the Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corporation at that time which could earn him not more at the most than $5,000 or $10,000. That is in this record here.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Absolutely; and because of the fact that Mr. BORAH had done Mr. Powell an injustice he wrote him that letter; and Mr. BORAH, when he found that he was mistaken, graciously put it into the record and righted the wrong that he had done this man. The gentleman from Mississippi had better be equally just.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Just another question now. Mr. Powell also stated that he had appointed a number of men who were formerly employed by the Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corporation to positions with the Shipping Board, and those men are now holding those same positions, settling claims.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I asked him the question myself, whether or not anyone connected with the Bethlehem Steel Corporation was connected with this organization, and he very promptly said "no," but that he had asked some of those men who had formerly been in the employ of the Steel Corporation, who by reason of their experience and fitness could render good service here, to come and take employment here; but they are entirely disconnected with the Bethlehem Steel Corporation and have no concern with its affairs; and he was bringing to the service of this corporation men whom he knew by reason of his association with them in that old corporation in the days when they were employing men in large numbers, and he knew that these men might be of service to him.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. But these same men are settling claims between the Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corporation and the United States.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. They have nothing at all to do with the settling of claims, and they are not in that department.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. That is what the hearings show.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No; they do not show anything of the kind.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. I say they do.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The gentleman can say anything he wants to, and it is entitled to about as much credit as what he has said.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. I repeat my statement.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Amend page 4, line 11, by striking out $370,000 and inserting in lieu thereof $250,000.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I want to call the attention of those on the majority side of the House who have charge of the making of the legislative program to the fact that in this item there is an appropriation of $370,000 for maintaining the office of the Alien Property Custodian. Gentlemen will remember that when the trading with the enemy act was passed it provided that all alien-enemy property which was taken over by the Alien Property Custodian should be retained by him until otherwise provided by Congress. Inquiry at the office of the Alien Property Custodian as to what disposition is being made of estates in his hands elicits the information that the Alien Property Custodian is continuing to administer estates and properties in his hands just as he did before the treaties of peace were concluded with Germany and with Austria. It does seem to me that this Congress ought to formulate some character of legislation providing for the proper disposition of alien-enemy properties, and that it ought to provide for demobilizing the office of the Alien Property Custodian and for giving such properties into the hands of those to whom they belong. So far as I know, no step has been taken looking to that end, but this establishment continues in existence. In the face of all the commissions which have been appointed to consolidate and classify and eliminate duplications and things of that kind in the public service, here is one branch of the Government that ought absolutely to be wound up and demobilized, and yet so far as I know nothing whatever has been undertaken along that line. Can it be that the State Department intends to advise Congress to hold on to alien-enemy property until the claims of American citizens against German citizens and the German Government may be settled? If that is to be its policy, it ought to inform Congress.

It seems to me it is time to determine whether that is to be the policy of this Government or not. If it be the policy of the Government to return these estates to former alien enemies—because they are not alien enemies any longer, as we have concluded a treaty of peace—Congress ought to do something to execute that policy.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman knows that we could not do that in this bill.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. No; but the gentleman is chairman of the Appropriations Committee, he is a member of the steering committee, and occupies a high place.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman is mistaken; he is not a member of the steering committee.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Well, he ought to be if he is not. [Laughter.] I will say that, although he disclaims the soft impeachment, I do not blame him. I would deny it, too, if I were a member of the committee.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman never will be a member of the steering committee on either side of the House. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I will say to the other distinguished gentleman from Illinois that I can understand why he interjected that remark. Of course, it is not remarkable when I start to pay a compliment to another gentleman from Illinois that he should be in a hurry to attract the attention of the country to the fact that there are others from Illinois. [Laughter.] I will say to the gentleman who interrupted me as I was about to pay a compliment to his colleague that I believe the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], if he were on the steering committee, would undertake, in the interest of economy and the interest of proper legislative procedure, to see that the steering committee called the attention of the leader on the Republican side and other administration officials to the fact that here is one place where the boasted plea for economy should be put into effect; that here is one place where your campaign cry "Back to normalcy," "Back to the Constitution," "Back to orderly government," "Back to the people" could actually be realized, and that here you can take the Government out of business by taking the property in the hands of the Alien Property Custodian and giving it back to the people who are entitled to it; and if they are not entitled to it, to devise some method by which it may be treated under the rules of international law and treaty obligations.

There are 26 lawyers in the Alien Property Custodian's office. Twenty-six attorneys, and yet they are not able to devise a plan for submission to Congress as to how the activities of this bureau should be disorganized and the property returned to its proper owners.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The gentleman does not expect these 26 attorneys to devise means for putting themselves out of office, does he?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. No; there is no danger of the 26 lawyers doing that, because I do not think that a lawyer who is drawing a good salary is going around trying to repeal his office. But in all seriousness, gentlemen, I did not rise to make a partisan appeal. [Laughter.] Oh, well, if it is a partisan appeal to speak for retrenchment and economy, to return to the orderly processes of the Government, let the gentleman from Minnesota, the whip—and he is about the only whip that never hits anything [laughter]—let the whip of the Republican side make a sneer at what I am saying, but here is the place where you can put economy into effect, here is the place that the Government ought to be taken out of business, here is the place to divorce employees from the pay roll.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I will.

Mr. KNUTSON. I would like to have the gentleman inform the House where they got the idea of the establishment of this bureau in the first place.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. If the gentleman from Minnesota had been awake during the war he would have known that Germany seized the property of all American citizens residing in Germany, and a proper system of retaliation necessitated the establishment of this bureau. Great Britain and France pursued the same policy. I dare say the gentleman from Minnesota voted for the bill.

Mr. KNUTSON. I voted for all the war measures.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Then why did the gentleman ask me why this bureau was established? I can only attribute the question to the fact that when he voted for these measures he did not concern himself as to the whys and wherefores but voted in the way somebody told him to.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is it not a historical fact that the Germans did not seize American property until we had passed the alien property custodian act? Great Britain initiated the procedure, but Germany did not attempt to confiscate property of American citizens until the United States had first done it.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I do not think that is material, I do not really know which country initiated the policy. I give the gentleman from Wisconsin credit for keeping in touch with that matter, but France, Germany, and Great Britain all followed it.

Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman from Texas is well informed. Can he inform the House as to the particulars of the sale of he Bosch magneto and aspirin patents under the Democratic administration? I would like to have some information on that.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I am not surprised that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] is more concerned about the details of the sale of the Bosch Magneto Co., which belonged to enemy aliens, than he is in saving the Government of the United States $370,000 annually appropriated for the maintenance of a wholly useless war-time organization when we have returned to times of peace.

Mr. KNUTSON. Does the gentleman approve of those thefts?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I do not know that it is worth while to pay any special attention to the remarks of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], who always makes bright and interesting speeches, purely from a parliamentary viewpoint. As I stated to the House a while ago, it is the desire of the Alien Property Custodian's office very speedily to present to the Congress, although that is not their special duty, some recommendations, directly or indirectly, for the winding up of the Alien Property Custodian's business. That matter has been delayed, as I understand it, by the fact that the peace conference here is absorbing the work in the main of the office of the Secretary of State, and, as international relations necessarily enter into the consideration of the subject, it has not been desirable to present a half-baked plan to the House, such as would undoubtedly have been presented if the gentleman from Texas had had charge of it.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I am glad that my suggestion is getting such prompt consideration.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I made this statement to the House before the gentleman rose, but as usual he was not here when I made the statement.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I frequently try not to be here when the gentleman speaks.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman would derive some information if he would be here not only when I speak but when other gentlemen speak, but as a rule the gentleman is here only when he inflicts himself upon the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF EFFICIENCY.

For carrying on the work of the Bureau of Efficiency as authorized by law, including salaries and contingent expenses; supplies; stationery; purchase and exchange of equipment; printing and binding; traveling expenses; per diem in lieu of subsistence; not to exceed $100 for law books, books of reference, and periodicals; and not to exceed $150 for street car fare; in all, $125,000: Provided, That no person shall be employed hereunder at a rate of compensation exceeding $1,800 per annum except the following: 1 at $7,500, 1 at $6,000, 1 at $4,250, 6 at $4,000 each, 3 at $3,600 each, 1 at $3,500, 2 at $3,250 each, 5 at $3,000 each, 2 at $2,750 each, 3 at $2,400 each, and 5 at $2,000 each.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill who is receiving a salary of $7,500 in this Bureau of Efficiency, which is as much as a Senator or a Representative in Congress receives?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The director of the bureau, Mr. Brown.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. That is Mr. Herbert D. Brown?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. How long has he been director of that bureau?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Ever since it was organized.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. When was it organized?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It was a part of the civil service until 1916, when it was made an independent bureau, and he was appointed by the President at that time.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. During 1916, during the war, what was his salary—say, when he was first appointed?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. This salary, like other salaries——

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. What was it then?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It was $5,000.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I think it was $4,000.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I may be mistaken about that.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I think it was $4,000. From 1916 to 1921 it has been increased to $7,500, which is as much as a Senator of the United States receives, as I said a moment ago. In my judgment, he does not render, nor has he ever rendered, services demanding any such salary as that.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Indiana yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Is not the Bureau of Efficiency now engaged in rating the civil-service employees of the Government?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The Bureau of Efficiency is now under Executive order, issued by the President, engaged in making efficiency surveys of the various departments, which has been in the main completed, and many of the departments, those receiving lump-sum appropriations, are now reorganizing and fixing the salaries of the employees under that survey.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Was it not the purpose to have that bureau continue to maintain some standard of efficiency for employees so as to keep the Congress advised as to the efficiency of the various departments and organizations of the Government?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. That is why they are receiving this appropriation?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Is there any other work which the Bureau of Efficiency is engaged in at this time?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes; it is engaged not only in measuring the efficiency of the employees within the Government, but likewise it is engaged in looking into the conduct of these various offices, and I wish to say in answer to the gentleman from Wisconsin that it is proving of very great value. There has been more or less opposition to the Bureau of Efficiency. I am not here holding any brief for the Bureau of Efficiency. I may not like all the things that Mr. Brown has done, I may not like his personality, but I must give him credit for being not only energetic but proficient in bringing about results, and they have been very salutary, and had these other departments admitted the Bureau of Efficiency as it was the intention so to do when it was created, to make suggestions, and had those suggestions been adopted, we would have had the same good results that came from the application of their plan that we did get in the Post Office Department as adopted by Postmaster General Burleson.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. If this appropriation is made, the Bureau of Efficiency will continue to carry on these investigations for the purpose of devising more economic ways of managing the various departments?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and I do that for the purpose of calling to the attention of the House one of the activities of the Bureau of the Budget which has just come to my attention. I interrogated the gentleman from Indiana because I understood the duties of the Bureau of Efficiency to be just as he has detailed them. Personally, I think they have been doing very good work, but the Bureau of the Budget, charged with the duty of preventing duplication of work in this Government, is responsible for the issuance of an Executive order which has established another bureau in the Government to do exactly the work which the gentleman from Indiana has stated the Bureau of Efficiency is doing. Think of the Bureau of the Budget, charged with eliminating duplication, saddling onto the executive departments at this time another board to do exactly that which is being done by the Bureau of Efficiency. I want to call attention first to the Executive order to which the gentleman from Indiana referred, which was issued October 24 and is headed, "Uniform Efficiency Ratings," requiring the Bureau of Efficiency to establish such ratings. It provides in section 3:

As of May 15 and November 15 of each year, a rating shall be made of the efficiency of each employee during the preceding six months or such portion thereof as he or she may have been employed.

And then comes the requirements that they shall establish standard ratings, special ratings, and personal changes. And it provides in section 7:

Efficiency ratings made in pursuance of the provisions of this order shall be the basis for all changes of compensation of employees in the classified service in the District of Columbia.

And now here, on December 23, 1921, just two months later, there comes an Executive order, signed by the Director of the Budget, by direction of the President, addressed to the House of Representatives, establishing the Federal personnel board. It says in section 1:

For the purpose of developing in the Federal Government a more effective and economical system of employment and personal management and to promote the general welfare of the employees of the National Government, there is hereby established a Federal personnel board under the supervision of the United States Civil Service Commission.

And then it is provided that there shall be a chief coordinator. We long since discontinued allocating and now we are engaged in coordinating. And we have a chief coordinator—who shall assign a representative to the Federal personnel board for the purpose of coordination.

And here is what the board is to do:

First. The perfection of a liaison system between the Civil Service Commission and the several departments and establishments to insure cooperation.

We have an appointment clerk in each department, who is in daily touch with the Civil Service Commission, and a chief clerk in each department whose duty it is to maintain a contact with the Civil Service Commission, but now we are to have a liaison officer. And second:

The perfection of methods whereby the Civil Service Commission will be advised regarding the success or failure of persons selected through its examination, and whereby provision will be made for the reassignment or the separation from the service of persons who are unsatisfactory.

If a person is unsatisfactory, the Civil Service Commission must be advised. The Civil Service Commission has not the power to remove him if he is unsatisfactory but the department has.

And then there is section (d), as follows:

The development of an adequate system of personnel records which will furnish a medium for effective control of personnel administration and provide some basic statistics for such matters as retirements and disability, appropriation estimates, salary rate adjustments, etc.

They are to provide a system of basic statistics in order to enable the departments to make salary rate adjustments, and the Bureau of Efficiency two months before was directly charged with the duty of furnishing efficiency ratings every six months in order that the compensation of the employees might be fixed.

There is only one conclusion, that if this board is functioning and a man is detailed from every department to this board, and they can call upon the departments for information upon which to base efficiency rating, and the Bureau of Efficiency is also calling on them for efficiency information, you owe it to the departments to increase the appropriations for clerk hire in order that they may answer the inquiries made of them. This is pyramiding one board on top of another at the expense of the people. It is doing, by Executive order, that which could never get through this Congress. There is no excuse for it all. You are going to have one efficiency rating by this personnel board and one by the Bureau of Efficiency. Suppose they do not agree, which rating are you going to follow? What business has the Civil Service Commission dealing with this question? Their duty is to have examinations held in order to certify employees and not to report to departments how an employee may be separated from the service. They know how that should be done.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Under this order, what would become of the unclassified reclassification bill that passed a few days ago?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I ask you to tell me on what that reclassification is going to be based? Are you going to take the efficiency record under the order of December 3, prepared by the personnel board or the efficiency rating prepared by the Bureau of Efficiency, under the Executive order of October 24, 1921?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, we have a Bureau of Efficiency and a Director of the Budget; we had a Reclassification Commission that went out of existence, and we have now a Reclassification Committee reclassifying the departments, and we have a Committee on Reform of the Civil Service in the House. They have just passed a reclassification bill in the House affecting the departments. The Bureau of Efficiency is the child of the Committee on Appropriations. The Director of the Budget is the younger brother created, or appropriated for, by the Committee on Appropriations. I have always known the members of the Committee on Appropriations, when either one of these children was attacked, to promptly come to its assistance. But I notice that the love of the committee now is for the older child rather than for the younger brother. Here is a row on between the Bureau of Efficiency and the Director of the Budget, and the gentleman from South Carolina, one of the nicest men that ever came to this House [applause], certainly derived his information from Mr. Brown, the head of the Bureau of Efficiency, and takes a crack at the Bureau of the Budget, the younger brother. I do not know, but I would like some one to give an excuse for the existence, or continued existence, of the Bureau of Efficiency. I have great regard for the head of that bureau, Mr. Brown. I believe he is a most efficient public servant, and does great good, but he is the best man to get influence with the Committee on Appropriations that ever and all time has appeared in Washington.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. I yield.

Mr. GALLIVAN. I want to say to my friend from Illinois that ever since I have been on the Committee on Appropriations I have tried to find out what good reason there is for the existence of the Bureau of Efficiency, and I have always opposed the annual increases that my friend Brown has been able to put across in this Chamber. I am with the younger brother, the gentleman refers to. I am with the younger brother.

Mr. MANN. Well, I hope that may continue, although I predicate this statement and make this prediction, that if the gentleman from Massachusetts gets to that place in the committee where he has charge of a committee of this kind, Brown will have him on his back. [Laughter.]

Mr. GALLIVAN. I can assure my friend that will never happen; never in a million years. [Laughter.]

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I know the gentleman will permit me to say that——

Mr. MANN. I will permit you to say anything——

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. While his statement may be true, I do not know Mr. Brown, and I do not think I ever met him, and therefore I have never come under his spell.

Mr. MANN. That shows how wily Brown is, to make men whom he never met act just like automatons at a suggestion to their mind. [Laughter.]

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I did not make myself clear if the gentleman understood me to say that there is any discrimination in my mind as between the Bureau of the Budget and the Bureau of Efficiency. What I am complaining about is the establishment of this personnel board in the Civil Service Commission to do that which is under the Bureau of Efficiency. What I want to do is to put it in one or other, and when the civil-service paragraph is reached I hope to make some remarks along that line.

Mr. MANN. I have made no reflection on the gentleman.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. No; the gentleman was very complimentary to me.

Mr. MANN. I notice that Mr. Brown, according to the morning papers, has stated to the Director of the Budget, acting for the budget, "You can go to ——," the place we frequently name when we talk in private. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska moves to strike out the last two words.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I desire to propound a question to the gentleman in charge of the bill. In the Treasury Department the appointment clerk receives $3,000 a year salary. The appointment clerk in the Bureau of Internal Revenue receives $4,500. In the General Accounting Office the appointment clerk receives $2,500. In the Treasury Department the appointment clerk handles all the business of the entire department. The appointment clerk in the Internal Revenue Bureau handles the work of that bureau in detail and turns it over to the appointment clerk of the department for completion. The appointment clerk in the General Accounting Office has 1,500 people to look after. Now, is there any law by means of which an equitable adjustment of ratings may be made in cases like these?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Absolutely, and there is provision made for it. Whenever it is applied this discrepancy will no longer exist.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. What is that provision?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I am not prepared to state it offhand, but at the time we had under discussion the reclassification bill I had the figures before me showing that under the classification which I proposed like service would receive like pay.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Does not the gentleman believe that it would be wise to make provision in this bill making it impossible to have such wide diversities of salary as these?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes; I think it would be, but you can not do it under this bill. That is the trouble.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. If you should adopt a provision that they shall not be allowed a figure beyond a certain salary, that would surely enforce it. I am sure the so-called reclassification bill will not correct such inequalities. The formula, "like service should receive like pay," will not solve this problem under the reclassification bill or any other bill that has yet been proposed.

Mr. Chairman, I want to direct attention for a moment to the connection of the Civil Service Commission with this Board of Personnel. I think that is one of the most mischievous arrangements that can be introduced into the executive service of the Government. That Civil Service Commission is the greatest meddler in outside affairs that there is in the Government wherever they have a chance to meddle. I have witnessed this time and time again. The Civil Service Commission has a specific function to perform, and that is the establishment of eligible registers for the different grades of the public service. They ought to be held to that. There are many people who firmly believe that they should not be given even that much. But they ought at least to be held to that line, and whenever by law or by Executive order we allow them to go outside of that range we are inviting trouble.

How can the Civil Service Commission know anything about the efficiency of clerks with whom they never come in contact? How can the efficiency of a clerk be determined except by the people who make observation of that clerk, who study his ability and adaptability to the particular kind of work on which he is engaged? No Civil Service Commission can ever do that unless you supply them with a force adequate to go into all these various offices and bureaus and study every individual clerk.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Certainly.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I do not understand that by Executive order it is contemplated that the Civil Service Commission shall enter these departments, or go in there all the time investigating conditions. Not at all; but only when the personnel commission, composed of people in the departments, shall consult with the commission in regard to the advisability of certain changes.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Let me call the gentleman's attention to the fact that even with the provision that he suggests that personnel commission must have a force sufficient to learn the facts, just as the heads of each division and every bureau must learn the facts. How can you know what the qualifications of an individual may be or what his adaptability may be to a certain task unless you are in contact with the business and with the individual?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. I yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Nebraska may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Nebraska may have five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will say to the gentleman from Nebraska that possibly this is provided for on the next page, where the sum of $56,780 is appropriated for additional employees. Perhaps that is where they expect to get the men to perform this additional service.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Whether that be true or not—I take it for granted that the committee in charge of the bill would not make that serious mistake—the gentleman from Iowa has performed a public service by calling attention to that point.

Let me emphasize one more point, Mr. Chairman. Take the question of appointment clerks, to whom I have referred. Compare them with law clerks, who receive $2,000 salary ordinarily and some $2,500. Take the clerks who are examining the most intricate accounts in the department, clerks upon whose judgment executive officers will sign papers aggregating the billions of dollars that go out from the Treasury. Their work is far more important than the work of an appointment clerk.

What are the requisite qualifications of an appointment clerk? First, he must understand the rules of the Civil Service Commission, and that is enough to drive anybody crazy in an ordinary period of time. What next? Why, an appointment clerk must be the cleverest liar on earth, able to turn so quickly that even Senators and Members and heads of departments can not catch him. [Laughter.] Now, when you take into account the shifting of the cards, the placing of this man here and that man there, you have the work of an appointment clerk; but the man who studies the law, the man who analyzes the facts, the man who does the work, gets $1,800 or $2,000 a year, while a third-rate appointment clerk gets $4,500 a year in the Bureau of Internal Revenue. Former Secretary McAdoo established that grade. Will Secretary Mellon and Commissioner Blair ratify and perpetuate it? If they do, will they not be compelled to cease talking economy? The appointment clerk for the department handles the record for 67,000 people approximately, while the appointment clerk for the Bureau of Internal Revenue had on his roll 19,637 July 1, 1921. Down with McAdoo, salary profiteer!

Mr. STEVENSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. STEVENSON. Was that the position which the gentleman held when he was in the Treasury Department? [Laughter.]

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. It was not, sir. When I was in the Treasury Department I never permitted any inequality of that sort when I had the power to stop it; and when I had a chance to disallow a salary on the basis of inequitable distribution, as I have stated, I disallowed it and forced them to the line. Does the gentleman from South Carolina want to ask another question? If he does, come on.

Mr. STEVENSON. I just wanted to know what class of people the gentleman got? He says they are a bunch of the biggest liars in the world. [Laughter.]

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. I did not have any appointment clerk. He was over in the Civil Service Commission or the department.

Mr. BARKLEY. The gentleman is talking about the present administration. [Laughter.]

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Oh, no. I had two years under a Democratic administration, and that was the worst thing I ever met in my life. [Laughter.]

The Democrats increased the total disbursements of the Government for the fiscal year 1913, $43,000,000; for 1914, $39,000,000; for 1915, $35,000,000; and $129,000,000 by June 30, 1916.

The civil-service rules and regulations were deliberately disregarded, and worthy and competent Republican chiefs of divisions and clerks of higher grades were reduced in order to promote Democrats.

In the old second auditor's office the reduction and displacement of competent Republicans, including many ex-Union soldiers, were made for the sole purpose of benefiting Democrats. The man who was placed in charge of that office by the Wilson administration was soon recognized as one of the most noted political headsmen of his time. The political guillotine never swung more speedily than it did in that office at that time. Even ex-Union soldiers fell under it as though they had been traitors to their country.

Note the profligate waste of public money during the World War. If we had to-day the billions of dollars that were wasted by the Democratic administration during the war we could pay the total running expenses of this Government, according to the Republican standard, nearly two years without levying a single dollar in taxes. If that were not bad enough, how could you make it worse?

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. Has the service improved any since the gentleman left it? [Laughter.]

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. It has not; but we are trying to improve it now.

Mr. BARKLEY. I hope the gentleman is not going to claim that he comes within that qualification himself.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Oh, no. Like the gentleman from Kentucky I stood foursquare and did the right thing. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the remainder of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For additional employees for the Civil Service Commission, $56,780: Provided, That no person shall be employed hereunder at a rate of compensation exceeding $1,800 per annum, except three at $3,000 each.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

Page 5, line 23, after the word "commission" strike out the figures "$56,780" and insert "$50,000."

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, the experience of this Congress has been that whenever we have placed temporary employees upon the roll it has been almost impossible to separate them from the service. In view of that fact I am going to put this proposition up to the House now, because the House might as well determine what it is going to do. This is not the only bill where the departments are asking for temporary employees. Departmental officers have long since learned that when they come to the Committee on Appropriations and ask for an increase of their statutory force it is difficult for them to "get by," but if they can ever get temporary employees authorized on the ground that there is an emergency demanding their employment they know that at end of the year the fight is no longer theirs; that the employees will go to the Senators and Representatives from their States and beg them to make the fight their fight, and as a result the department head is able to continue on his rolls the temporary employees appointed for an emergency. That is our experience, and the Members of this House know it. Yet at this time, when you are preaching throughout the country about reducing employees in the service of the Government, the departments are asking in several bills for appropriations for temporary employees beyond the appropriations previously authorized. It is true that the Civil Service Commission attempted to do just what I have said they all do. They tried to get this committee to get $26,500 appropriated last year for temporary employees transferred over to the permanent roll, but the committee very properly refused to do that. But my good friend from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] had an unusual softening of the heart—unusual for him, because I will say that he generally makes an effort to hold down the expenses of the Government—and he made a recommendation to the committee of $60,000 for temporary employees for the Civil Service Commission, instead of $50,000, which they have this year. Subsequently in the full committee that was reduced to $56,780.

Now, my amendment is to put them right back where they are this year, at $50,000. When you do that you are doing more than you ought to do. How can you tell the people of this country that you are honest in your statement in reducing the number of employees on the pay rolls of the Government when at the same time you are appropriating more money for the purpose of holding examinations for new employees for the Government?

You can not argue that to any man with any sanity at all. Why, if you are reducing the employees of this Government you must have a roll now in the Civil Service Office of employees having a civil-service status who are being daily separated from the service who are eligible for appointment and whose competency has been tried and proved, and they should be appointed to any vacancies instead of holding new examinations throughout the country at an expense to the Government. Let us see the record you are making. Look at the facts. On June 30, 1916, according to the Civil Service Commission, all the employees of the Government numbered 439,798. During the war they increased, until November 11, 1918, there were 917,760. Now, three years after the war, we have only reduced them down to 597,482, or 162,000 more than we had June 30, 1916.

The Civil Service Commission say they need this money because they now conduct more examinations—at a time when we are supposed to be reducing the number of employees. They say they will examine 300,000 persons next year, and therefore they want an increased appropriation. Well, they examined 461,000 in 1919, according to their own statement, and their total appropriation only amounted to $660,000. This bill carries $673,000, and they only claim that they will examine 300,000. You and I know that they have no business examining 300,000 people, for they have this large number of people on the eligible list that can be reinstated.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Can the Civil Service Commission reinstate a man who has been discharged if he is on the eligible list?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes; they can do that under the law, as I understand.

Mr. KINCHELOE. The reason I ask the question is that I had an ex-service man who had a civil-service status as a railway mail clerk, and I tried to get the commission to reinstate him, and they refused to do it.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I am not interested in any one case. They, of course, have discretion and may abuse it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. What I want to know is whether or not Congress is going to embark on increasing the number of temporary employees in this department of the Government—the Civil Service Commission—whose sole business it is to furnish additional employees in the Government service? It will be interesting to other subcommittees of the Committee on Appropriations. There is an additional reason also—my good friend from Illinois said that we are interested in the contest between the Bureau of Efficiency, the elder brother, and the Budget Bureau, the younger brother. I am not interested in it at this time, but what I am interested in is doing what the Budget Bureau was supposed to do—eliminate some of the duplications.

Now, I notice in the last few days that the Civil Service Commission has sent a supplemental estimate to the Committee on Appropriations. The Chief of the Bureau of the Budget sent it for the Civil Service Commission. That the Chief of the Bureau of the Budget has never understood the budget act is evident, because the act provides that he shall not submit supplemental estimates unless there is an emergency. He submits a supplemental estimate only a month after this committee has had its hearings asking an increase of salary for the Civil Service Commissioners. Can anybody say what emergency demanded the submission of a supplemental estimate of that kind?

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. I will say that I will be glad to join the gentleman, or any other gentleman on the Appropriations Committee, to see that whatever recommendations are made in that connection are not made effective.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I am glad the gentleman joins me, and I assure him that I will be fighting with him, because there is an additional reason. Since the hearings on the bill the commission has submitted within the last few days an estimate for $100,000—some of it to increase the salaries of the commissioners—and for another purpose, to investigate the character of the applicants for civil-service positions. I do not know whether the purpose is to use some of these funds for the personnel board, but I suspect that is intended. If you establish a Bureau of Efficiency you should maintain it, but do not come here and saddle the personnel board on the Government.

The one reason I asked the question of the gentleman from Indiana as to the Bureau of Efficiency, I wanted him to state which one he was in favor of. If he said the Civil Service Commission, I would move to strike out the Bureau of Efficiency, and if he stands for that he can not defend the desire of the Civil Service Commission to establish this personnel board.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. As I understand the gentleman, if there were not more than 300,000 persons examined they would have plenty for the departments and more than they could use.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes. The gentleman knows that if they have taken many employees off of the rolls they would be eligible for reinstatement. If you say that you are going to reduce the number of clerks in the service and then appropriate $56,000 for temporary clerks, thus increasing the appropriation to hold more examinations, to appoint more employees, you can not defend it.

Before I forget, let me tell my friend this: Do not get the idea that this is connected with the presidential postmasters, because $75,000 is specifically included for that purpose; this $50,000 that is carried can not well be charged up to that, for the reason that they say they have brought the postmaster examinations up to within 60 days and would soon be up with them. If that is true, then many clerks can go back on the regular work. If you appropriate this money, it is simply notice to all of the other subcommittees of the Appropriations Committee that the bars are down and that you are going to put temporary employees on, knowing well that if we do that, that at the end of 12 months they are going to be begging to be kept and that you never will get them off the rolls.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I was merely going to ask what the commission claims these clerks are going to do?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The commission claims that they are necessary because they are behind with their work and they need them to keep up with that work; but they have as much money as they had a year or two ago when they had more examinations. And if they will certify some of the employees who are daily being separated from the rolls, and who are eligible, they would not have to hold examinations and would not need so many clerks in the civil service.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I wish to call the attention of the committee to the situation with reference to this appropriation. The Budget recommended an increase in the salaries of the employees of the Civil Service Commission. The employees in the Civil Service Commission are paid less proportionately for the service being rendered than in almost any other department of the Government. The turnover in the Civil Service is greater than in any other department of the Government. It may seem strange, but the fact is that even with the dearth of employment now existing, the turnover in the Civil Service last year was 76 per cent. This appropriation that is being recommended in this bill is less than that carried in 1922 by $3,220, and it is $10,000 less than that recommended by the Budget. Where the confusion seems to arise is here: It is the policy of the Committee on Appropriations not to increase any salaries, depending, if you please, upon the reclassification that has been promised us for so long. Therefore, when we found that we were not to increase these salaries, as recommended by the Budget, we had to reform the situation, taking those out of the statutory rolls that were put in under the estimate and placing them back again in the lump-sum appropriations. In doing that this increase occurs, but if you will examine it all the way through, you will find that we have absolutely reduced the cost of this activity $3,220, as compared with the appropriations for 1922, and that it is $10,000 less than that recommended by the Budget.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The gentleman does not mean to say that the appropriation is not $50,000 for the current year for temporary employees?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No; I do not wish to say that; but I say that in this rearrangement, if you will take the sum appropriated for the statutory roll last year and the sum appropriated for the lump-sum appropriation last year and compare them with the like appropriations this year, you will find that it is $3,220 less than that appropriated last year.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I have done that, but my figures do not agree with the figures the gentleman gives. Is not the gentleman confused in that he reduced that out of printing and binding?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. When we take the whole amount of reduction into consideration, the gentleman is correct. I wish to call attention in passing to the increased activity of the Civil Service. In 1916 the total number of examinations was 154,000 in round numbers, in 1919 they were 461,000, and in 1920 they were reduced to 325,000. In 1921 they were increased to 328,000.

I call attention to the further fact that during the war the Civil Service Commission had an appropriation of $250,000 for the extra service for which we are now allowing them only $50,000, when as a matter of fact the volume of the work is almost equal to that which they had on their hands at that time. In addition, there has come this extraordinary work of the post-office examinations. Some one may say that that was true during the Wilson administration, but it was practically over during the last days of the Wilson administration.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The entire examination of the fitness of postmasters all over this country has now been devolved upon the Civil Service Commission. One reason why this apparent increase in the lump-sum appropriation in the minds of your committee was essential is because of the fact that the service required in the civil service, if it is worth anything at all, is of a very high grade, or should be. Civil-service employees are passing on the fitness of applicants for technical places in the various branches of the Government where the most vital interests of the Government are involved, carrying salaries of four, five, and six thousand dollars a year. Those positions are passed upon by civil-service employees receiving salaries of twelve or fourteen hundred dollars each. The apparent increase is caused here by the fact that in order that they might have some relief in that regard, so that they could employ a few more higher-priced clerks at one hundred or two hundred dollars a year more, a very few, amounting to not more than three or four thousand dollars, in order that they might have more efficiency and that they might have more practical examinations where these technical jobs are involved. So that if we are to do that which is best for ourselves, that which is best for the people we are serving, we ought to have this agency of the Government so equipped that they can best render the service imposed upon them. That is the only reason for this, and, as a matter of fact, we have reduced the entire appropriation $10,000 below that recommended by the Budget and $3,220 below that carried last year.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Why could not the Civil Service Commission, when the civil-service status of any of these clerks is about to expire by reason of limitation, which is a year, extend the status for another year?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I understand that the practice is that a person who has disconnected himself from the civil service may be reinstated within a year if he desires.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I am talking about the ones who have acquired a status but who have never been put in a position. As I stated to the gentleman from South Carolina, an ex-service young man in my district wrote to me the other day that his year was out. He had a civil-service status as a railway mail clerk. They absolutely refused to do it. Why should they refuse?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I do not know why. That is a matter of administration. We have nothing to do with it.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman explain this policy, too: A man who has been separated from the service and wishes to be reinstated is not asked to file an application for reinstatement—say a clerk in a first-class office or rural carrier. They hold he must make a new application after a vacancy has occurred before there is a certification. And in every case I have had the man did not know of the vacancy until after the Post Office Department had called on the Civil Service Commission for a certification. I know the case of one man where that has happened twice, and he is trying to get back in. They will not treat his application for reinstatement as a general one. They must make the application before the vacancy occurs and after the application of three names is called for to fill it. What is the reason for that policy?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I will state in answer to that argument, and it is well taken, that I have run across the same thing. It is absolutely impossible to get his application for reinstatement in in time before some man that is on the original list between the time of the discharge and his time of application for reinstatement. And I wish to say, in answer to the gentleman, that the present head of the Civil Service Commission is trying to invoke a new policy for the purpose of curing that very thing. He is trying to do this, and that is one of the reasons, I understand, that they have sent down an additional request for money; that they can put a little bit of practicability into that examination of these rural carriers. A lot of these boys out of a high school can take the examination and put it all over a man who has had years of experience in that kind of thing, when under the policy he is entitled to preference.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman be extended two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I have been interested in the controversy about the duplication of the Efficiency Board and this new organization. Has the gentleman gone into that?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I have gone into it some, and I wish to say here and now that we are not in accord with this idea of appointing a commission upon a commission. There has been a pyramiding of the so-called efficiency propositions, and I have never been able to understand why this last one was appointed, but there seems to be somebody who thought there was some reason for it.

That is just the trouble. We are appointing and reappointing and pyramiding these positions. It has become a practice that has been encouraged so much in the last 10 or 15 years that we have boards that are in constant conflict with each other. So far as I am concerned, I do not approve the action of appointing this last commission.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I yield.

Mr. FESS. I would not be ready to vote to eliminate until I had looked into the necessity for this new board. It might be essential to the Budget system, but it does seem to me, if it is essential, we ought to eliminate the other.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It is not costing the Government anything, because it is made up of selections from these several departments. It is an advisory sort of an arrangement. But, as I say, I do not understand the necessity for it. I want to say in passing that this Bureau of Efficiency—and I have taken some pains to inquire into its workings, because it has been criticized in this House and on the other side more than almost any other activity, I believe—has rendered more service than most any other activity in this Government.

Mr. FESS. Does the gentleman believe the new institution will ultimately involve an appropriation?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes; that is what I think. I never knew one that did not.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 16, noes 63.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to make one statement in reply to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] about what he called the difficulty of passing the civil-service examination for appointment as rural mail carriers. I am quite sure he has not seen the official statistics. They were given to me seven months or more ago by a member of the Civil Service Commission. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] spoke of the extreme difficulty of passing that examination unless the applicant was fresh from school. Now, as a matter of fact there were 18,000 applications for rural carriers last year, and yet this very difficult examination was passed by more than 11,000 of the applicants, and many of the 7,000 who failed to pass failed because of physical disqualifiation and not on account of any trouble with their mental powers or scholarship. Those are the facts.

Mr. ROACH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the section just read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ROACH: Page 5, line 25, after the word "each," insert "Provided further, That no portion whatsoever of the sums hereinbefore or hereinafter appropriated shall be employed, used, or expended in holding or defraying the expenses of holding examinations for the appointment of presidential postmasters."

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment because of the fact that it is legislation. It is not a limitation.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Missouri wish to discuss the point of order?

Mr. ROACH. I would like to make this statement, if the Chairman please, that I do not believe the point of order is well taken on the grounds on which it is presented. As I understand, the appropriations that are being made are proposed to cover the very items that I am objecting to being paid out, namely, the expenses incurred in holding examinations to fill the offices of first, second, and third class postmasters. It is my information that fourth-class post offices are under what we know as the law of the classified service, but that the first, second, and third class post offices are not under the law of classified civil service, and, if that is true, then this amendment would not be legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROACH. I do.

Mr. MANN. Is not the gentleman's amendment a mere limitation on the expenditure of the appropriation?

Mr. ROACH. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. And simply provides that no part of the funds shall be used for that purpose?

Mr. ROACH. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. That is all of it, then.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. You had better read it.

Mr. MANN. That is the trouble; I did read it.

Mr. ROACH. It says "hereinafter" in this bill, not "hereafter." The amendment I have offered simply provides that money from none of these items mentioned in the section previously read shall be paid out for the examination of first, second, and third class postmasters; neither shall the money in any of the other items mentioned in this bill be used for that particular purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is well taken, on the ground that one can not determine at this time what would be or what would not be germane to the subsequent sections of the bill. The Clerk will read.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, the Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, as I understand the point of order, it is that this is legislation. There is no legislation on presidential postmasters, because under the Constitution we can legislate only upon the minor civil offices, and we can certainly put a limitation upon the expenditure of any fund, even if it were for a purpose covered by the legislation. It is plain it is a limitation on the expenditure of money. I do not see how the Chair can hold that because in some other places in the bill there might be some legislation that this would affect this is not in order. This is not a legislative bill. This is an appropriation bill. We can put a limitation on any item in an appropriation bill at any place.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sees no reason to change his decision. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Field force: District secretaries—2 at $2,400 each, 1 $2,200, 4 at $2,000 each, 5 at $1,800 each; clerks—1 of class 4, 1 of class 3, 1 of class 1, 7 at $1,000 each, 6 at $900 each, 5 at $840 each; messenger boy, $480; in all, $45,680: Provided, That the Civil Service Commission shall include in its estimates for 1924 items covering the field force detailed from departments and offices, and the heads of such departments and offices shall in their estimates for 1924 make corresponding reductions in the appropriations from which the employees detailed to the Civil Service Commission have been paid.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, I hesitate to address my colleagues, because I know it is usually the custom when a man is down to kick him, and the Shipping Board has certainly received its share of criticism. However, I have received so many letters from my constituents objecting to and protesting against the methods of advertising pursued by the Shipping Board, I feel it my duty to call your attention to same. In this bill, as I understand it, about $900,000 will be spent in advertising. I am the last of my colleagues to object to legitimate advertising, for I appreciate the value of advertising; but I have before me a copy of the World's Work, January, 1922, containing a page advertisement paid for by the Shipping Board, which reads in part as follows:

"You are tired of the old winter vacation round. You want something new—

I will not read the rest of it, but will simply state it tells you to go to South America.

I also have before me a copy of the National Geographic Magazine, January, 1922, which has three full-page advertisements by the Shipping Board in one issue, one of which reads:

You are tired of the old winter vacation round. You want something new—

Then there is this one—

China is the place to go this year. This is the year to see China.

In the Saturday Evening Post, January 14, 1922, there is a full-page advertisement, costing, I understand, $6,000, to this effect:

Now is the time to see South America. Now, as never before, South America, the playground of nations, invites you. These splendid new ships are operated for the United States Government by the Munson Steamship Lines. Write for booklet. United States Shipping Board, information desk 2471, Washington, D. C.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SEARS. Yes.

Mr. STEVENSON. Is there anything about going to Florida in that advertisement?

Mr. SEARS. Not a word. [Laughter.] But you need not worry about this, for you can not stop the people from going to Florida, as they know about our beautiful scenery and wonderful climate. I am glad my colleague from South Carolina asked that question. I have before me The Miamian, published by the citizens of Miami, Fla., which is costing them thousands of dollars, urging American citizens to go to Florida and spend the winter. I hope he has received this magazine, and while I know he is a very busy man, that he has found time to read it, and if he has, I believe he will agree with me when I say it is not necessary to go to South America or any other foreign country, and also that we have enough places of beauty and interest to go to in this country.

Mr. ANDERSON. And spend their money. [Laughter.]

Mr. SEARS. Yes. Why not there better than in some foreign country?

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KNUTSON. Is the gentleman going to——

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that a Member of the House can not be taken off the floor in that way.

Mr. KNUTSON. I am seeking information——

Mr. WINGO. You will continue to seek it. A Member can not be taken off the floor in that way.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida will proceed.

Mr. SEARS. I would like to call the attention of my colleagues to the fact that this year we are going to appropriate a million and a half dollars in beautifying our magnificent national parks, and why should not our citizens visit these first? Besides Florida, there is the State of California. I have never visited that beautiful State, but some day I hope to go out there and enjoy their climate. There is also the State of North Carolina, also the States of South Carolina, Georgia, and Texas, which are spending hundreds of thousands of dollars in advertising in magazines and newspapers urging the American people to stay at home and see America first, and also urging the people of foreign countries to come to this great country and enjoy our climate.

Mr. Chairman, I do not believe it is fair for the Government to spend the taxpayers' money urging the American people to go to foreign countries when there is so much in America to see. If they were spending their own individual money, then there could be no complaint, but the Government should quit spending the people's money trying to offset the cry that was raised here some years ago of "see America first," and also in so far as possible nullify the advertisements of our own people. Referring to my own district, I will say I realize I have one of the most progressive districts in the world, and——

Mr. KNUTSON. What district does the gentleman represent?

Mr. SEARS. The district reaching from Jacksonville to Key West.

Mr. KNUTSON. Is that the best part of Florida?

Mr. SEARS. The gentleman is unkind in trying to embarrass me. I am speaking for Florida, and if he has listened, for resorts also in other States. I represent a district where a brother of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] resides, and he is a fine man, active and progressive. The gentleman who has charge of this bill also owns property in my district. It might interest you, Mr. Chairman, to know that there is not a colleague of mine who does not have a former constituent or relative now living in my district.

Mr. STAFFORD. There is great activity also in liquid goods down there, is there not?

Mr. SEARS. Yes. We have the Gulf on one side and the Ocean on the other. But if the gentleman is referring to that beverage which made Milwaukee famous, I will state Bimini, an English island, is only about 30 miles from Miami, and I am told you can get water or any drink you desire down there. [Laughter.] I also desire to say to my colleague from Wisconsin, I am not alarmed because of the number of northern people moving into my district, for almost all good Republicans when they move there become good Democrats. But I earnestly protest against the Shipping Board advertising to the American people that there is nothing in America to see and that they must go abroad in order to see something worth while. If they are going to continue this policy, then I frankly confess the cities and States who do advertise to such a large extent had just as well stop advertising, for they can not compete with the Government and such advertisement as they may send out. In other words, Mr. Chairman, it is simply a matter of the Government spending the people's money advertising "You are tired of America—go abroad"; while the people of the United States, or at least, the citizens of many States are advertising "There is enough to see in the United States; why spend your money abroad"? I earnestly and emphatically protest against this, and believe my colleagues will agree with me when I say it is neither fair nor just.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Florida has expired.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, may I have one minute more?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent to proceed for one minute more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SEARS. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, when we made the railroad rates almost prohibitory for the man of ordinary means that was enough, and that even then the Government had gone too far. But now to come along and advertise page after page—three pages in one magazine and a solid page in the Saturday Evening Post—urging people to believe that there is nothing in the United States to see, and insisting that you must go abroad, is a wanton waste of the people's money, and some limitation should be placed around the expenditure of that $900,000.

Mr. Chairman, permit me to again state Florida can take care of herself, and in proof of this I only have to state when I first entered Congress there were less than 200,000 people in my district, while to-day there are more than 400,000—this does not include the thousands of tourists who are simply spending the winter there—and we are still growing by leaps and bounds. Our climate is unexcelled; our health condition ranks with the best of any State in the Union; our people are whole-souled and happy; our State has only begun to grow, and to those of you who have not had the pleasure of paying us a visit I trust some day you may do so in order that you may not only verify what I have said but can say I did not half paint the picture.

I shall not take up your time telling you about West Palm Beach, Palm Beach, Fort Lauderdale, Daytona, New Smyrna, Sanford, St. Augustine, Jacksonville the gateway to our State, and the many other wonderful and excellent winter and summer resorts in my district, nor shall I go into details of Tampa, Lakeland, St. Petersburg, Gainesville, the home of our university, Pensacola, and the many other places in the districts of my colleagues from Florida. Suffice it when I tell you we have spent millions of dollars for perfect roads and millions of dollars draining the Everglades, the land of which is only equaled by the lands along the banks of the Nile. And yet we have, as previously stated, just begun. All we ask is a fair deal, and again I say there is enough to see in Florida without going abroad. What say California, North Carolina, Texas, and if this same policy is pursued during the summer months New York, New Jersey—the State that boasts of Atlantic City—Maine and other States throughout the Union? [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

For examination of presidential postmasters, including travel, printing, stationery, contingent expenses, additional examiners and investigators, and other necessary expenses of examinations, $75,000: Provided, That no person shall be employed hereunder at a rate of compensation exceeding $1,800 per annum, except five at not to exceed $3,500 each.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that paragraph, that it is a provision for an expenditure that is not authorized by any statutory law.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, if there is any law that authorizes examinations for postmasters, except the Executive order of the President, I have not been able to find it, and I find that the order of the President itself says that it is merely a presidential regulation, which shows that there is no statutory provision for it. Therefore, if I understand the rule of this House that no appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill or be in order as an amendment thereto for any expenditure not previously authorized by law unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress—if that rule is in force, and there is no statutory provision for the examination of presidential postmasters, and it depends entirely and solely upon an Executive order, then I think I have brought my case within the rule.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I will state to the Chair, as a matter of history, that the present Executive order is a continuation of the Executive order inaugurated by President Wilson. The President of the United States, amongst other things, is authorized to issue Executive orders. Of course, I take it an Executive order can not be authorized unless it is predicated upon a law authorizing it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the gentleman from Indiana yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does not the law specifically prescribe how postmasters of the first, second, and third class shall be appointed?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The law provides how the examinations for fourth-class postmasters shall be held.

Mr. WILLIAMS. They are under the civil service.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But the law provides that postmasters of the first, second, and third class shall be appointed by the President of the United States and their appointment confirmed by the Senate. Now, this Executive order merely provides the machinery to enable the President to make proper appointments. It is not based on any law.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It is based on a law. If it was not, the Executive order would not be authorized at all. Section 2852, prescribing the duties of the Civil Service Commission, provides amongst other things that it shall be the duty of said commissioners first to aid the President as he may request in preparing suitable rules for carrying this act into effect, and when said rules shall have been promulgated it shall be the duty of all officers of the United States in any department to which such rules shall relate to aid in all proper ways in carrying such rules and all modifications thereof into effect. So, as a matter of fact, the Civil Service Commission is appointed as an auxiliary or aid to the President, subject to his Executive order, and there can not be any question about that.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. WINGO. The act to which the gentleman refers is an act with reference to the classified service?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. Authorizing the President to cover any particular employees of the Government into the civil service. But the gentleman does not contend, and I understand the President does not contend, that the President's Executive order puts these postmasters under the civil service. It is true the law does provide that the Civil Service Commission shall assist the President in certain things, but that is with reference to the classified service. When the President makes an order covering certain employees into the civil service, then the Civil Service Commission are to do certain things, but it is not contended by anyone that these first, second, and third class postmasters are under the civil service.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Will the gentleman from Indiana yield for a question?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Does not the fact that the law vests the appointment of these postmasters in the President carry with it by implication the authority of the President to choose his own methods of appointment?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I think the gentleman's position is tenable. I also think that under the law establishing the Civil Service Commission they are appointed as an aid to the President of the United States in inquiring into the classification of Civil Service officers in the first place, and in the second place to aid the President as he may request in preparing suitable rules, and so forth, and as stated it is one of the duties incumbent upon the President of the United States to appoint these postmasters. Now, he may issue an Executive order to any agency appointed for the purpose of assisting the President in carrying out the laws of the United States, to aid him in inquiring into the qualifications and fitness of appointees, or to aid him in anything pertaining to ascertaining the fitness of appointees to these positions. Therefore I say that he has the right, not only by reason of the fact that he is charged under the law with the appointing of these postmasters but it is the duty of the Civil Service Commission to aid him in carrying out that law. It is a purely administrative function.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, the statement of the distinguished gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] that this idea originated with President Wilson does not constitute it law. While I admit that President Wilson had a lot of good sense, he never had the constitutional power to enact a law under which an appropriation could be made in this House.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. He did it on many occasions.

Mr. STEVENSON. He did it because you fellows laid down and did not make a point of order.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the rule is exceedingly clear. There must be an authorization and that authorization must be made by law. There is no provision that an authorization may be made by Executive order.

In construing the rule the Chairman will find the following language:

> As all bills making or authorizing appropriations require consideration in Committee of the Whole, it follows that the enforcement of the rule must ordinarily occur during consideration in Committee of the Whole.

Now, when did it become pertinent for the President to make an Executive order which was considered in Committee of the Whole? In other words, the law authorizing the appropriation must be a law which has been passed upon by the representatives of the people in Committee of the Whole and determining the rights of the people as in Committee of the Whole and reported to the House.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEVENSON. I will.

Mr. FESS. Does not the gentleman's argument go to the lack of authority for the Executive order?

Mr. STEVENSON. No, sir. The President may prescribe any method he sees fit to secure the proper appointees for him to name for the Senate. He can make any regulations, but when he calls on the House of Representatives to make an appropriation to defray the expense he is reaching beyond his jurisdiction.

Mr. FESS. Does the gentleman concede that the President has authority under the law to make an Executive order?

Mr. STEVENSON. The President has authority under the law to say: "I am the constituted appointing power of presidential postmasters, and I as the appointing power hereby say that I will only appoint under the following circumstances: I will require an examination and have selections made from the three highest contestants." But when he goes further and says, "I hereby decree that the House of Representatives shall appropriate $75,000 to defray the expenses of this examination," he is invading the province of this House, and he can not get away with it.

The authority says:

> As all bills authorizing or making appropriations—

There must be some bill authorizing the appropriations in order to make it in order—> requiring consideration in Committee of the Whole, it follows that the enforcement of the rule must follow during the Committee of the Whole.

Then they go on and state:

> The authorization by existing law required in the rule to justify appropriations may be made also by a treaty if it has been ratified by both the contracting parties. And a resolution of the House has been held sufficient authorization for an appropriation for the salary of an employee of the House even though the resolution may have been agreed to only by a preceding House. The omission to appropriate during a series of years for an object authorized by law does not repeal the law, and consequently an appropriation when proposed is not subject to the point of order.

But that has not gone to the point of saying that the dictum of a President shall be the law of the land.

A resolution of the House is held sufficient authorization for an appropriation of a salary to an employee of the House, even though the resolution may have been agreed to by a preceding House.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there is the rule of the House, and the construction that has always been placed upon it heretofore has been that the authorization must be a bill which has been passed upon by a Committee of the Whole representing the whole people and reported by the committee and passed and become a law; that a treaty which under the Constitution has the power of law when it has been ratified by both parties is the supreme law of the land, and a treaty will authorize an appropriation because it has the force of law, like the treaty to pay the United States of Colombia $25,000,000. That was the law of the land ratified by both parties and is authorization for an appropriation. But an Executive order—I do not care what the prerogative of the President is—an Executive order which declares that there must be an examination and which calls upon this House to appropriate for that examination is not a sufficient authorization for an appropriation, to come within the rules which are laid down for the government of this House, but is an executive usurpation by an executive officer to spend the money of the House and is not authorized by law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The question arises on the paragraph making appropriation for the purpose of examination by the Civil Service Commission of presidential appointees for post offices. It is admitted that this examination is required under existing order by the President. The question is whether or not it is authorized by existing law. What the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. STEVENSON] says is of course entirely true. There must be some provision of existing law that authorizes the appropriation or else it is not authorized by existing law.

The provision referred to by the gentleman from Indiana as existing law is in this book known as Barnes's Federal Code, page 621, and is a part of section 2859:

> It shall be the duty of said commissioners: First, to aid the President, as he may request, in preparing suitable rules for carrying this act into effect, and when said rules shall have been promulgated it shall be the duty of all officers of the United States in the departments and offices to which any such rules may relate to aid, in all proper ways, in carrying said rules, and any modification thereof, into effect.

It is suggested by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO] there may possibly be an inference, at least, that these provisions might refer to merely the classified service. However, the broad scope of the power is shown by the provision in the same chapter with reference to the limitation on the activities of Congressmen:

No recommendation of any person who shall apply for office or place under the provisions of this act which may be given by any Senator or Member of the House of Representatives, except as to the character or residence of the applicant, shall be received or considered by any person concerned in making an examination or appointment under this act.

That evidences, of course, a very broad interpretation of the act, as it applies to any person who shall apply for any "office or place." That would necessarily include applicants for post offices.

As the power is granted without reservation to the President to make such appointments, and as he is authorized to prescribe rules and regulations for the Civil Service Commission, it would appear that the authority is complete in law for the appropriation of funds from the Treasury for such purpose. The giving of additional duties to an appointee of the President by an Executive order of the President, it seems, would clearly imply that such service must be paid for. As the President has the power to make orders to increase the efficiency and to regulate even the duties and prescribe rules for the conduct of the Civil Service Commission, if he has given an Executive order to the Civil Service for the performance of duties with regard to his office, an appropriation for such service is clearly within the provisions of the law. The Civil Service Commission is not limited only to duties with regard to the classified service. The President can create new duties and ask them to perform any duties under existing law that he chooses to do, and he has chosen to do that in this case.

Therefore it seems to the Chair that the appropriation is authorized by existing law, and the point of order is overruled.

Mr. ROACH. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ROACH: Page 7, line 10, strike out all of lines 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, and 15, inclusive.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ROACH] has made some very astonishing and, I am certain, some very erroneous statements. He seems to have made them on the authority of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO], but he far exceeded anything the gentleman from Arkansas stated. That gentleman saw fit to put his interpretation upon certain actions of the department, and then the gentleman from Missouri states his further interpretation as actual facts.

Mr. WINGO. I will state to my friend that I have no desire to suffer the proverbial fate of the innocent bystander, but if the gentleman wishes, and will put them in the RECORD, I can furnish two bushel baskets full of letters that will sustain the charge—letters that I have received since I made the charge before.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. There will be about a two-bushel basket full of complaints from disappointed candidates.

Mr. ROACH. The gentleman misunderstood what I said, that the reports emanate from the Civil Service Commission and the Post Office Department themselves, that the Members of Congress can get anything they want in the matter of post-office appointments, and I believe it is true. I have heard those reports, and have been told that, as a matter of fact, they are true.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman from Missouri is undertaking to make charges that he can not substantiate in any manner whatever. I think I know something about what is going on, and I never heard of such statements emanating from the departments. On the contrary, I know that the statement of the gentleman from Missouri is incorrect, and I know it from statements that my own colleagues have made to me, as I know it from personal experience. I do not know it from my having tried to influence the commission in any improper way, but I know it from my experience and from colleagues, gentlemen who have stated repeatedly to me that the examinations were conducted fairly, and that often the men that they wanted were excluded, but that they could do nothing about it. I have been compelled to write my constituents the same thing, that I could do nothing about it, when, as often occurred, Democrats were marked highest, or the particular party I wanted failed to get a passing grade.

Mr. ROACH. I did not say the reports were true. I said the reports were emanating from the department, and I have heard them and you have heard them. I have not said the reports were true. I have only heard about them.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I have not heard any such reports.

Mr. FESS. I would like to state to the gentleman and also to the Membership of the House that owing to a young man's service overseas I was exceedingly anxious to see him appointed postmaster in one of the towns in my district, and I made that known. The examination was conducted with the full knowledge that he had served overseas. But, unfortunately, he could not qualify under the term "necessary experience." He had not had experience. I asked whether the President's Executive order would give him preference because of overseas service and allow his overseas service to count on his experience, and I received yesterday an official answer that it would not.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Such a regulation ought to be abolished.

Mr. FESS. These charges that a Congressman can get anything he wants I do not think ought to be made seriously. If it is a matter of humor, all right; but it is certainly not true.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman from Iowa yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I would like to have some of this time myself. I think I can explain some of the ratings of the candidates. I happened to be at the Civil Service Commission's office one day, and while I was sitting there two clerks were reading back and forth and checking up their reports that they had received. I do not know where the candidate lived, nor for what position he was seeking, but evidently some post office.

I listened to some of the questions and answers. Letters had been written to citizens of his town making inquiry with reference to his fitness for the position, and one answer was that he had no fitness whatever; that he had no tact. Another party answered that he was not a public-spirited individual, and that he had refused to buy Liberty bonds, and was very unpopular in the town. Still another said he had no business capacity. There were other answers of that kind, all confidential information, that had been furnished the Civil Service Commission, information that his Congressman could not have acquired, although it would have been well if he could have done so.

Mr. STEVENSON. Does the gentleman think it is a good system that enables a crowd of fellows to paste a man in the back, where he can not see it?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Just to show how far the gentleman's question goes, I would advise him that these men from whom the commission received the information were selected by the candidate himself, and their names had been given to the commission as references. Like some other politicians, they had overrated their popularity.

Mr. SEARS. My colleague from Ohio [Mr. FESS] was talking about soldiers. In the first congressional district one passed an examination and was the only one eligible, but they would not appoint him. He passed, I understand, a second time, but because there were not three they would not give him an appointment. In another place in my district both candidates failed, and the lowest one received the appointment.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I do not yield for the purpose of a speech. The gentleman can get his own time. The gentleman complains because the Civil Service Commission followed the rules when no candidate passes. The selection is then made without regard to the examination.

I do not believe that there is any foundation for the insinuation made with reference to the commission. The man who can influence them to violate the rules has much more influence with them than I have, or any other Member who has given me his experience.

Mr. ROSE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Iowa give me time to present a case that came under my own personal observation and which is in support of the statements made by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN]?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. ROSE. I know of a young man who was in France for a long period of time during the late war and who presented himself for examination for postmaster under civil service, but who failed to qualify. He reported his failure to me. I was under the impression that his preference was not allowed him, and I made it my business to ascertain from the department whether or not the 5 per cent to which he was entitled was given to him, and learned that it was allowed. The young man was of opinion that he would be entitled to another examination, and I undertook to find out whether that would be permitted or not. He told me himself that he was unable to pass the examination with respect to business qualifications, and that a reexamination would not help him in any way, and I made no further effort in his behalf, but commended him for his frankness.

Now, the point I want to make is that, so far as I can see, the examinations are fairly conducted, and that the reports made by the commission are proper, and that there is no foundation upon which to make the statements that have been made upon this floor in public criticism of the work and reports of the commission.

I do not see how the Civil Service Commission could do the things with which it is charged without our knowing about them, and, in my opinion, the work of the commission is properly conducted and fairly conducted under the rules that now obtain. Whether the system employed is proper is another question entirely.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I know of many cases showing just contrary to the conditions stated by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ROACH], where a Congressman wanted some particular person for a special reason, and there was no way to get him appointed, so far as I can learn. The Civil Service Commission has not been prostituting itself at the behest of Congressmen, but has been enforcing the law to the best of its ability and belief.

Mr. SEARS. I was not criticizing the Civil Service Commission at all. I was referring to the appointment of postmasters. The Civil Service Commission was perfectly fair, so far as I know.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The Civil Service Commission is undertaking to carry out the law and the system in good faith and to the best of its ability. If the system is bad, change it; but do not criticize the Civil Service Commission because some of the candidates' records will not stand up under the replies received by the Civil Service Commission from the very persons they have picked out in their own communities to pass upon their qualifications and recommend them to the commission.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I wish to call the attention of gentlemen to the fact that I have agreed with gentlemen here that we should rise at 4 o'clock.

Mr. WINGO. I would like to have five minutes before you do.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. WINGO. I hope the gentleman will withhold that motion until I have had five minutes in view of some of the statements that have been made.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I make that motion, Mr. Chairman.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TOWNER, Chairman of the Committe of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having under consideration the bill (H. R. 9981) making appropriations for the Executive and for sundry independent bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent to revise his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. SEARS. To revise and extend my remarks made this afternoon on the Shipping Board.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

There was no objection.

ANTILYNCHING BILL.

Mr. UPSHAW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House.

Mr. WALSH. What about?

Mr. UPSHAW. On the Dyer antilynching bill, inasmuch as I shall be necessarily absent on a sacred mission when the discussion on that bill is resumed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. UPSHAW. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, with a passion of patriotic purpose and humanitarian anxiety which I can not put into words I remind the proponents of this misnamed antilynching bill of that ringing declaration of the great English commoner when the "storming of the Bastile" was announced in Parliament: "How much is this the greatest day that freedom has ever known?" and paraphrasing that immortal exclamation I shall feel like exclaiming when the administration leaders "put through" this outrageous measure: How much is this the greatest tragedy against the American Negro and the Federal Constitution which this Republic has ever known! The bill is righteous in name but outrageous in its provisions. But for the blandishment of its name and—I measure my words when I say it—but for political fear, a fear that can not be well defined, but which has voiced itself in subdued tones in cloakrooms and corridors since this bill has been pending, I frankly believe that this unspeakable travesty on constitutional law and elemental justice would not get 100 votes on the Republican side. Of course it should not be made political, but it is both political and sectional in its purpose, and its actual application.

WORSE THAN THE "FORCE BILL."

It is worse than the notorious "force bill" of a generation ago, which so disgusted the fair-minded, conservative people of the North that it was strangled aborning by a groundswell of public indignation. That bill dealt with ballots and election privileges, while this Dyer bill not only strikes at the very foundations of our State governments, making of them an empty shell and a hollow mockery, but it carries provisions and imposes conditions which encourage the criminal and forget the victim of his atrocious crime. And these very conditions—as brought out by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HERSEY] in that immortal speech which braved party displeasure and eloquently plead for justice and sectional fellowship—will inevitably increase race prejudice and make harder the conditions of the Negro in the section where he is most at home and where he is capable of his highest happiness and prosperity.

OPPOSED TO A "DOUBLE LYNCHING."

Hear me, my colleagues, I am more opposed to lynching than the proponents of this bill. I oppose lynching a human being, and I also oppose lynching the Constitution of the United States. Every Congressman from the South is naturally far more interested in stopping this awful crime than you men of other sections can possibly be, for you hear about it chiefly from a distance, but we sit up with it and suffer with it "every day and Sunday, too."

Lynching is a horrible crime. It is barbarous in spirit and merciless in execution. Declaring itself a protest against the impotence of law, it engenders a reckless and insidious spirit that ultimately tramples all law and endangers the security of society.

Because of these facts—facts too patent to admit of discussion—it is the duty of every patriotic citizen to stand aggressively against every phase and form of mob violence. Personally I have tried to live up to the spirit of my own teaching. Twenty-five years of platform utterance and 15 years of editorial expression will reveal my uncringing attitude against the perpetrators of mob violence as lawless murderers and enemies of community peace and safety. I have pursued this course, allow me to say, in the face of hostile threats and frequent criticism, for there is no State or section that has not its lawless element.

But, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I rejoice to declare that for the most part the rank and file of the people have stood with the leaders of thought and action in my own section for the majesty of the law. Editors have denounced lynching, the pulpit has cried out against it, officers have bravely fought it, while publicists and patriots everywhere have honestly tried to build up that wholesome respect for all law that will make lynching impossible.

In face of these outstanding facts and in face of the constitutional provision that police powers are reserved to the States, I must express my great surprise and my keen disappointment that this bill, which proposes to stop lawlessness, invades the sanctity of constitutional law and actually offers the preposterous proposition to penalize thousands of innocent people because of the crimes of the guilty few. Never before in the history of Federal legal procedure have I heard of such a lawless application of law. This bill, whatever the good intentions of its proponents, reads like a "carpetbag" bill.

INNOCENT SUFFER FOR THE GUILTY.

Not only the county in which the mob crime is committed is held guilty before this sweeping Federal statute but—worse than all—the innocent people of the innocent counties through which a mob may elect to carry a criminal to the scene of his crime for execution—yea, though the journey be made in the dark hours of the night while the law-abiding inhabitants are peacefully sleeping—those counties, too, are adjudged guilty in the eyes of the Nation and of the world. Why, gentlemen, it would be just as sensible and just as just to penalize every innocent citizen in America because this crime is committed on American soil.

TRAMPLES PERSONAL JUSTICE AND CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

Not only does this proposition trample every principle of elemental justice to the individual citizen, levying a penalty on thousands for a crime of which they are not only innocent but which they absolutely deprecate, but this law clearly tramples the Constitution of the United States, in that it would deprive the penalized counties of the due process of law guaranteed by the Federal Constitution. It would penalize the county without the requirement of any proof of misconduct or neglect on the part of the county officials charged with the duty of the administration of the laws, and would afford no redress whatever for any county, even though its own citizens did not in any sense participate in the lynching. Thus, without allowing the indicted county its day in court, its money would be taken and its people unjustly, outrageously indicted. This constitutes the equity and ethics involved; but I remind you that while a State can make such a law concerning a county, because the county is a part of itself in governmental action, without a change in our Federal Constitution the National Government has no authority to coerce a county.

THERE IS NO ANALOGY.

If it be answered as it was in the preliminary debate, that the Federal Government now invades the State to enforce the prohibition law, I remind you that the National Government did not extend its strong arm into the State or county for the enforcement of this law until after the liquor traffic was outlawed by the Federal Constitution through due governmental process.

The debate thus far has revealed already several honest admissions, even from its friends, that this proposed law against lynching may not stand the constitutional test.

Liquor was a commodity, a devilish sort of commodity, which, as an article of commerce became a national evil, and that national evil required a national remedy. But lynching is not a "commodity"; it is a local crime which can only be cured by a wholesome, individual conscience and a cumulative expression of that conscience.

A FRUITLESS REMEDY.

The sole excuse for urging such a law is an effort to deter from lynching. At present there is a law on the statute books of every State in the Union defining the crime of murder, and every man who participates in a lynching does so well knowing that he is committing murder and subjecting himself to the extreme penalty of the law. If this fear does not prevent lynching, would the knowledge that his county would be mulcted for damages restrain a man who would be willing to expose himself to the extreme penalty of the law? Certainly the fear of infinitesimal taxation will not deter a murder-mad man when the fear of the gallows fails.

WHAT SHALL BE DONE?

Every anxious patriot, every defender of the law, every friend of humanity is asking, "What shall be done to curb this mighty evil?" I have the answer: Stop the crime that produces it. [Applause.] And for God's sake stop the maudlin sentiment that weeps for the lyncher's victim and forgets the poor victim of the rapist and murderer lying yonder in an untimely grave, or living, bleeding, dying amid lacerated hearts in a home shadowed with a sorrow worse than death. Let the honest friends of this unwise measure send wise evangels of purity and purpose among the classes that furnish the criminal victims of the lawless lyncher's wrath and tell them to stop their hellish crimes or they will be promptly sent to hell. We of the suffering South will gladly join every humanitarian friend of law and order from Omaha, from Chicago, from East St. Louis, from Springfield, Ohio, and, God knows, right here in the Nation's Capital, and help them to plant in human hearts, both white and black, the foundation principles of that regenerating Christian truth—yes, and that wholesome fear—that will make them respect the laws of God and man. Do this instead of encouraging that fatal folly of the New York and Boston "Equal Rights Leagues," that are preaching a doctrine as impossible in Boston as it is in Atlanta, and as unthinkable in New York and St. Louis as it is in Anglo-Saxon America everywhere. [Applause.]

A PITIFUL PICTURE.

It is as blindly pitiful as it is dangerous and outrageous that never—not one single time—have I read in a Negro paper or heard from a white sentimentalist in advocating this so-called antilynching bill one earnest plea to stop the crime that started lynching, and which outraged communities everywhere seldom know how to forgive. Flaming headlines and incendiary stories have dealt with the details of the lynchers' crime, but no shocking details of the outraged white girl who was the darling of a happy home; no details of the crime that caused the young farmer to come home at noon or at nightfall to find the violated body of his young wife cold in her own lifeblood or piteously pleading to die; no details, if you please, of how a splendid young man on the border line of my district, who had married a beautiful girl of a noble family, had his head split open, while sitting at the supper table, by a trusted Negro farm hand who held that suffering, helpless, little woman for two hours in his hellish arms. In vain did Gov. W. Y. Atkinson plead with the infuriated mob to "let the law take its course." Maddened, as no man on the floor of this House can understand, they told the governor they would "fix him, too, if he did not get out of their way"—even as the mob recently did the mayor of Omaha—and they took that black fiend who had made himself a beast and sent him to perdition without ceremony or delay.

Do not say that such a swift visitation of mob violence is only meted out to a black beast. I saw the tree on which a white beast was hung for killing a whole family and burning the house down on their dead bodies. These true incidents are recited in shame and sorrow, but likewise in fidelity, in order that you honest men of other sections, who would love to know the truth and do the right thing, may understand something of the provocation we often face in the section where lynching is so often the frantic resort of outraged communities.

OPINION OF GEORGIA'S SECRETARY OF STATE.

A clear and powerful discussion of this angle of the question is herewith presented from Hon. S. G. McLendon, Georgia's brilliant secretary of state. Elected to his present position without leaving his rolling chair in the Kimball House, Atlanta, where I also reside, this remarkable man with his ripeness of general scholarship and his wealth of legal acumen, speaks "at the top of his voice" with a cogency that should command national attention.

I am frank to say that with all my admiration for his learning and his patriotism, I can not go with him quite all the way in his every conclusion, but it will be a wholesome and illuminating experience for honest men and women of other sections to carefully study this patriotic philosopher's reply to my telegram asking for an expression on this vital subject:

ATLANTA, GA., December 20, 1921.

Hon. W. D. UPSHAW,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

Answering your telegraphic inquiry, the law of self-defense and the right of self-defense is inherent in man as an individual and in the State as representing its collective individuality. The United States, through Congress, has the right of self-defense, and whenever in the opinion of Congress public safety requires it exercises the right, but only in case of war can it exercise this right to the fullest extent—that is, to the subordinating of all rights to the right of self-defense. Freedom of speech, of the press, of worship, and of assembly are not guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States except as against congressional abridgement, and only when the United States is at war, Congress, being given the war power and the right to pass all laws necessary and proper to the carrying into effect of war power, can and does deny rights protected and guaranteed only as against congressional invasion. In the late war Congress exercised to the limit the right of self-defense abiding in the Nation. The suspension of the writ of habeas corpus is an act of self-defense on the part of the State. The individual has the right of self-defense. Organized society has the right of self-defense, and unorganized society exercises the right of self-defense whenever that ancient and universal principle, the people's safety, is violated. Whenever and wherever on this earth crime is committed so atrocious as to place the perpetrator beyond the pale of humanity this universal principle, as supreme law, instantly asserts itself. The forfeiture of all right as a human being voluntarily made by the perpetrator or crime does not take away from society its right of self-defense, nor can it effectually deny to those immediately concerned to do swiftly that which others far removed from the scene think should be done slowly. No one defends lynching as a practice, but a lynching on accasion is easily comparable to an execution ordered by a court-martial in time of war. The slow-acting machinery of the courts in the ordinary administration of justice is inadequate to the exigencies of the situation. In both cases lynchings are due to provocation. They are a violation of the State law, and Congress has absolutely no power under the Constitution to make any act a crime because of its moral turpitude. The Constitution does not give Congress any police power or criminal jurisdiction except where the commission of the act complained of prevented Congress from carrying into effect a law constitutionally passed, necessary and proper to the exercise of a delegated power.

That Georgia has a lynching record can not be denied, but over and above this record stands out the fact that Georgia furnishes the best home on earth for the Negro. No Negro who owned his home was ever lynched in Georgia.

In 1880 the Negro paid taxes on less than $6,000,000 worth of property in Georgia. In 1920 he paid taxes on over $68,000,000 worth of property. There are more institutions for the higher education of the Negro in Georgia than in any similar area of the earth, and Atlanta, Ga., is the educational center of the Negro race. The largest bank in the world owned and controlled by the Negroes is found in Atlanta; capital stock half a million dollars. The ablest and most patriotic Negro bishop in America is Bishop J. S. Flipper, of Atlanta, my lifelong friend. The two largest barber shops in Atlanta are owned by a Negro, B. F. Herndon. Every barber he has in his employ is a Negro and every customer he has is a white man, and his barber shops are patronized without prejudice. The largest Negro life insurance company in the world is in Atlanta, having assets of more than $1,000,000 and 159,806 policyholders. Georgia does not need the aid of Congress, composed of uninformed and misinformed Members, in order to fulfill her obligations to the balance of the Nation and to mankind.

S. G. McLENDON,
Secretary of State.

THE NEGRO'S NATURAL HOME.

Let me urge you, my honest colleagues, to ponder well those striking concluding declarations from Georgia's wise secretary of state. With the Negro thus happy and prosperous in his natural home in the southland, to which he was long ago exiled by slave traders and slave owners of the North for purely commercial reasons, how much better it would be for his solicitous friends, his real friends, to encourage him to discourage crime among his criminal class instead of harboring the criminal and producing more crime.

Note especially the shining fact that no Negro who owned his home has ever been lynched in Georgia, clearly because he has never committed the crime that so often causes lynching. If the time and the energy, the prejudice and the folly which have been spent in behalf of this vicious and futile measure were only dedicated to the sensible task of encouraging Negroes to buy homes and make dependable members of society, there would be no reason for this discussion.

DANGER SIGNALS HERE AND HEREAFTER.

A glaring illustration of this dangerous folly, this positively devilish leadership, can be found in an editorial in the June, 1921, number of the Crisis, a Negro monthly magazine published in New York, which has furnished a good deal of the argument for the proponents of this bill. You will read it with mingled pity and righteous indignation. Listen:

Seldom has efficient organization been demonstrated more effectively than by the Michigan branches of the National Association for Advancement of Colored People in defeating a bill introduced in the State Legislature of Michigan prohibiting intermarriage between white and colored people. On April 11 the national office received a letter from Harold A. Lett, president of the Lansing branch, stating that such a bill had been introduced on the 7th. The Lansing branch had immediately sent copies to each branch in the State and appealed to political and fraternal organizations to unite in exerting all pressure possible upon their respective representatives and senators to defeat the bill.

The national office at once communicated with all the Michigan branches, urging them to unite in sending a delegation to Lansing to appear at a public hearing on the bill. Publicity was secured through the Michigan newspapers and a number of the branches were urged to hold mass meetings to arouse public sentiment against the measure. The arguments on which opposition to the bill was based were, first, anti-intermarriage laws are a denial of equal protection to colored women, placing the colored girl at the mercy of any white libertine. Second, anti-intermarriage laws would be a public declaration that Negro blood is a physical taint, a theory which no self-respecting colored person can accept. It was also pointed out that the passage of such a law by a legislative body composed wholly of white members implied a fear that laws are needed to prevent white women from marrying colored men. A splendid spirit of cooperation and of activity was shown by all the branches in opposing the bill.

On April 13 the national office received a telegram stating that the bill was killed in the committee on the night of the 12th. (Page 66 of June issue of the Crisis.)

Look and listen again. Here is another danger signal, found on page 60 in the same June issue of the Crisis:

Olmstead's famous journey through the seaboard slave States has been repeated not only in fact but in spirit by a young Englishman, Stephen Graham, who came to America last year to see for himself the workings of the race problem. He visited Virginia, Tennessee, Georgia, Alabama, Florida, Louisiana, and Mississippi. In Georgia he tramped the actual road from "Atlanta to the sea," to be able to contrast the modern conditions of ex-slaves with those of 60 years ago.

First impressions are lasting, because usually they are true. Very often, indeed, the vividness, even the effect of those impressions, may be explained away. But the thing which must needs be explained is still there. Talk as you will—expound, interpret, defend—the fact still remains that America does not accord the rights of life, liberty, and justice to her black citizenry.

We quote two or three passages:

"I felt sorry for the white women of the South; there will some day be a terrible reckoning against them. Their honor and safety are being made the pretext for terrible brutality and cruelty. Revenge, when it gains its opportunity, will therefore wreak itself upon the white woman most. Because in the name of the white woman they justify burning Negroes at the stake to-day, white women may be burned by black mobs by and by. There is no doubt that almost any insurrection of Negroes could ultimately be put down by force, and that it would be very bad for the Negroes and for their cause, but before it could be put down what might happen? And should it synchronize with revolutionary disturbances among the whites themselves, or with a foreign war, what then?

"If America does not cast out the devil of class hate from the midst of her, she will again be ravished by the angel of death as in the Civil War. The established, peaceful routine of a country like America is very deceptive. All seems so permanent, so unshakable. The new refinement, the new politeness and well-lined culture, and the vast commercial organization and the press suggest that no calamity could overtake them. The forces that make for disruption and anarchy is generated silently and secretly. It accumulates, accumulates, and one day it must discharge itself."

To the white American this Englishman's conclusion will come as a shock, but to the colored American his words are often an echo.

By a curious coincidence we read in the current issue of Unity:

"People of African descent in this country are either going to be placed on a plane of absolute equality with other peoples or else there is going to be trouble which will make even the Civil War seem insignificant."

This, gentlemen, this, my well-meaning colleagues, is the type of propaganda going on in the camp of foolish Negro agitators, and eventuating at last in the sentimental hysteria and the campaign promise which brought this bill before Congress. The harm which its enactment into law would bring to both races would write a new chapter among the tragedies of human history. When I commented in private conversation on that provision that would take $10,000 from a county absolutely innocent and give it to the family of the criminal, with never a dollar to the family suffering from the first horrible crime, a brilliant Atlanta club woman, who is prominent in church work, declared:

Why, Congressman, such an outrageous law would actually bring on revolution.

RUINED BY "CARPETBAG" RULE.

It only makes stronger the present case of the southern white man in his attitude toward the Negro when some thoughtless man who is in favor of this bill "points with pride" to the loyalty of the Negro slave to his white master before the Civil War, and especially to the safety of the southern white woman in the guardianship of the Negro slave. Certainly. That is at once the strength and the glory of our contention. We stand with uncovered head before the matchless tribute of Henry Grady to the righteous loyalty of the Negro slave to the inviolate purity of his master's home. But that was before the horrors of reconstruction came. That was before Federal statutes, backed by Federal bayonets, placed "the ignorant ballot in the black hand that still trembled from the shackle of the slave"; that was before "carpetbag" politicians tried by unspeakably brutal methods to make the ignorant Negro slave the political ruler of his intelligent white master; that was before Thaddeus Stevens & Co. in fury and blindness dealt a blow to the Negro from which he has never morally nor politically recovered. For the white man said in effect: "If you are fool enough to turn against the best friends you have on earth, you can just go to the devil." And, alas, many of them have been going there ever since.

Not all, thank God. Not the most, thank God. For the rank and file of the best Negroes and the rank and file of the best white people are living side by side in peace and friendship, and that peace would be permanent and that friendship undisturbed if outside agitators would let us alone.

I hold in my hand a cartoon from a Negro paper—look at it—sent me by a Negro physician, who asks me to support this bill, showing the common basis of the misguided black man's appeal. A Negro is here pictured carrying his age-long burdens—"Jim Crow car," "segregation," "lynching," and so forth—showing that he is restive and defiant concerning his failure to get "social equality."

No man can deny the justice of equal accommodation for equal pay, but you know and I know and everybody knows that the social mingling of white and black in trains, in street cars, and in hotels, to say nothing of more intimate social relationships, is an inevitable breeder of trouble, and every consideration of common sense, of community peace, and happiness demands the segregation of which the agitators complain. Sensible southern Negroes do not want social commingling and foolish northern Negroes shall not have it where Anglo-Saxon manhood is at the helm.

THE SOUTH IS FIGHTING UPWARD.

We are fighting upward in the loyal South, wrestling with problems a hundredfold more difficult than you honest men of other sections can possibly understand. Let us alone—save only to give us that comradely hand of sensible sympathy and understanding fellowship which is due a noble and chivalric people of proven loyalty and consecrated purpose. What shall be done? Create the sentiment that will cause every State to pass such a law as Alabama has, a law impeaching the sheriff and other county officials that do not do their duty. Pass also a State law that requires mounted machine guns in every jail and automatically dismissing the sheriff that does not use them on the crowd bent on murdering a man without law. Do this—do anything that will protect the prisoner and preserve the majesty of the law, but do not wipe out our State laws and our county courts and rape the Federal Constitution in this frenzied effort to correct a giant evil.

And in the name of all that is sane and practical, do not put the $10,000 forfeit in the hands of the criminal's family, who are often themselves a hotbed of criminals. They and their companions in crime would live yet more in idleness and crime.

and some of the worst ones would be tempted to bring on another "lynching bee" in order that another pampering bounty might come from the county treasury.

And if you are determined to outrage the white virtue of the Federal Constitution and penalize the innocent for the sins of the guilty and encourage more crime by causing the rapist and the murderer to feel that "Uncle Sam" is, somehow, taking his part, then go a step further and give another beautiful $10,000 to the family of the victim of the barbarous fiend. To give sympathy to the family of the human devil who is lynched and give neither sympathy nor money to the family of the first and greater sorrow would brand every man who votes for this strangely horrible discrimination as guilty of barbarous sympathies and legal and moral blindness.

MR. FISH AND SENATOR WATSON.

Gentlemen of the House, you will remember that when the debate closed the other day the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] had just finished an impassioned invective against the record of Georgia and against the activities of the junior Senator from Georgia in causing a certain investigation to be held about military cruelties. He said that the Georgia Senator ought to be spending more time in trying to stop lynching than he was in trying to bring about reforms in our Army life.

Mr. Speaker, I hold no brief for the Senator from Georgia. He has proven amply able to take care of himself. But since Senator WATSON'S name was unnecessarily brought into this debate, it must be admitted that, although there are countless noble and knightly men in the Army before whose gentleness and greatness I stand with uncovered head, that Senate investigation has proven with an avalanche of evidence from all over America that there has been a great deal of harsh cruelty on the part of many officers which ought to be forever smashed by the American people. [Applause.]

And it would doubtless be interesting to the gentleman from New York, and perhaps other proponents of this bill, to know that the Senator from Georgia has twice risked his own life in his own community to stop the lynching of Negroes; and when other proponents of the bill have that much to their credit they can then, with greater propriety, indict the Senator from Georgia. He knows the Negro and is his practical friend. I know the Negro and am known as his practical friend. For many years I have visited the Negro churches and the Negro schools, and I have tried to inspire those people, young and old, along worthy lines of righteous and dependable living. And this kind of work, may I say, multiplied by friends from the North and friends of the South will do a thousandfold more good than impossible and incendiary efforts like this so-called antilynching bill.

A MONUMENTAL CONFESSION.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] confessed with monumental candor that the bill was intended especially to "protect the colored race," as he put it, and also was especially leveled at the South. I thank him for his refreshing candor. This means, then, that this bill is both racial and sectional; it means that its discussion now and its operation, if enacted into law, must have but one effect, as the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HERSEY] so strikingly said, "the revival and keeping alive of race prejudice and sectional feeling." In the name of our common heritage and our common destiny as Americans it is time to stop this evil thing. It positively grieves me, as I think of that brilliant portrayal of the increasing commercial and social desolation of the Negroes who have gone North, as brought out by my friend, Mr. COCKRAN, to remember that paid agitators and reformers are spending their time and prostituting their leadership to a propaganda that will not help but will ultimately hurt the Negro.

Indeed, it is hurting him now. These galleries, crowded with Negroes to-day, tell the story of a tragic racial and national pathos. They honestly think that this proposed law will help them. They have been misled by the flaming headlines and incendiary articles in certain Negro publications. And I tell you frankly that those publications are much like the discussions by the proponents of this bill—all sympathy spoken for the fiend whose hellish crime brings on his swift and terrible fate—but never a line, never a word of sympathy for the victim or the family of the victim of rape or murder, or both.

Men, you are riding to your ruin. You are riding your supposed "beneficiaries" to their ruin. Civilization can neither be builded nor preserved by such a blind, one-sided sentimentality. We men of the South, who know the Negro as you men of the North can not know him, are anxious to help him, but our help is helpless and hopeless as long as they shield criminals and do nothing to stop the crime.

Let them come back to the land where they have had an understanding welcome and such a free commercial hand, where their wealth has grown by marvelous strides into more than $2,000,000,000 in farm lands alone, and let them take the advice of their great pioneer, Booker Washington, when he uttered, in my own city of Atlanta, the immortal sentence that gave him international fame. Hear him again:

> My colored friend, remember it is worth far more to you to be permitted to make an honest dollar working side by side with the white man than to be allowed to spend that dollar sitting by him in a theater.

It will be a good, wholesome thing also if they will remember that great truth uttered by Dr. H. H. Tucker when he was editor of the Christian Index, "What God has put asunder let not man join together." And I say with my last word that the thing that has been appealing to me on this side, where I treasure my Republican friends, is the fact that many of them have said to me in the cloakrooms and elsewhere, "We wish to God this bill had not been brought before us. If we vote for it we stultify our conscience and outrage our judgment, and if we vote against it we lose every Negro vote in our community." Gentlemen, such loss would be a badge of honor.

Let me say to you in frankness and in an honest desire for fellowship in the solution of this great question that Anglo-Saxon manhood of the North should shake hands with the Anglo-Saxon manhood of the South and the East and the West, remembering that only in intelligent Anglo-Saxon supremacy, dominated by a restraining and transforming Christian spirit, can be found a sure guaranty for the safety and happiness of this weaker race, the perpetuity of our American institutions, and the inspiration and uplift of all mankind. [Applause.]

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, January 23, 1922, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE.

The Chaplain, Rev. J. J. Muir, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father, Thou hast very often proven Thyself to be a present help in time of trouble. As we look out upon the world this morning we see that sorrow is everywhere present. As multitudes the world over bow before the bier of a distinguished prelate, as a nation sorrows because an honored statesman has passed away, and as there are so many homes shadowed by the presence of a vacant chair, we would ask Thee to-day, our Father, so to move upon our hearts and lives that through those monitions of Thy providence we may learn to live right and to do right, and to fulfill always Thy pleasure in connection with the Nation and with humanity at large. We ask in Jesus' name. Amen.

The Assistant Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of the legislative day of Friday, January 20, 1922, when, on request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

CALL OF THE ROLL.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Glass	McKellar	Simmons
Borah	Hale	McNary	Smith
Brandegee	Harreld	Nicholson	Spencer
Calder	Harris	Norris	Stanfield
Capper	Harrison	Oddie	Swanson
Culberson	Heflin	Overman	Trammell
Curtis	Johnson	Owen	Wadsworth
Dial	Jones, Wash.	Page	Watson, Ga.
Dillingham	Kellogg	Phipps	Watson, Ind.
du Pont	Kenyon	Poindexter	Willis
Edge	King	Robinson
Fernald	McCumber	Sheppard

Mr. HARRISON. I desire to state that the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY] is detained from the Senate by illness.

Mr. CURTIS. I was requested to announce that the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN], and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SUTHERLAND] are absent on official business.

Mr. SMITH. I was requested to state that the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LADD] and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES] are detained at a meeting of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-six Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is not present. The Secretary will call the names of the absentees.

The Assistant Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and the following Senators answered to their names when called:

Caraway	Myers	Ransdell

The following Senators entered the Chamber and answered to their names:

France	La Follette	Moses	Sutherland
Frelinghuysen	Lenroot	Pomerene	Townsend
Gooding	McLean	Smoot	Walsh, Mont.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

PETITIONS.

Mr. HARRIS presented a resolution adopted by the board of directors of the Savannah (Ga.) Cotton Exchange, requesting Congress to make a thorough investigation of the Crop Reporting Bureau of the Department of Agriculture, with a view to discovering the cause of, and instituting remedies for, the alleged gross inaccuracies shown in the report of the 1921 cotton crop as published by the Department of Agriculture, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. WILLIS presented a communication in the nature of a petition of the board of directors of the Cincinnati (Ohio) Association of Credit Men, praying for fair treatment of the railroads of the country in connection with the rate-making power of the Interstate Commerce Commission and the wage-adjustment power of the Railway Labor Board, so that rates may be fair to the public and at the same time yield sufficient income to attract capital for adequate improvements and additions, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. LADD presented 48 petitions of sundry citizens of Souris, Cogswell, Brampton, Lundsvalley, Maddock, Mountain, Goodrich, Mercer, McClusky, La Moure, Marion, Ypsilanti, Eckelson, Pekin, Arnegard, Ryder, Mohall, Maxbass, Wheelock, Reeder, Bucyrus, Haley, Tolley, Norma, Kenmare, Lisbon, Elliott, Coal Harbor, Kulm, Merricourt, Leroy, Backoo, Neche, Sheyenne, Park River, and Hoople, all in the State of North Dakota, and of Newark, S. Dak., praying for the enactment of legislation reviving the Government Grain Corporation, so as to stabilize prices of certain farm products, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a resolution adopted at a public gathering of farmers and business men held at Aneta, N. Dak., January 16, 1922, favoring the enactment of legislation reviving the Government Grain Corporation, so as to stabilize prices of certain farm products, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

PAMUNKEY RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 9050) granting the consent of Congress to the Pamunkey Ferry Co. to construct a bridge across the Pamunkey River in Virginia, and I submit a report (No. 448) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Pamunkey Ferry Co., duly incorporated under the laws of Virginia, and its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Pamunkey River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near Sweet Hall, in King William County, to a point opposite in New Kent County, in the Commonwealth of Virginia, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REPORTS OF THE COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS.

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 2632) to correct the military record of Martin Cletner, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 449) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 1632) for the relief of Charles M. Gourley, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to, and the bill was indefinitely postponed.

Mr. SPENCER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 2004) for the relief of Frank Ferrin, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 450) thereon.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. DILLINGHAM:

A bill (S. 3052) to amend the corporation law of the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. KELLOGG:

A bill (S. 3053) for the relief of Marshall-Wells Co., of Duluth, Minn.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. MCNARY:

A bill (S. 3054) for the relief of John Kearney; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BRANDEGEE:

A bill (S. 3055) granting an increase of pension to Edward F. La Rock (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

A bill (S. 3056) for the purchase of land adjoining Fort Bliss, Tex.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SUTHERLAND:

A bill (S. 3057) granting a pension to Christina A. Dabney; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. UNDERWOOD:

A bill (S. 3058) granting an increase of pension to John A. Shannon; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CALDER:

A bill (S. 3059) for the relief of Ida Smith; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. ODDIE:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 157) extending the time for the performance of certain acts under the act of Congress approved February 25, 1920, entitled "An act to promote the mining of coal, phosphate, oil, oil shale, gas, and sodium on the public domain," and for other purposes; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

ADJUSTMENT OF FOREIGN LOANS.

Mr. NORRIS and Mr. McKELLAR submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them to the bill (H. R. 8762) to create a commission authorized under certain conditions to refund or convert obligations of foreign Governments owing to the United States of America, and for other purposes, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

On motion of Mr. CURTIS it was Ordered, That the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] be excused from further service on the Committee on Banking and Currency, and that the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] be assigned to service on that committee; that the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] be excused from further service on the Committee on Interoceanic Canals and be assigned to service on the Committee on Rules; that the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BURSUM] be assigned to the chairmanship of the Committee on Pensions; and that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PEPPER] be assigned to service on the Committee on Banking and Currency, the Committee on Interoceanic Canals, and the Committee on the Library.

GOLD AND COMMODITY SECURED CURRENCY.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I wish to call attention to a remarkable address delivered by the Comptroller of the Currency, Hon. D. R. Crissinger, before the National Republican Club, of New York City, January 21, 1922, and express my hearty appreciation of his vision and intelligent comprehension of one of the most important of all international problems.

He said that he had in mind to apply the "principle of segregated credit and responsibility, in order to provide a sound, uniform, and reliable basis for the transactions of international trade."

He said:

Granting all that may be said about the difficulties and complications involved, I am nevertheless prepared to make my own modest claims that the thing is possible, that it can be made workable, and that it would produce vast and prompt benefits in all trade and commerce.

On other occasions—

He remarked—

I have referred to the service rendered to medieval Europe by the banks of exchange in the Mediterranean and Hanseatic cities. Banks of exchange preceded institutions of deposit and discount and were the beginning of the modern banking system. They established their own units of accounting and settlement, independent of the national currencies of the different countries. In a time when credit in the modern sense was in its infancy and when the distortion of currency systems and the general ignorance of economic principles presented far greater obstacles than confront us to-day, these institutions contributed greatly to encourage international trade. With no such guaranties of resources and stability as could now be put behind them, these medieval banks of exchange were able to establish their credit and hold the confidence of the merchandising community. Without exception they contributed enormously to establish and maintain the commercial importance of cities which were their seats.

I call attention to what the comptroller says because it confirms the underlying principles of Senate bill 2915, which I offered a few days ago to the Senate with relation to establishing a gold-secured currency for the transaction of international exchange and for the transaction of the business of Europe "independent of the national currencies of the different countries."

Such a bank will make Europe more productive, will increase the purchasing power of Europe, and in that way will enable Europe to buy the products of this country and help the more rapid restoration of our Nation from its present industrial depression.

I heartily commend the Comptroller of the Currency for his wise suggestion and I shall be delighted to cooperate with the administration to perfect some such measure in the interest of all our people and of the whole world.

RAILROAD CONFERENCE WITH AGRICULTURAL AND INDUSTRIAL REPRESENTATIVES.

The conference was called to order at 10.30 a. m., Mr. James A. Campbell acting as chairman in the absence of Mr. J. R. Howard.

In continuation of the prior conference of September 21, Mr. W. W. Atterbury, as chairman of the special committee of railroad executives, presented the report of said committee to the conference, which report is hereto attached.

In response to the request of the special committee of railroad executives, contained in their report, that representative shippers present bring legitimate representations to the Railroad Labor Board in the matter of wage adjustments through representatives' appearance before said board, the following resolution was adopted unanimously by the conference:

Resolved, That the shippers present pledge themselves to energetically support the carriers in obtaining an adjustment of wages to the economic level of wages prevailing in other lines of industry, with the understanding that, concurrently with such reductions in wages, the benefit of the reduction thus obtained shall be in a manner approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission passed on to the public in the reduction of existing railroad rates, except in so far as such reductions in rates shall be made in the meantime.

The special committee of railroad executives then requested discussion of the Capper bill, S. 1150, and the opposition of the conference thereto. Disapproval of the measure being expressed by all save the agricultural representatives, the latter, together with the railroad executives, were requested to confer at luncheon and report back to the conference such conclusions, if any, as were reached by them. This procedure was agreed to by the agricultural representatives and the special committee of railroad executives.

A discussion then followed as to the operation of the Railroad Labor Board, and what, if any, suggestions were to be made with respect to its future operation. The question was likewise raised as to whether or not some effort should be made to secure the presence of the Railroad Labor Board during the approaching rate hearings of the Interstate Commerce Commission. No motion was offered, since the sentiment expressed indicated the opinion that the presence of the Railroad Labor Board during said hearings, if secured, might result in serious delays in the disposition of the important questions pending before the Labor Board.

Mr. Howard was then asked to report the results of the conference between the railroad executives and the farming representatives, held at noon.

He reported as being present at this conference:

Gen. W. W. Atterbury, chairman special committee of railroad executives.
Howard Elliott, special committee of railroad executives.
W. B. Storey, special committee of railroad executives.
W. J. Harahan, president Chesapeake & Ohio Railway.
R. S. Binkert, assistant to chairman Association of Railway Executives.
J. R. Howard, president American Farm Bureau Federation.
Gray Silver, American Farm Bureau Federation.
O. E. Bradfute, American Farm Bureau Federation.
H. C. McKenzie, American Farm Bureau Federation.
Ralph Snyder, American Farm Bureau Federation.
T. C. Atkeson, secretary The National Grange.
W. I. Drummond, chairman International Farm Congress.

Mr. Howard stated that after a discussion the above representatives of farm organizations unanimously agreed that they did not desire to amend section 15a of the transportation act in any particular, except to remove the proviso in paragraph (3), reading as follows:

Provided, That during the two years beginning March 1, 1920, the commission shall take as such fair return a sum equal to 5½ per cent of such aggregate value, but may, in its discretion, add thereto a sum not exceeding one-half of 1 per cent of such aggregate value to make provision in whole or in part for improvements, betterments, or equipment, which, according to the accounting system prescribed by the commission, are chargeable to capital account.

With respect to the power of State authorities over intrastate rates, they agreed that they did not desire to take away from the Interstate Commerce Commission whatever authority is now vested in it with regard to setting aside intrastate rates which discriminate against interstate commerec, and also that they did not desire to remove from the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission the questions connected with car service, but that, subject to these two reservations, they did desire what would be practically a redrafting of section 6 of the Capper bill, so as to reaffirm the local functions of State commissions.

Gen. Atterbury's committee accepted this compromise with the understanding that the general counsel of the Association of Railway Executives would get in touch with Mr. Gray Silver, legislative agent of the American Farm Bureau Federation, Dr. T. C. Atkeson, secretary of the National Grange, and Mr. James A. Emery, in order to arrive at a revision of the Capper bill along the lines above indicated.

It was moved, seconded, and carried that the report be approved, and when an agreement has been finally reached between those appointed to redraft the bill, this conference will support the bill as amended and give whatever aid it can in securing the passage of the bill.

Referring again to the United States Railroad Labor Board, Mr. Howard expressed his views on the matter, which were along the lines of those expressed by Mr. Campbell, except that Mr. Howard's suggestion would make it a public offense for a strike order to be issued before any dispute between the train-service organizations and the railroads had been heard and decided upon by the Interstate Commerce Commission, either as now constituted or by the addition of new members. The relations of all other employees other than train-service men would have to be handled directly between the representatives of those employees and the individual managements.

Mr. Emery outlined the true functions of the Labor Board, and stated that in many of its decisions it had gone outside of those functions, especially when it laid down certain principles upon which agreements should be negotiated between the railroad employees and the managements.

He stated that the board is so organized and operated that it is easily overwhelmed with a great deal of trivial disagreements, which are manufactured into causes for the board's intervention.

It was suggested that a committee of seven members be appointed, of which Mr. Campbell should be one, Mr. Emery acting as counsel, which committee would represent the conference in its negotiations with the railroad executives, reporting back to the full conference for final action.

This was unanimously agreed to, and Mr. Campbell, as chairman, requested to appoint such committee, to be known as the executive committee.

The committee as appointed consists of:
J. R. Howard, representing agriculture.
S. J. Lowell, representing agriculture.
Charles Hill, representing lumber.
Ernest Trigg, representing building construction.
J. D. A. Morrow, representing fuel.
F. R. Todd, representing manufacture.
J. A. Campbell, representing steel.
J. A. Emery, counsel of the committee.

The question was then raised as to what public statement, if any, should be made with respect to the organization and operation of this conference. Upon motion thereafter duly made and seconded, Mr. Emery was authorized and directed to make, in his discretion, a public statement with respect to the organization of the committee and the progress of their conference.

There being no further business, the meeting adjourned, subject to the call of the executive committee.

ADDRESS BY GEN. ATTERBURY BEFORE CONFERENCE WITH AGRICULTURAL AND INDUSTRIAL REPRESENTATIVES AT WASHINGTON, DECEMBER 9, 1921.

The first meeting of this conference was held in New York City on September 21. It was then planned to hold another session in October, but the exigencies of the strike situation and the summoning of the executives to Chicago before the Labor Board made a postponement inevitable. During the month of November the National Grange and the American Farm Bureau Federation and other organizations have been holding their national meetings, so that to-day was the first convenient date on which the conference could be reassembled.

Since the conference first met the railway executives have taken steps to bring the labor cost of railway operation again to a head, and at their meeting in Chicago on October 14 gave their promise that they would turn over to the public in reduced rates the benefit of such reductions in wages as they can now obtain.

At their meeting in New York, on November 16, they reaffirmed this action, and as an earnest of their desire and intention to reduce rates they offer a voluntary 10 per cent reduction in the rates on practically all important farm products all over the country. Permission to make this reduction has been granted by the Interstate Commerce Commission, the schedules are now in preparation, and I understand that they will be filed, effective as of January 1.

This reduction is for an experimental period of six months, well within which time it is hoped that the reduction in wages now being aimed at will be obtained, in which case this reduction in rates will be permanent.

The carriers in eastern and western territory generally gave the necessary 30 days' notice to their employees of a desire to confer over a reduction of wages on or about November 15. In southeastern and southwestern territory I understand that this notice was given at various dates between November 15 and December 1. In any event, at varying dates after December 15, the carriers will be in a position with due orderly procedure to confer with their employees, and, in the case of disagreement, to certify controversies with the Labor Board, asking a further reduction in basic wages.

With regard to men employed in train and yard service the effort will be to get back at least to the wages which existed prior to the increase of July 20, 1920, and in other classes of labor to get back to the now prevailing rates of pay for such labor in the different parts of the country. The reductions will probably not be uniform in each section, and any estimate of their aggregate can not be wholly accurate, but it is assumed that if the Labor Board grants what the managements are now asking it would result in a reduction of the pay roll amounting to something between three and four hundred million dollars.

The public has a right to expect the railway executives to give it a leadership as to the way out from the present vicious circle of the high cost of operation, high rates, and high cost of living. This the executives are endeavoring to do fully and in an orderly and lawful manner.

They feel that they have now brought the situation to a point where we can profitably discuss concrete steps of cooperation.

In the first place, of course, they desire your cooperation in bringing legitimate pressure to bear upon the Labor Board for the pending reduction in wages. Section 307 of the transportation act requires the Labor Board in fixing wages to take into account not only the cost of living, wages in other industries, and the degree of skill or hazard involved in various lines of railroad work, but also "other relevant circumstances." Among the most relevant of these circumstances the executives feel to be the fact that the agriculture and industry of this country can not and should not be required to go on paying the present rates for transportation made necessary by abnormally high costs, but in pressing this consideration on the attention of the Labor Board they must necessarily rely to a very large extent upon the agricultural and business interests speaking for themselves and pressing this point home.

There are other lines along which profitable cooperation in reducing transportation costs should be given. There are so-called full crew laws in some 12 or 15 States which do not permit railroads to handle their traffic in heavy train loads. There are numerous laws in almost all States, and differing even in adjoining States, with regard to headlights, construction of cars, and many other details which hamper executives in getting the highest efficiency out of the tools of transportation, and which necessarily add to the cost and complexity of railway management. We hope that you will favor joining hands with us in some general campaign to get rid of this costly and demoralizing legislation.

On December 14 a hearing will open before the Interstate Commerce Commission on an inquiry to determine whether or not the railroads can be reasonably required to make any further reductions in rates without compensating reductions in their operating expenses. In connection with those hearings we would like to have your support for our fundamental position that reductions in rates and reductions in expenses should go hand in hand.

In Congress the railroads are faced with the so-called Capper bill, which proposes to strike out the so-called 5½ or 6 per cent rate-making provision and to restore to the State authorities an uncontrolled power of fixing intrastate rates which may conflict with and be discriminatory against interstate rates.

With regard to the first of the two objects of the Capper bill I need only remind you that the so-called 5½ or 6 per cent provision of the transportation act expires on March 1, 1922, and has, therefore, hardly three months to run. Thereafter the Interstate Commerce Commission will from time to time, after due investigation, set the level of what ought to be aimed at as a reasonable return on railway capital. The railroads have not earned this 5½ or 6 per cent for any year since the resumption of private control, nor have they stood upon their right to earn it before attempting to meet the justifiable demands for relief from those who pay railroad rates. We hope, therefore, that you will agree with us that there is no necessity for and nothing to be gained by a repeal of this provision, which will automatically expire in less than three months.

With regard to taking away from the Interstate Commerce Commission the right to set aside intrastate rates which discriminate against interstate rates and interstate commerce, we feel that this attempt, if successful, makes an end of the possibility of responsible regulation. It means returning the railroads to the irresponsible conditions which obtained before the war, with 49 separate and uncontrolled authorities hacking away at their revenues without taking any responsibility for the final result. In the long run we think the shippers of the country would be just as badly off as the railroads from any restoration of these conditions, and we would like your support in opposing the effort to get us back into those conditions.

There also seems to be at least one defect in the provisions made by the transportation act, which is obvious, and that is the entire separation of the responsibility for income, as determined by rates through the Interstate Commerce Commission, and the responsibility for outgo, as determined by wages and working conditions by the United States Railroad Labor Board. This recognition has been spontaneous and general throughout the country. Some change in this situation will have to be made within some reasonable time. We are not prepared at the moment to say what we think it should be, but we do desire your help in spreading the idea that this obvious defect should be remedied, and we would like very much to get your ideas as to what the best remedy would be. We, of course, are not only willing but anxious to fight out this pending wage controversy with the constituted authorities as they now exist, and are not desirous of complicating that with suggestions for change. Nevertheless, the time when some change must be made may be near at hand, and we would ask your earnest consideration of whether or not any national regulation of the wages and working conditions of all kinds of railway labor can be instituted which would not have the inevitable result of artificially standardizing upward the rates of pay and working conditions of railroad employees.

If it be true that no form of national regulation of wages and working conditions can be devised which is free from this fundamental effect, then it seems to me we should try to find some method whereby when genuine disputes come to a head there can be a peaceful and orderly method of attempting an appeal to reason and justice before we come to the possibility of an organized strike.

In conclusion, I wish to express on behalf of all of the executives their appreciation of the spirit of good will and cooperation with which you have met us. We are trying to find a way out of present difficulties in which we bear our burden and make our sacrifice just as much as any other interest, and in which we do not try to bring ourselves out whole by a process other than one which will help to bring agriculture and industry out whole. At the same time, we want to urge you to bear in mind that there is an enormous public interest in the restoration of the earning power of the railroads. The railroads are the biggest single industry in the country. They represent about a third of the iron and coal industry, and to be in a position where they can demand credit for new cars and locomotives and for extension and improvements and making up deferred maintenance would in itself go a considerable distance toward restoring normal business activity. And unless the railroads do get their earning power back with reasonable promptness they will not be able to make up their deferred maintenance, buy new cars and locomotives, and make other improvements essential to their being able to meet the traffic of the country when business again comes at full tide.

INTERNATIONAL HARVESTER CO.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I submit a Senate resolution (S. Res. 223) and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

Mr. CURTIS. Let it be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution for the information of the Senate.

The resolution (S. Res. 223) was read, as follows:

Whereas in a suit instituted April 30, 1912, by the United States, the International Harvester Co. was adjudged by the court on August 12, 1914, a combination repugnant to the antitrust laws; and

Whereas negotiations pending prior to the institution of said suit for suitable settlement and decree in the public interest were terminated and suit commenced because of the refusal of the Attorney General to accept any settlement and decree which did not provide for the complete separation of the McCormick and Deering plants and lines and their control, inasmuch as said plants and lines constituted the predominant elements of the combination; and

Whereas on November 2, 1918, a consent decree was agreed to by the then Attorney General and entered in said cause, then pending on appeal, by which consent decree it was provided that the International Harvester Co. should divest itself merely of certain minor and comparatively unimportant and unprofitable properties; and

Whereas said consent decree left the International Harvester Co. in possession of those predominant elements, the ownership of which had been the prime reason for the commencement of the action, to wit, the McCormick and Deering plants and lines, and thus surrendered the substantial results obtained, and for which the suit had been instituted; and

Whereas a report to the Senate dated May 4, 1920, entitled "Report of the Federal Trade Commission on the causes of the high prices of farm implements," and the entire record in the case, both show that the property to be disposed of in conformance to said consent decree would only divest the International Harvester Co. of certain minor and unprofitable portions of its business, and would leave the combination still in possession of the major and dominant elements thereof, to wit, the McCormick and Deering plants and brands; and

Whereas it is evident that under said decree effective conditions in substantial harmony with the law, including effective competition and reduced prices of farm implements to the farmers, can not result or be obtained while the International Harvester Co. is permitted to retain its said dominant elements; and

Whereas it is necessary and urgent in the public interest, without further and unnecessary delay, to procure complete separation of ownership and control, direct or indirect, of said McCormick and Deering plants and brands, together with such other division of the business of the International Harvester Co. as may be necessary effectively to restore competitive conditions in real harmony with the law: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Attorney General be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate what action, if any, is contemplated by the Department of Justice to bring about a modification of said decree, in order that the same may comply with the real judgment rendered by the court in said case; or, if such course be not practical, whether the Department of Justice contemplates any other separate and independent action against said International Harvester Co., for the purpose of effectively restoring competitive conditions between the various corporations composing and comprising said International Harvester Co.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I have no objection whatsoever to the Senator from Nebraska asking for the information which he desires; in fact, I think it is information which we ought to have; but the preamble of the resolution contains a very considerable number of assumptions and conclusions as to facts which I think very few Senators here know anything about. If the resolution be adopted in its present form, it will commit the Senate to the entire acceptance of all the statements of fact contained in the resolution, when really we know nothing about them whatsoever.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, practically everything alleged as a matter of fact in the preamble of the resolution is contained in the report of the Federal Trade Commission which has been made to the Senate, and is an official document to which all Senators have had access, and which, so far as I know, has never been disputed. I think it is safe to assume that a finding of that kind, at least for the purpose of basing action in the way of a resolution, is sufficiently definite to be assumed to be true. I do not know of anything which is contained in the resolution as to which that assumption may not be maintained. For instance, the date of the decree is set forth, but that is a matter of record which nobody will question. The statement, however, that the decree did not dissolve the International Harvester Co., so far as the dissolution of the McCormick and Deering elements of it is concerned, is a statement of fact which was made by the Federal Trade Commission after they had fully investigated the matter. I have talked with officials personally who had to do with the decree, who have told me the same thing.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I should have no objection to the resolution receiving immediate consideration if the Senator from Nebraska would revise the preamble and confine it to a reference to the report of the Federal Trade Commission and state in connection therewith that in view of the report made by the Federal Trade Commission the Senate would like to have the information; but the preamble as now drawn makes the report of the Federal Trade Commission the conclusion of the Senate, and I am not prepared to subscribe to that.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I think that an amendment to the preamble of the resolution which would state in effect that "the assumptions herein made are taken from the assertions in the report of the Federal Trade Commission" would, perhaps, cover the objection of the Senator from New York. I should have no objection to that kind of an amendment. If the Senator wishes to object to the present consideration of the resolution and will let it go over until to-morrow, he may prepare that kind of an amendment and I shall not object to that, but I am not willing that the entire preamble of the resolution shall be stricken out.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I ask that the resolution go over until we may have an opportunity to examine its preamble.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Being objected to, the resolution will go over.

SALVAGE OF SHELLS AND EXPLOSIVES.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I submit a Senate resolution, and I shall ask for its present consideration. I will state what the object of the resolution is, and if it leads to any debate, of course, it may go over.

It appears that the War Department has made a contract with a New York concern for the salvaging of all the materials possible which are contained in the many explosive shells which the United States had left over after the World War. Among the articles salvaged are picric acid and other explosives which are very greatly needed at the present time for the construction of roads and the clearing of stump lands. The Senate has taken action in reference to the quantity of those explosives we now have on hand and has directed that certain portions of them shall be assigned to the purposes I have mentioned.

If I have been correctly informed, a vast amount of such materials is possible of salvage from these explosive shells. What I desire to ascertain by obtaining a copy of the contract which has been made is what the Government's portion of this salvaged material will be and whether, in view of the fact that these articles are now so much in demand, it would not be better possibly—better for the Government and better for the people—that that contract, if possible, be modified. I do not know that it ought to be modified, but I wish to examine the contract. In my resolution I am asking that the Secretary of War send to the Senate the contract in order that it may form at least the basis for further investigation in reference to the matter. For that purpose, I send to the Secretary's desk the resolution and ask for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The reading clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 224), as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to the Senate a copy of the contract made between the War Department and the Columbia Salvage Co., of New York, relative to the salvage of shells and explosives, which contract is now in force and operation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the resolution?

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

GRANT SOUVENIR COINS.

Mr. McLEAN. From the Committee on Banking and Currency I report back favorably with an amendment in the nature of a substitute the bill (H. R. 6119) for the coinage of a Grant souvenir gold dollar in commemoration of the centenary of the birth of Gen. Ulysses S. Grant, late President of the United States, and I submit a report (No. 447) thereon.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, I desire to make a request for unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill which has just been favorably reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency by the chairman of that committee, and, if I may be permitted, I should like to make a preliminary statement.

This bill, which, of course, has already passed the House of Representatives, provides for a memorial coin to be issued to the Grant Memorial Association, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Ohio, for the purpose of building a suitable memorial to the memory of Gen. Grant, the anniversary of whose birth will be April 27. The purpose, of course, is to secure these memorial coins and sell them at a premium so as to raise a fund to effectuate the desired object. The bill contemplates no expense whatever on the part of the Government.

As I understand, the bill is unanimously recommended by the Committee on Banking and Currency. Manifestly, if this association is to have the opportunity to sell the coins in order to raise funds so as to get the work under way by April 27, it is highly desirable that there should be early action on the proposed legislation. I, therefore, ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask that the bill may be read.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I notice from the report on the bill—I have not had time to read it in detail—that it is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill as it passed the other House and to insert in lieu thereof a new provision.

Mr. McLEAN. Yes.

Mr. WILLIS. I will ask the chairman of the committee to state the reason for the action of the committee.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President, the bill as it came from the House of Representatives provided for the issuance of $200,000 in gold, but to that proposition the committee objected. We did not think this a good time to sequester so much gold in a souvenir coin. We have, therefore, reported in favor of coining $10,000 in gold dollars and $250,000 in silver half dollars. Those desiring this legislation wanted some of the coins to be of gold, and were very anxious for certain reasons that such provision be made. The committee thought that $10,000 would not make very much difference one way or the other. This proposed legislation is very important to the State of Ohio, and so the committee agreed to report in favor of the coinage of $10,000 in gold dollars and $250,000 in silver half dollars.

Mr. SMOOT. And that is all there is to it?

Mr. WILLIS. That is all there is to it. There are numerous precedents for legislation of this character, and I can see no possible objection to the immediate consideration of the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I simply stated that I had not had time to read the report which has just been presented, but if there is nothing more involved than as stated by the Senator from Ohio I have no objection to the bill.

Mr. WILLIS. That is all there is to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio or the Senator from Connecticut if there is not some expense involved? The bill will require, as I understand, the coins to be produced at the mint.

Mr. WILLIS. Let me answer the Senator. If he will read the last section of the bill, he will notice the following proviso:

Provided, That the United States shall not be subject to the expense of making the necessary dies and other preparations for this coinage.

Mr. KING. Yes; but where will the coins be produced? Obviously in the mints.

Mr. WILLIS. It is provided in the bill, as I recall, that they are to be produced at the mint in Philadelphia. My understanding of the matter is that the association is to bear all expenses. There is to be absolutely no expense to the Government of the United States.

Mr. KING. It is very ungracious, of course, to oppose, even in an inferential and indirect way, a measure of this character, a measure which has to do with the memory of a great leader, one of the greatest of military commanders and a former President of the United States, but I ask the Senator whether or not the passage of this bill will not constitute a precedent for constant appeal to be made to Congress for like privileges with respect to men who may not be as important in history as Gen. Grant and yet who may have been sufficiently important as to merit some sort of a memorial to be erected to their names?

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, in reply to the Senator from Utah, I suggest that this bill will not constitute a precedent, but that it is based on a long line of precedents. We have provided for the issuance of memorial coins of this character at various times, as the Senator well knows, and, in view of the patriotic purpose, I hope he will not object. For a long time the matter has been discussed in the State of Ohio, and the view has been held that there ought to be some sort of suitable memorial to this great man, and finally the association referred to in the bill was organized and incorporated under the laws of the State. If the Senator objects, he knows, of course, the bill will go to the calendar, and it will be some time before we shall be able to reach it; and so an objection will practically defeat the purposes of the proposed legislation.

Mr. KING. I shall not object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. WILLIS. I thank the Senator.

Mr. KING. I appreciate the fact that its passage would appeal to a majority of the Senate, and perhaps to all of them. I only wanted to inquire whether or not the revival of a practice which has become almost out of date, following the war and following the desire upon the part of a great number of people to commemorate the achievements of their great men during the recent war, would lead to many appeals for similar legislation, and whether or not the Government of the United States ought generally to approve of the policy of coining memorial coins, which, of course, do cost the Government something—there is no question about that—and which withdraw to some extent from circulation a limited amount of gold or silver or whatever the metal of which coins may be made.

Mr. WILLIS. As the Senator may realize, the last consideration he has mentioned is of no great importance, for, under the bill as reported, $10,000 in gold coins and $250,000 in silver half dollars are all that the committee has provided. The Senator can hardly think that that will encroach to any great extent upon the metallic currency.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. WILLIS. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I desire to indorse what my colleague has said in this behalf. I know that the old neighbors and friends of Gen. Grant and their descendants about his birthplace have been anxious for a long time to erect some suitable memorial in his honor. The people in that vicinity are all intensely interested in the project. A former chief justice of the State of Ohio, Hon. Hugh L. Nichols, is the president of this organization, and one of the very highest type of men in the State. There are, as my colleague has stated, a number of precedents for this legislation, and this seems to be the only feasible way whereby the association can finance the project. I indulge the hope that there will be no objection to the consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Banking and Currency was to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That for the purpose of aiding in defraying the cost of erecting a community building in the village of Georgetown, Brown County, Ohio, and a like building in the village of Bethel, Clermont County, Ohio, as a memorial to Ulysses S. Grant, late President of the United States, and for the purpose of constructing a highway 5 miles in length from New Richmond, Ohio, to Point Pleasant, Clermont County, Ohio, the place of birth of Ulysses S. Grant, to be known as the Grant Memorial Road, there shall be coined in the mints of the United States, Grant memorial gold dollars to the number of 10,000 and Grant memorial silver half dollars to the number of 250,000, said coins to be of a standard Troy weight, composition, diameter, and design as shall be fixed by the Director of the Mint and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, which said coins shall be legal tender to the amount of their face value, to be known as the Grant memorial gold dollar and the Grant memorial silver half dollar struck in commemoration of the centenary of the birth of Ulysses S. Grant, late President of the United States.

That all laws now in force relating to the gold coins and subsidiary silver coins of the United States and the coining or striking of the same, regulating and guarding the process of coinage, providing for the purchase of material and for the transportation, distribution, and redemption of the coins, for the prevention of debasement or counterfeiting, for security of the coins, or for any other purposes, whether said laws are penal or otherwise, shall, so far as applicable, apply to the coinage herein authorized: Provided, That the United States shall not be subject to the expense of making the necessary dies and other preparations for this coinage.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

THE SHANTUNG QUESTION.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The reading clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 221), submitted by Mr. WALSH of Montana on the 20th instant, as follows:

Whereas in an ultimatum dispatched by the Emperor of Japan to the Imperial German Government on August 15, 1914, which marks the entrance of the eastern empire in the World War, it is stated: "We consider it highly important and necessary in the present situation to take measures to remove the causes of all disturbance of the peace in the Far East. The Imperial Japanese Government sincerely believes it to be its duty to give advice to the Imperial German Government to carry out the following two propositions: First, to withdraw immediately from Japanese and Chinese waters the German men-of-war and armed vessels of all kinds; second to deliver on a date not later than September 15 to the Imperial Japanese authorities, without condition or compensation, the entire leased territory of Kiaochow, with a view to the eventual restoration of the same to China"; and

Whereas on May 6, 1915, after the conquest of Shantung had been consummated by an Anglo-Japanese expeditionary force and the Japanese Army was in possession of Shantung districts greatly exceeding in extent the leased territory referred to in the ultimatum, the Secretary of State of the United States addressed to the Governments of Japan and China the following identic notes: "In view of the circumstances of the negotiations which have taken place or which are now pending between the Governments of China and of Japan and the agreements which have been reached as a result thereof, the Government of the United States has the honor to notify the Government of the Chinese Republic that it can not recognize any agreement or undertaking which has been entered into between the Governments of China and Japan impairing the treaty rights of the United States and its citizens in China, the political or territorial integrity of the Republic of China, or the international policy commonly known as the open-door policy"; an identical note being at the same time handed to the Japanese Government by the American Embassy in Tokyo; and

Whereas on August 24, 1915, Count Okuma, prime minister of Japan, cabled the American press the following message: "As premier of Japan I have stated, and I now again state to the people of America and of the world, that Japan has no desire to secure more territory, no thought of depriving China or any other peoples of anything which they now possess"; and

Whereas in October, 1919, the majority party of the United States Senate recorded its disapproval of the Shantung award and adopted the following reservation to the treaty of Versailles known as the Lodge amendment, from the fact that it was drawn up and presented by the Hon. HENRY CABOT LODGE, chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, one of the Members of this body now serving with the American delegation to the conference which reads: "The United States withholds its assent to articles 156, 157, 158, and reserves full liberty of action with respect to any controversy which may arise under said articles between the Republic of China and the Empire of Japan"; and

Whereas in the course of the same debate the minority party of the Senate voted for a reservation to the treaty whose ratification they advocated which, offered by the Hon. KEY PITTMAN, a member of the Committee on Foreign Relations, provided "That in advising and consenting to the ratification of said treaty the United States understands that the German rights and interests renounced by Germany in favor of Japan under the provisions of articles 156, 157, and 158 of said treaty are to be returned by Japan to China at the termination of the present war by the adoption of this treaty, as provided in the exchanged notes between the Japanese and Chinese Governments under date of May 25, 1915"; and

Whereas on July 1, 1921, the Hon. Charles Evans Hughes, Secretary of State, addressed a note to the Hon. Alfred Sze, Chinese minister to the United States, in which he stated the position of the American Government in the following terms: "The Government of the United States never has associated itself with any arrangement which sought to establish any special rights in China which would abridge the rights of the subjects or citizens of other friendly States; and I am happy to assure you that it is the purpose of this Government neither to participate in nor to acquiesce in any arrangement which might purport to establish in favor of foreign interests a superiority of rights with respect to commercial and economic development in designated regions of the territories of China"; and

Whereas the text of the invitation sent to the Government of China by the President of the United States under date of August 11, 1921, reads: "It is quite clear that there can be no final assurance of the peace of the world in the absence of the desire for peace, and the prospect of reduced armament is not a hopeful one unless this desire finds expression in a practical effort to remove causes of misunderstanding and to seek ground for agreement as to principles and their application. It is the earnest wish of this Government that through an interchange of views with the facilities afforded by a conference it may be possible to find a solution of Pacific and Far Eastern problems of unquestioned importance at this time"; and

Whereas the Hon. Charles Evans Hughes, Secretary of State, has in the course of his correspondence with Japan and the other powers signatories of the treaty of Versailles declared "There would be no valid or effective disposition of the overseas possessions of Germany now under consideration without the assent of the United States"; and

Whereas the Arms Conference, at which Far Eastern problems were to be discussed, has been assembled in the city of Washington since November 12 of last year, and although no plenary public sessions of the conference have been held since December 10, 1921, it is officially communicated that the Shantung retrocession has not been officially discussed, although informal conversations have from time to time been pursued by the Chinese and the Japanese plenipotentiaries, hitherto without result, as to the manner of restoring the occupied territory to its rightful owners in accordance with the terms of the Japanese declaration of war upon Germany; and

Whereas it is contemplated in the so-called four-power pact about to be submitted for ratification that controversies likely to give rise to war affecting the insular possessions or dominions of the powers signatory thereto in the Pacific shall be composed, if possible, by conferences between them; and

Whereas the said powers are all now represented at the said Arms Conference in session in the city of Washington: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to communicate to the United States Senate, if it is not incompatible with the public interest, what steps, if any, have been taken to give effect in substance as well as in form to the foregoing declarations and policies.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, in the absence of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], I ask that the resolution may go over. He expected to be present this morning, but notified me that he would not be able to be in attendance upon the Senate to-day.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That is quite satisfactory to me, Mr. President, but I should not like to have the resolution go over longer than to-morrow morning. Obviously, it is a matter that ought to be acted on promptly, if it is to be acted on at all.

Mr. CURTIS. I will endeavor to see the Senator from Massachusetts during the day or early in the morning.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I understand, then, that the resolution goes over until to-morrow, and will lie on the table under the rule until to-morrow without prejudice.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over without prejudice.

BUILDING SITUATION IN THE DISTRICT.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, before the close of the morning hour I desire to briefly call the attention of the Senate to two or three communications which I received bearing upon the building situation in the District of Columbia. In view of the fact that Congress occupies, with respect to the District, the position of a State legislature, if not a municipal council, it is appropriate to refer in this body to matters pertinent to the welfare of the inhabitants of the District of Columbia. It is understood that the United States attorney has commenced, or is about to commence, an investigation of building conditions in the District; perhaps the Department of Justice is also cooperating with the United States attorney in this investigation. I have asked that such investigation be made because of the numerous complaints made that combines exist which result in enhancing beyond all reason the cost of constructing houses and other buildings within the District. There is no doubt but what prices are greatly in excess of prewar levels and have reached heights that can not be justified. The rents are too high, the cost of building is too high, and the cost of materials entering into the construction of buildings is entirely too great.

Investigations in other sections of the country have shown conditions there perhaps worse than those prevailing in Washington. Indeed, the conditions in New York have been shocking and have revealed a species of profiteering and robbery that can not be defended. There is no reason why buildings, which a few years ago cost but $20,000 to erect, should now cost fifty or sixty thousand dollars.

There are many causes conspiring to bring about this unsatisfactory condition. Congress is compelled to take cognizance of the matter, because of the large number of Federal employees who must be decently and properly housed. The situation can not escape congressional consideration. I do not mean that Congress shall become paternalistic or build houses for Federal employees; but certainly it is within the power of Congress to see that combinations and conspiracies to profiteer and to rob and plunder shall not be permitted.

Senators know that the situation shows but slight improvement. Indeed, I am advised by some that with the expiration of the Ball rent act conditions will become very much more serious and great hardship will result to thousands of people residing here, and particularly those who work for the Government, many of them at salaries so small as to make it impossible for them to pay even the rents which they are now called upon to meet. When the Ball Act was offered some Senators opposed it, but not because of any sympathy which they had for landlords and for the methods adopted by many persons who were renting houses. Let me add that there are many owners of property who treat their tenants in a just and generous manner. There are others who have been oppressive and whose treatment of their tenants calls for condemnation. Opposition to the Ball Act grew out of the belief that it was unconstitutional. I did not support the Ball Act, because I doubted its constitutionality, and further, because I believed that capital would flow into the District and many buildings would be erected and rents would automatically fall. In other words, the law of supply and demand would cure, within a reasonable time, the situation.

I regret to say that many of the landlords are not meeting conditions in a fair or proper manner. They are running counter to the tendency to lower price levels. I am told that many landlords have raised rents within the past few months and threaten to largely increase them when the Ball Act expires. I want to warn such persons that if they persist in this course a sentiment will be developed here which may prove irresistible and lead to an extension of the provisions of the Ball Act for an indefinite period. This is no time for profiteering, and builders and contractors and labor leaders and wholesalers and retailers must accommodate themselves to the changing conditions and join in the movement to reduce prices, so that they may reach such levels as will bring reasonable prosperity. I sincerely hope that the investigations which will be conducted by the United States attorney or the Department of Justice, or both, will prove of importance and will curb the profiteering and extortionate propensities of some who, I believe, are engaged in conspiracies and combinations inimical to the public welfare.

I have received a number of letters concerning the housing situation in the District. One of these communications, in part, reads as follows:

I would suggest that a very fruitful field in the line of this investigation will be found in looking into large numbers of sales which are dummies, instead of real sales, whereby the value of a property is put up sometimes four to five hundred per cent above its real value, so that the owner can say that he must have 10 per cent on the value of the building; this, of course, being based on the fictitious value of the building established by the means of dummy sales. I have in mind a particular building in Washington which could not have cost more than 18 to 20 cents per cubic foot at the outside when it was built and which, through a process of sales and resales, now stands at a value of $1 per cubic foot, or at least 500 per cent more than its original cost.

Another fruitful field for investigation will be found in the interlocking ownership of real estate and construction companies, whereby the real cost is concealed through a series of camouflaging. I have in mind another building about which complaint has been made to the rent commission, and which the owners claim has an outstanding indebtedness of—

Perhaps I ought not to give the figures, because that would identify the building, and I do not desire to bring any particular person into this discussion, at least for the present; but it is a very large sum, and the letter states the figures—against it. Perhaps that is true; but if these securities were traced it would be found that these securities were highly watered by the dummy process. This particular building could be built, even under present conditions, for half of the amount and the contractors make a profit of 18 per cent.

Another letter calls attention to a matter as to which I express no opinion, but it deserves consideration. This letter is from a reputable firm in the city, and the writer is known to be a man of high standing and integrity. It states:

It is our experience, however, that the high cost of financing building construction at the present day is of equal importance to the high cost of materials and labor, and the exorbitant rates now being charged for interest and commissions on building loans, mortgages, and discounts are militating to a greater extent against the erection of homes than are the high cost of material and labor.

In a recent building operation just being completed, the commissions and interests on our building loans, together with the interest and discount charges on the first and second mortgages, amount to approximately 50 per cent of the physical cost of construction of the houses themselves.

Senators will observe that if robbery of this kind is continued, it will greatly aggravate the building situation. This letter shows a form of profiteering so ugly and brutal that suitable language can not be found to characterize it.

Another letter that I have received calls attention to what the writer conceives to be an evil.

It is in part as follows:

Another feature that should be changed is the amount of red tape and unnecessary detail formality one must go through in order to get permits to build. Inasmuch as you get a permit, you must state first who is to construct the building. If you find it necessary to discharge him, you must get another permit before you can employ another; and if the first is a union man, or has influence with the commissioners, they are liable to hold you up indefinitely—a condition which should be canceled—

The writer says:

Moreover, they will not allow anyone to do anything connected with plumbing.

I want to add, parenthetically, that a number of colored men have been to see me, and have protested against what they allege to be gross discrimination in the District. They say that but few colored men are allowed permits to engage in the plumbing business. If that is true, those who are indulging in this discrimination ought to be severely rebuked.

Let me add that I shall investigate this matter, and if the complaints are found to be true I shall attempt to remove any further ground for complaint.

This writer says:

I have worked in this business for eight years, but would be obliged to employ a regular registered plumber, at a rate of $8.50 a day, and wait until he was good and ready, and at an expense of holding the whole operation up for several days. As long as the work is inspected by the District engineers before it is allowed to be used, I think anyone should be allowed to do the work if they see fit. I have followed the plumbing business, as above stated, and would be able to do as good work as anyone, but to get a permit I would have to pass a long-drawn-out examination, put up a bond of $2,000, and deposit with the District $50. Upon a little investigation of the plumbers' code you will readily see that it is a union man's paradise and a public menace.

I mention these facts to show how it is possible for the unions to hold out the nonunion man, and also form a barricade for the contractors to hide behind. It makes it practically impossible for a man to bring some honest man in and let him do his work. I will say that a man should be permitted to do work that is afterwards inspected by the engineers of the District, because if it is not right the engineers will not pass it until it is made right.

I express no opinion as to the merits or demerits of the statements just read. I call attention to these matters, hoping that these and other questions will receive consideration in the investigation which will be made by the district attorney, with a view to ascertaining whether there are combinations upon the part of builders or contractors or others which tend to increase unduly the cost of building, or to maintain rent charges at levels so high as to be unfair and oppressive.

THE CALENDAR.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask unanimous consent that we begin with Order of Business 270, where we left off the last time the calendar was up, and go through the bills that were not considered the last time.

Mr. McNARY. I did not understand the request of the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. The last time we had the calendar under consideration we reached Order of Business 270. I now ask unanimous consent that we begin at Order of Business 270 and go through the bills that were not considered the last time the calendar was up for consideration.

Mr. McNARY. That will bring us to the first bill following No. 270 after completing it?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. McNARY. It will operate in that manner?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes. I thought it was rather unfair to go back now to the beginning of the calendar, and run over just the same bills that we went over before. That is the reason why I make the request.

Mr. McNARY. I have no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The first business on the calendar under the unanimous-consent agreement was the bill (S. 2391) to provide for the establishment, operation, and maintenance of foreign trade zones in ports of entry of the United States, to expedite and encourage foreign commerce, and for other purposes.

Mr. KING. I suppose that will take considerable time. It is a very important measure. I suggest that it be postponed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2228) to amend certain sections of the Judicial Code relating to the Court of Claims was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2337) to amend the transportation act, 1920, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT and Mr. CURTIS. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2135) to enable the refunding of obligations of foreign Governments owing to the United States of America, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. That is the unfinished business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be passed over.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 183) imposing a duty of 90 per cent on all goods exported from the United States for the use of the American Expeditionary Forces and its allied forces and which have been sold to any foreign Government or person, when reimported into the United States, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2515) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes,' approved June 3, 1916, and to establish military justice," approved June 4, 1920, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 268) for the relief of William O. Mallahan was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2035) for the relief of William M. Carroll was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The resolution (S. Res. 150) directing the Secretary of the Senate to employ a special officer for the office of the Secretary of the Senate was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2573) to amend section 198 of the act of March 4, 1909, entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States," as amended, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 8331) to amend the transportation act, 1920, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I have not the bill before me; but is not that the one that was under consideration during the past week?

Mr. CURTIS. Let it go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

PRINTING OF PENSION BILLS, PRIVATE CLAIMS BILLS, ETC.

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 1) providing that legislation dealing with pensions, private claims, distribution of war trophies, etc., be initiated by petition on suitable furnished forms, was announced as next in order, and the Senate resumed its consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. This concurrent resolution has been considered heretofore, and the amendments of the committee have been agreed to. The question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I do not intend at this moment to oppose the concurrent resolution. I should like information from some Senator as to what is contemplated by the phrase "distribution of war trophies," which, as I understand, are to be dealt with on an approved form.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator from New York that the concurrent resolution has reference only to the printing of the original bills when they are introduced into the Senate. As it is now, all of these private pension bills and claims bills are printed in large quantities—1,654 of them, to begin with—and they go to the libraries throughout the country; and the Senator knows that bills of that character are printed session after session, and have been for the last 50 years, the same identical bills. We are simply trying to save about $80,000 a year in the expense of printing them.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution, as amended.

The concurrent resolution, as amended, was agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That legislation dealing with private pensions, either original or increases, with private claims, and with the distribution of war trophies to municipalities or organizations, shall hereafter be initiated by petition upon suitable forms provided for that purpose, which petition shall be referred to its appropriate committee without printing other than by title in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD; and that any bill resulting therefrom shall be printed only when reported favorably by the committee.

CHARLES F. GETCHELL.

The bill (S. 748) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Charles F. Getchell was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, my colleague [Mr. KING] asked me, in case he left the Chamber—which he was compelled to do—to object to the consideration of this bill at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

ORIN THORNTON.

The bill (S. 1655) for the relief of Orin Thornton was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask to have the same course taken with that bill, for the same reason.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, just one moment.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator from Arkansas will wait until the junior Senator from Utah comes in, he can call up the bill and I shall have no objection. My colleague was compelled to leave the Chamber. He will be back in a very few moments.

Mr. CARAWAY. He said here publicly that he had no objection to this bill.

Mr. SMOOT. When he comes back I shall have no objection to the Senator's calling up the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

MOUNT M'KINLEY NATIONAL PARK, ALASKA.

The bill (H. R. 6262) to add certain lands to Mount McKinley National Park, Alaska, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the south, east, and north boundaries of the Mount McKinley National Park are hereby changed as follows: Beginning at the summit of Mount Russell, which is the present southwest corner of the park; thence in a northeasterly direction 100 miles, more or less, to a point on the one hundred and forty-ninth meridian, which is 25 miles south of a point due east of the upper northwest corner of the park; thence north along the one hundred and forty-ninth meridian 25 miles; thence west 40 miles, more or less, to the present upper northwest corner of Mount McKinley National Park. And all these lands lying between the above-described boundary and the present south, east, and north boundaries are hereby reserved and withdrawn from settlement, occupancy, or disposal, and under the laws of the United States said lands are hereby made a part of and included in the Mount McKinley National Park; and all the provisions of the act to establish Mount McKinley National Park, Alaska, and for other purposes, approved February 26, 1917, are hereby made applicable to and extended over lands hereby added to the park.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I objected to the consideration of this measure when it was before us on a former occasion. Since that time I have ascertained that the existing law—and that seems to be an exception with reference to this reservation—permits mineral exploration and location. In view of that information, I have no objection to the consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE EMERSON.

The bill (S. 726) for the relief of George Emerson was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

GAME REFUGES.

The bill (S. 1452) providing for establishing shooting grounds for the public, for establishing game refuges and breeding grounds, for protecting migratory birds, and requiring a Federal license to hunt them, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

EXCHANGE OF LANDS IN HAWAII.

The bill (H. R. 4598) to provide for the exchange of Government lands for privately owned lands in the Territory of Hawaii was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That within three years from the passage of this act the President be, and he is hereby, authorized, when in his opinion the public good demands it, to exchange any land or any interest in land owned by the United States now or hereafter set apart for military purposes in the Territory of Hawaii for privately owned land or land owned by the Territory of Hawaii, or any interest therein of equal value located in that Territory and selected by the Secretary of War, and thereafter to set apart for military purposes the lands or interest therein so acquired: Provided, That the Attorney General of the United States shall first pass upon and approve the title to the privately owned lands or interest therein to be acquired by the United States before any exchange of lands shall be made under the provisions of this act.

SEC. 2. That the value of the lands or interests to be so exchanged shall be determined by three appraisers, to be appointed by the Secretary of War. The expense necessary to effect the appraisement herein authorized, when approved by the military commander of the Hawaiian Department, may be paid out of the current appropriation for contingencies of the Army.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] whether it is contemplated that the authority hereby conferred will be exercised; that is to say, is there a situation now existing which in the near future will call for the exchange of Government land for privately owned land?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; the bill results from a pending situation in which the Government owns some lands for which it has no use, and there are some other lands owned by the Territory or private individuals adjoining Government property which the Government needs. The proposition is to exchange them, practically without cost to the Government. The Senate has already passed a bill which is the companion of this bill. This is the bill which came over from the House.

Mr. KING. Would the Senator be willing to limit the period to one year instead of three?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I doubt if all the negotiations and proceedings could be completed in one year. I would be willing to limit it to two years. They may have to bring condemnation proceedings on certain small tracts.

Mr. KING. Undoubtedly if the condemnation proceedings extend beyond the time limited in the bill there would be no objection and the law would not inhibit proceeding to a conclusion, although it exceeded the time limit. I have no objection, if the Senator has in mind certain tracts that are to be exchanged and if the authority will not be exercised generally.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The report of the committee contains a description of the several tracts.

Mr. KING. The committee has examined it fully?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It has.

Mr. KING. I have no objection to its passage.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENSE ACT.

The bill (S. 2774) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes,' approved June 3, 1916, and to establish military justice," approved June 4, 1920, was considered as in Committee of the whole, and was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 90 of the act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes,' approved June 3, 1916, and to establish military justice," approved June 4, 1921, be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 90. That funds allotted by the Secretary of War for the support of the National Guard shall be available for the purchase and issue of forage, bedding, shoeing, and veterinary service, and supplies for the Government animals issued to any organization, and for the compensation of competent help for the care of material, animals, and equipment issued mounted and other organizations, including motor drawn and air service, under such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe: Provided, That the men to be compensated, not to exceed five for each organization, shall be duly enlisted therein and shall be detailed by the organization commander, under such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe, and shall be paid by the United States disbursing officer in each State, Territory, and the District of Columbia."

Mr. WADSWORTH. The bill is almost entirely taken up with a repetition of the existing law. The new language will be found in lines 5 and 6, page 2, being merely "including motor drawn and air service." The insertion of that language is all there is to the bill. It will authorize the War Department to take care of material which is not specifically provided for in the original reorganization act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MOSES in the chair). May the Chair suggest to the Senator from New York that the language seems to require modification or explanation. It reads "motor drawn and air service." Should it not read "motor-drawn vehicles and air service"?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think, taken in connection with the context, the present occupant of the chair will see that it is perfectly clear.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the chair has no doubt as to the meaning of the bill.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It reads "equipment issued mounted and other organizations, including motor drawn and air service"; that is, motor-drawn organizations and air-service organizations.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TRANSPORTATION OF MILITARY SUPPLIES.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 138) authorizing the payment of the cost of transportation for certain supplies purchased by the Military Establishment was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I would like to have the Senator from New York make a brief statement showing just what the joint resolution proposes.

Mr. KING. May I suggest to the Senator before he does that that an appropriation is usually made for transportation in a lump sum. If they may use that for some other purpose and thus take a part of the proceeds appropriated for the purchase of supplies to pay the cost of transportation, they will get a double allowance from the Government.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I can assure the Senator from Utah that there is no question of double allowance under the item of transportation during this fiscal year. The slashing done by the Congress in drafting the Army appropriation act for this fiscal year was exceedingly severe, and in no instance was it more severe than in the item for transportation of the Army and supplies. The fact is that the transportation appropriation was cut so low that to-day officers can not be sent upon actual and necessary business of the Government.

It goes much further than that. Some of the supplies which the Army needs actually can not be transported to the posts where they are needed. In certain instances the Government has had manufactured for it either at its own arsenal or at a private plant certain articles. Under the former procedure and the existing procedure, as soon as the article is finished and delivered at the factory door or the arsenal door and is thereupon transported to the post or branch of the service in which it is to be used, the cost of the transportation has been charged against the appropriation for transportation.

This joint resolution would permit articles which are purchased or manufactured for the United States and accepted by the United States at the arsenal or factory door, to be transported to the place where they are to be used and where they are needed, and that transportation cost charged to the cost of the article. I think it is a sound business policy. I do not believe that the Government is indulging in good bookkeeping when it adopts and clings to the policy that an article costs so much under contract without charging against that article the cost of transporting it to the place where the Government must use it.

That is the purpose of the joint resolution. If it does not pass, these goods will pile up at the factory door and the arsenal door. They are not very numerous, because we are making hardly anything these days for the Army. Mostly we are purchasing food with which to feed the men, and certain other supplies, but they are not numerous. It is an actual fact that the War Department can not get hold and take possession of its own property which it has paid for because the transportation appropriation was slashed so severely that there was nothing left of it.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, this is not legislation that I think ought to be enacted. I do not believe there ought to be any appropriation made for any obligations on the part of the Government which could be paid from two sources or from two appropriations. This joint resolution would grant that right. In other words, if Congress saw fit to appropriate a certain amount for the transportation of these items and the War Department saw fit to use it for some other purpose, then they could pay the freight out of a fund that Congress appropriated for a specific purpose.

It seems to me that if this measure becomes a law the question of the cost of the goods to the United States will not be the cost delivered at the place where they are to be used, but at the place in which they are made. The freight charges may be quite different from one place than from another. If the bid for certain articles was accepted for delivery at the door of the factory in which they were made, or at the warehouse, then if it happened to be a case where the freight rates were higher from that warehouse than they would be from another, of course it would cost the Government just that much more for the identical goods.

It is not good legislation. I do not believe there ever ought to be a bill passed by Congress appropriating money for one specific purpose and then granting authority to any department of the Government to spend that money for another purpose. I am opposed to such legislation and I object to the present consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. KING. I suggest to the Senator from New York that it seems to me the War Department, under the conditions indicated, could certify to the Appropriations Committee that they have a deficit there and needed money for the transportation of required articles which had been purchased and that Congress would not hestitate a moment to give it to them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the senior Senator from Utah to object, and the joint resolution goes over.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I would like to ask the Senator from New York about the appropriation for transportation of the Army, for it is a matter in which I am interested. A soldier in my State served in the World War and was ordered to the Southwest when he came back to this country. He served with distinction in the World War and served with distinction in this country. His mother is dying with consumption, and his family appealed to me to secure his transfer to a point nearer home.

I went to the War Department to try to get him transferred. They told me that they had no money to pay traveling expenses, and that he would not only have to pay his own expenses if transferred but he would have to pay the expenses of the man who would be transferred to relieve him in the Southwest.

I believe in economy; but this is wrong. There is no excuse for anything of this kind, and Congress ought to make a sufficient appropriation to prevent any such injustice.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator from Georgia states a typical instance. Congress was very severe in this matter. It is a fact to-day that when officers are ordered to duty of a special and important character which involves necessarily that they must move about from place to place as inspectors there is no money left in the transportation fund to pay their railroad fare.

Mr. HARRIS. Congress should correct such a serious condition as that.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The instance which the Senator cites is a typical one. I have encountered many of them. I know of an instance at an Army post to-day where the enlisted men themselves have taken up a collection in order that the electric light and the heat may be kept on until 10.30 at night, instead of being closed down at 8 o'clock, the appropriation having been exhausted. We have reached a pretty state of affairs when the enlisted men of the Army have to pay for the light by which they read.

Mr. HARRIS. Why does not the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs try to get an appropriation on the next deficiency bill to prevent such a deplorable condition of affairs?

Mr. SMOOT. This joint resolution has nothing to do with the case the Senator from Georgia cites. This has reference only to the cost of goods at the factory.

Mr. HARRIS. Yes; I understand that.

Mr. SMOOT. This is another question entirely. I do not think we ought to make an appropriation for one purpose and then let the money be used for another purpose. On that basis I have objected to the present consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. KING. It ought to be said in connection with what the Senator from New York has mentioned that with a very small Army we made a very large appropriation. As I recall, it was approximately $400,000,000.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It was nowhere near $400,000,000. It was $328,000,000.

Mr. KING. As originally reported, what was it?

Mr. WADSWORTH. From which committee?

Mr. KING. From the House committee.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Three hundred and twenty-one million dollars.

Mr. KING. And as it passed it appropriated $328,000,000?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It did.

Mr. KING. Three hundred and twenty-eight million dollars is not a picayune sum.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Not at all.

Mr. KING. It is a very large appropriation, and until the Army and the administration adopt different methods and practice various economies not yet inaugurated some of the evils will occur like that of which the Senator complains, and it is an evil and it ought to be remedied.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The evil to which I referred is due to the insistence, which I think was mistaken on the part of many Members of the Congress, that appropriations be itemized in great detail and the Secretary of War bound down to a certain figure for any one of hundreds of activities. It is impossible for the Congress to estimate accurately, and we did not estimate accurately in the matter of transportation. It is costing the Government money rather than saving it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On objection, the joint resolution goes over.

TRANSPORTATION OF DEPENDENTS OF ARMY CLERKS.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 41) authorizing transportation for dependents of Army field clerks and field clerks, Quartermaster Corps, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I think that had better go over.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; let it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will go over.

MARGARET I. VARNUM.

The bill (S. 2328) for the relief of Margaret I. Varnum was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will go over.

CORRECTION OF MILITARY RECORDS.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 28) to provide for appropriate military records for persons who, pursuant to orders, reported for military duty, but whose induction or commission into the service was not, through no fault of their own, formally completed on or prior to November 11, 1918, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order and was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to carry upon the records of the War Department as though he had been duly inducted into the service of the United States any registrant under the selective service law and regulations who applied for voluntary induction into the service and was accepted, and who, pursuant to competent orders, reported for active duty as a soldier, but whose induction into the service, through no fault of his own, was not formally completed on or prior to November 11, 1918; and the name of any such person shall, under this act and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of War, be so carried upon the records of the War Department, and any such person shall be deemed to have been a soldier and shall be regarded as such from and after the date on which, pursuant to competent orders, he reported for active duty as a soldier, to such extent as to entitle him to receive the regular pay and allowances of an enlisted man for the period of his actual military service and to a discharge from the service as of the date of the termination of such service: Provided, That such persons shall not be entitled to any bonus, gratuity, or clothing or travel allowance authorized by law for enlisted men upon discharge from the service.

SEC. 2. That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to issue an appropriate commission in the name of any person who, while in the military service of the United States during the war between the United States and Germany and Austria-Hungary, had been duly appointed to a commissioned grade, and, through no fault of his own, was unable to accept such commission by reason of his death in line of duty; and any such commission shall issue as of the date of such appointment, and after such appointment any such person's name shall be carried upon the records of the War Department as of the grade and branch of the service to which he would have been promoted by such commission.

SEC. 3. That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to issue an appropriate commission in the name of any person who, while in the military service of the United States during the war between the United States and Germany and Austria-Hungary, may have been officially recommended for promotion to a commissioned grade, which recommendation shall have been duly approved by the Secretary of War, or by the commanding general American Expeditionary Forces, as the case may be, and who shall have been unable to receive and accept such commission by reason of his death in line of duty; and any such commission shall issue as of the date of such approval, and thereafter any such person's name shall be carried upon the records of the War Department as of the grade and branch of the service to which he would have been promoted by such commission.

SEC. 4. That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to issue an appropriate commission to any person who, on or prior to November 11, 1918, performed the service of a commissioned officer of the United States Army under the promise of or agreement in good faith with proper authority that a commission would in due time be issued to him, and by reason of unavoidable delay, the signing of the armistice, the cessation of hostilities, and orders issued in consequence thereof, no commission was ever issued to him in accordance with such promise or agreement; and any such commission shall issue as of the date of the commencement of such service and in such grade and branch of the service as promised or agreed upon; and any such person's name shall be carried upon the records of the War Department as of the grade and branch of the service shown in such commission.

SEC. 5. That no person shall be entitled to receive any bonus, gratuity, pay, or allowances by virtue of any commission issued under sections 2, 3, or 4 of this act.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator from New York conceive this measure to be wise and proper?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Committee on Military Affairs thought it was wise and proper and the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], who introduced it, also has a considerably high opinion of it.

Mr. SMOOT. I thought it was wise and proper. I think it is legislation that ought to be passed.

Mr. KING. I have a great deal of respect for the opinion of the chairman of the committee.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CAPT. BENJAMIN S. BERRY.

The bill (H. R. 2556) to advance Capt. Benjamin S. Berry to the permanent rank of major was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

THE WILLIAM GORDON CORPORATION.

The bill (H. R. 1460) for the relief of the William Gordon Corporation was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay to the William Gordon Corporation such sum, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, not exceeding $8,000, as he may determine will compensate the said corporation for furnishing temporary heat to the Interior Department Office Building as a result of the extension of time on their contract.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 1298) to carry out the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of the Fore River Shipbuilding Co. was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, the bill will go over.

The bill (H. R. 7589) for the relief of Maj. Ellis B. Miller was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1690) to correct the military record of John Sullivan was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 34) for the relief of the Pacific Commissary Co. was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 548) to place Albert Hamilton on the retired list of the United States Navy was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On objection the bill goes over.

LEASE OF FLOATING DRY DOCK AT NEW ORLEANS.

The bill (S. 2718) to provide for leasing of the floating dry dock at the naval station, New Orleans, La., was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That authority be, and is hereby, given to the Secretary of the Navy, when in his discretion it will be for the public good, to lease, for periods not exceeding five years and revocable at any time, the floating dry dock at the naval station, New Orleans, La.; and such lease shall be reported annually to Congress: Provided, That all moneys received from such lease shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 2719) to reimburse certain persons for loss of private funds while they were patients at the United States Naval Hospital, Naval Operating Base, Hampton Roads, Va., was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2749) to prepare for future cyclical periods of depression and unemployment by systems of public works was announced as next in order.

Mr. DIAL. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

GAME SANCTUARY IN FLATHEAD NATIONAL FOREST.

The bill (S. 1034) to establish a game sanctuary in the watershed of the South Fork of the Flathead River in the Flathead National Forest to perpetuate a breeding place for game animals was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I ask the Senator if he will withhold his objection to the bill until I can explain it?

Mr. KING. I withhold the objection for that purpose.

Mr. MYERS. The purpose of the bill is not to withdraw any land from any use whatsoever. It is simply to authorize the President, upon recommendation of the Secretary of Agriculture, in his discretion, to designate a certain area within a national forest in Montana within which no wild game or birds shall be slaughtered or killed until the Executive order may be revoked. The bill does not withdraw any land. The land is already withdrawn. It is within a national forest, and the bill is simply intended to provide that the President, upon the recommendation of the Secretary of Agriculture, may for a limited time forbid the killing of wild game or birds in a prescribed area. The State game commissioner of Montana favors the bill.

The Secretary of Agriculture recommends it. The matter has been given wide publicity in Montana. The land involved is wholly in that State. I am sure the people of Montana are in favor of the legislation. It would simply establish a limited area, where for a certain length of time wild game and birds could not be killed. It is intended as a measure to facilitate the preservation and propagation of our wild animals and birds, which are being rapidly slaughtered.

Mr. KING. May I ask the Senator whether the proposed legislation is restricted to the one reservation of which the Senator speaks?

Mr. MYERS. It is restricted entirely to one reservation in Montana, a national forest reserve.

Mr. KING. The bill does not provide for obtaining a Federal license in order that a man may carry a gun to shoot a rabbit?

Mr. MYERS. Oh, nothing of that kind at all is provided.

Mr. KING. The Senator from Montana knows that there are now a large number of people who have the idea that no man ought to be permitted to hunt in any State unless he gets a Federal license to do so.

Mr. MYERS. This proposed legislation has nothing to do with the restriction to which the Senator from Utah refers. It does not provide for any kind of a Federal license.

Mr. KING. There is a bill now pending providing that a man must obtain a Federal license in order to shoot any game which is alleged to be of a migratory character, and that he may be prosecuted under Federal law for shooting a bird which happens, according to the views of some people, to be of a migratory character, on the ground that Congress, under the interstate-commerce clause of the Constitution, may control migratory birds.

Mr. MYERS. This bill is not in line with that at all. It is simply a step toward preserving our rapidly diminishing wild game. It provides one spot where game and birds shall be protected for a time from slaughter and allowed to propagate and increase without molestation. Unless some provision of that kind be made, our supply of wild game and birds is in danger of extinction. It is time some attention were being given to preserving from ruthless slaughter all species of wild game and birds. This measure is designed to serve that purpose to some extent.

Mr. KING. I withdraw my objection to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys with amendments, in section 1, page 1, line 8, after the word "proclamation," to insert the word "within"; in line 9, before the word "the," to strike out the word "within" and to insert the word "of"; and, in the same line, after the word "forest," to strike out the word "as," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That for the purpose of providing breeding places for game animals and birds on lands within the Flathead National Forest, which are not chiefly suitable for agriculture, the President of the United States is hereby authorized, upon recommendation of the Secretary of Agriculture, to establish, by public proclamation, within the following-described area of the said forest a game sanctuary or refuge which shall be devoted to the increase of game of all kinds naturally adapted thereto, to wit:

Beginning at the junction of the ridge between Lodgepole Creek and Cabin Creek with the Continental Divide, thence following the divide southwest across Big River and up the divide between Porter and Miner Creeks to Whitecomb Mountain, thence southward along the divide between Big Bill and Whitecomb Creek to Spotted Bear Creek, thence west along the creek to the divide between Cow and Sargent Creeks, which it follows to Spotted Bear Mountain. From this point it leads west along Spotted Bear Mountain to the junction of Spotted Bear Creek and the South Fork of the Flathead River, thence south along the river to the ridge between Larch and Bruce Creeks, which it follows westward to Bruce Mountain and around the head of Bunker Creek to the Swan Range, which is the divide between the Swan River and South Fork of the Flathead River watersheds. From this point the boundary follows the divide southward to the divide between Gordon and the Youngs Creek drainage, which it follows east to the junction of Youngs Creek and the South Fork of the Flathead River. From this point the boundary extends up the ridge between Cayuse and Camp Creeks to the Continental Divide, which it follows to the place of beginning at the intersection of Lodgepole and Cabin Creeks.

SEC. 2. That the lands included in said game sanctuary or refuge shall continue to be parts of the Flathead National Forest; and nothing contained in this act shall prevent the Secretary of Agriculture from permitting other uses of said lands under and in conformity with the laws and the rules and regulations applicable thereto so far as such use may be consistent with the purposes for which said game refuge or sanctuary is authorized to be established.

SEC. 3. That when such game sanctuary or refuge has been established, as provided in section 1 of this act, hunting, pursuing, poisoning, killing, or capturing by trapping, netting, or any other means, or attempting to hunt, pursue, kill, or capture any wild animals or birds for any purpose whatever upon the lands of the United States within the limits of said game sanctuary or refuge, shall be unlawful except as hereinafter provided, and any person violating any provision of this act or any of the rules and regulations made under the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall upon conviction in any United States court be fined in a sum not exceeding $500, or be imprisoned for a period not exceeding six months, or shall suffer both the fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court.

SEC. 4. That the Secretary of Agriculture shall execute the provisions of this act, and he is hereby authorized to make all needful rules and regulations for the administration of such game sanctuary or refuge in accordance with the purpose of this act, including regulations not in contravention of State laws, for hunting, capturing, or killing predatory animals, such as wolves, coyotes, cougars, and other species destructive to live stock or wild life, within the limits of said game sanctuary or refuge.

SEC. 5. That whenever the number of game animals or birds within said sanctuary or refuge becomes so great that utilization of the excess is to the public interest, the Secretary of Agriculture may certify to the game warden of the State of Montana that certain specific numbers of animals or birds may be killed or taken within certain defined portions of the sanctuary or refuge, and under certain prescribed conditions, which certification shall be authority for said game warden to issue licenses authorizing the taking or killing of animals or birds within the limits of such sanctuary or refuge, and if the privileges granted or conferred by such licenses are exercised under and in full compliance with the conditions prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture, the killing or taking of game animals or birds in conformity therewith within the designated limits of the sanctuary or refuge shall not constitute a violation of this act.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LEASE OF FLOATING DRY DOCK AT NEW ORLEANS.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I was out of the Chamber for a few moments, and I will ask the Chair what disposition was made of the bill (S. 2718) to provide for leasing of the floating dry dock at the naval station, New Orleans, La.?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That bill was passed.

Mr. CALDER. I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the bill passed may be reconsidered. I desire to make further inquiry regarding the measure.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator from New York object to that bill?

Mr. CALDER. Yes; I do for the present.

Mr. KING. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New York to reconsider the vote by which the bill which he has named was passed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go back to the calendar.

Mr. CALDER. I am willing that it should do so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be returned to its place on the calendar.

THE ED E. RICHARDSON CO. (INC.).

The bill (S. 2147) to patent to the Ed E. Richardson Co. (Inc.) certain lands was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Is not the next Order of Business No. 389?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will explain to the Senator from Utah that through a misarrangement of the bills at the desk, orders of business from 380 to 387, inclusive, were omitted, and the Senate will now return to Order of Business No. 380 on the calendar, the title of which has just been stated.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys with an amendment on page 1, line 4, before the word "patent," to strike out the words "issue and," so as to make the bill read:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to patent to the Ed E. Richardson Co. (Inc.) lot 2, section 26, and lots 2 and 5, section 27, township 18 north, range 10 east, Louisiana meridian, embracing 104.81 acres, upon payment to the Government of $1.25 per acre, lands which they and their grantors have occupied under claim and color of title and open and notorious possession for 50 years: Provided, That proper application for the purchase of these lands be filed hereunder in the district land office within six months from the passage of this act, and that no adverse claim thereto be officially of record as pending when the application is allowed and the sale is made.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to authorize patent to the Ed E. Richardson Co. (Inc.) of certain lands."

GEORGE E. YEADON.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2091) for the relief of George E. Yeadon. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to George E. Yeadon, of Midvale, Utah, $80 and interest for initial purchase money paid by him in connection with Salt Lake City (Utah) desert-land entry No. 2110, for certain lands described by metes and bounds in township 16 south, range 6 east, Salt Lake meridian.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LANDS IN COCONINO COUNTY, ARIZ.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2471) to amend the act entitled "An act authorizing the survey and sale of certain lands in Coconino County, Ariz., to the occupants thereof," approved July 28, 1914 (38 Stat. L., p. 558), which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3 of the act entitled "An act authorizing the survey and sale of certain lands in Coconino County, Ariz., to the occupants thereof," approved July 28, 1914 (38 Stat. L., p. 558), is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 3. That any person, or his successors in interest, who prior to January 1, 1914, were in the actual occupancy of and improving one or more of said tracts for agricultural purposes, not exceeding in all 80 acres, and have maintained the same in good faith for said purposes, upon the filing of an application to enter the same within six months from the filing of the plat of said survey in the local land office, shall be entitled to a patent for such tract or tracts upon paying the sum of $1.25 per acre therefor. All such tracts not covered by valid applications at the expiration of said six months shall thereafter be subject to cash entry upon payment of $1.25 per care."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES R. POWELL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 1459) for the relief of Charles R. Powell. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to sell to Charles R. Powell, within a period of 90 days from and after the passage of the act, at the original purchase price, the southwest quarter of section 35, township 2 south, range 13 west, Indian meridian, Cotton County, Okla., and issue to him a patent therefor.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

J. D. CALHOUN.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 2865) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to sell and patent to J. D. Calhoun, of Lincoln Parish, La., certain lands, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to sell and patent to J. D. Calhoun, of Lincoln Parish, La., the northwest quarter of the southwest quarter section 34, township 19 north, range 2 west, Louisiana meridian, situated in the parish of Lincoln, State of Louisiana, at not less than $1.25 per acre, land which he and his grantors have occupied under claim and color of title, and of which they have had the actual possession, beneficial use, and enjoyment, believing themselves to be owners in good faith for more than 30 years: Provided, That application for the purchase of the described tract of land under this authorization be filed at the United States land office at Baton Rouge, La., within 90 days after the passage of this act, and that no adverse claim thereto be officially of record as pending when the application is allowed and the sale consummated: Provided further, That the entry which may be made and the patent issued under the provisions of this act shall be subject to and contain a reservation to the United States of all oil, gas, and other minerals in the land so entered and patented and with the right to prospect for, mine, and remove same.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WIDOW AND HEIRS OF JOSEPH ETIER.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7290) to confirm private land claim of the widow and heirs of Joseph Etier, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the private land claim of the widow and heirs of Joseph Etier, No. 243, class 5, in the report dated December 30, 1815, of the register and receiver at Opelousas, La., acting as commissioners on land claims in the western district of the State of Louisiana, which has been surveyed and segregated as section 40, township 13 north, range 4 east, Louisiana meridian, containing 668.77 acres, shall be, and the same is hereby, confirmed, and the Secretary of the Interior shall cause patent to issue for said land to the widow and heirs of Joseph Etier, their heirs, assigns, or legal representatives: Provided, That this act, and the patent which may be issued in pursuance of the same, shall only operate as a relinquishment on the part of the United States, and shall in no way prejudice any valid adverse right, if such exist, to the said land; the intent being that title shall inure to the true owners of the land under the laws of Louisiana, including the laws of prescription, in the absence of any interest or estate of the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DESCHUTES NATIONAL FOREST, OREG.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7600) authorizing the adjustment of the boundaries of the Deschutes National Forest, in the State of Oregon, and for other purposes, which was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized in his discretion to accept on behalf of the United States title to any lands in private ownership within or within 6 miles of the exterior boundaries of the Deschutes National Forest, which, in the opinion of the Secretary of Agriculture, are chiefly valuable for national forest purposes, and, in exchange therefor, may issue patent for an equal value of national forest land, in the State of Oregon, or the Secretary of Agriculture may permit the grantor to cut and remove an equal value of timber from any national forest in the State of Oregon, the values in each instance to be determined by the Secretary of Agriculture and be acceptable to the owner as fair compensation. Timber given in such exchanges shall be cut and removed under the direction and supervision and in accordance with the requirements of the Secretary of Agriculture. Lands conveyed to the United States under this act shall, upon acceptance of title, become parts of the Deschutes National Forest.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXCHANGE OF LANDS IN MONTANA.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1878) to permit the State of Montana to exchange cut-over timberlands granted for educational purposes for other lands of like character and approximate value. It provides that tracts of timbered lands heretofore granted to the State of Montana for educational purposes, from which the timber has been cut or removed pursuant to State laws, may, under such rules and regulations as the legislature of the State shall prescribe, be exchanged for other lands of like character and approximately of equal value, in private ownership, to the end that the State may acquire holdings in reasonably compact form and reforesting be undertaken in an economic manner, anything in the enabling act of the State to the contrary notwithstanding.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STREET EXTENSION THROUGH WALTER REED HOSPITAL GROUNDS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2411) to vacate certain streets and alleys within the area known as the Walter Reed General Hospital, District of Columbia, and to authorize the extension and widening of Fourteenth Street from Montague Street to its southern terminus south of Dahlia Street, Nicholson Street from Thirteenth Street to Sixteenth Street, Colorado Avenue from Montague Street to Thirteenth Street, Concord Avenue from Sixteenth Street to its western terminus west of Eighth Street west, Thirteenth Street from Nicholson Street to Piney Branch Road, and Piney Branch Road from Thirteenth Street to Blair Road, and for other purposes, which was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to provide for the necessary extensions and additional buildings to be erected at the Walter Reed General Hospital, in the District of Columbia, all public streets, except Fourteenth Street, and alleys included within the area bounded by Sixteenth Street on the west, Alaska Avenue on the northwest, Fern Street on the north, Georgia Avenue on the east, and Aspen Street, as platted on the official survey map, on the south, be, and the same hereby are, vacated, abandoned, and closed, the portions of public streets within said area which are hereby abandoned and closed by this act being known as Thirteenth Street, Fifteenth Street, Dahlia Street, Dogwood Street, and Elder Street.

SEC. 2. That under and in accordance with the provisions of subchapter 1 of chapter 15 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to institute in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia a proceeding in rem to condemn the land that may be necessary for the extension and widening of Fourteenth Street from Montague Street to the southern boundary of the Walter Reed General Hospital grounds, Nicholson Street from Thirteenth Street to Sixteenth Street, Colorado Avenue from Montague Street to Thirteenth Street, Concord Avenue from Sixteenth Street to its western terminus west of Eighth Street west, Thirteenth Street from Nicholson Street to Piney Branch Road, and Piney Branch Road from Thirteenth Street to Blair Road, all in accordance with the plan of the permanent system of highways for the District of Columbia: Provided, however, That of the amount found to be due and awarded by the jury in said proceedings as damages for, and in respect of, the land to be condemned for said extensions or widening, plus the costs and expenses of the proceedings hereunder, four-tenths shall be assessed against the property which the jury shall find to be benefited.

SEC. 3. That when Fourteenth Street shall be opened for traffic to the south boundary of the property known as the Walter Reed General Hospital grounds, numbered for purposes of assessment and taxation as parcel 89 sub 7, the control and jurisdiction of that part of Fourteenth Street as laid down on the plan of the permanent system of highways of the District of Columbia which lies within the said hospital grounds, shall immediately pass to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, the same in all respects as other streets and avenues in the District of Columbia: Provided, That the grade of the street through the hospital grounds shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of War.

SEC. 4. That an amount sufficient to pay the necessary costs and expenses of the condemnation proceedings taken pursuant hereto, and for the payment of the amounts awarded as damages, is hereby authorized, payable out of the revenues of the District of Columbia; the amounts collected as benefits to be covered into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EDWIN GANTNER.

The Senate as in Committee of the Whole proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2556) for the relief of Edwin Gantner.

It authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to issue a patent to Edwin Gantner upon homestead entry, Newcastle 025304, embracing the west one-half section 26, and the north one-half section 27, township 52 north, range 74 west, sixth principal meridian, made by said Edwin Gantner, without requiring further residence.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RAILROAD ABANDONED RIGHTS OF WAY.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 244) to provide for the disposition of abandoned portions of rights of way granted to railroad companies which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys with amendments, on page 2, line 11, after the word "of" to strike out "said patent" and to insert "the patent thereto"; and in line 16, after the word "may," to insert the words "hereafter and before such forfeiture or abandonment," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That whenever public lands of the United States have been or may be granted to any railroad company for use as a right of way for its railroad or as sites for railroad structures of any kind, and use and occupancy of said lands for such purposes has ceased or shall hereafter cease, whether by forfeiture or by abandonment by said railroad company declared or decreed by a court of competent jurisdiction or by act of Congress, then and thereupon all right, title, interest, and estate of the United States in said lands shall, except such part thereof as may be embraced in a public highway legally established within one year after the date of said decree or forfeiture or abandonment be transferred to and vested in any person, firm, or corporation, assigns, or successors in title and interest to whom or to which title of the United States may have been or may be granted, conveying or purporting to convey the whole of the legal subdivision or subdivisions traversed or occupied by such railroad or railroad structures of any kind as aforesaid, except lands within a municipality the title to which, upon forfeiture or abandonment, as herein provided, shall vest in such municipality, and this by virtue of the patent thereto and without the necessity of any other or further conveyance or assurance of any kind or nature whatsoever: Provided, That this act shall not affect conveyances made by any railroad company of portions of its right of way if such conveyance be among those which have been or may hereafter and before such forfeiture or abandonment be validated and confirmed by any act of Congress; nor shall this act affect any public highway now on said right of way: Provided further, That the transfer of such lands shall be subject to and contain reservations in favor of the United States of all oil, gas, and other minerals in the land so transferred and conveyed, with the right to prospect for, mine, and remove same.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC LANDS IN ARKANSAS.

The Senate as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 1318) granting to certain claimants the preferential right to purchase certain alleged public lands in the State of Arkansas, and for other purposes, which was read, as follows:

Whereas certain lands in Poinsett County and Mississippi County, in the State of Arkansas, namely, those portions of sections 1, 2, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 14, 15, 16, 18, 21, 22, 27, 28, 33, 34, 35, 36, township 10 north, range 7 east, in Poinsett County, and sections 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, township 10 north, range 8 east, in Mississippi County, Ark., shown in the official surveys as Tyronza River, Dead Timber Lake, and lake on the official plats of these townships, have been, by Executive order, temporarily withdrawn from settlement, location, sale, or entry in order to adjust claims of patentees against the United States and among themselves arising from alleged incomplete or erroneous surveys; and

Whereas the land office, upon investigation, has found that the greater part of these lands in question have been put in cultivation down to the water's edge by parties who thought they had title to them and have been paying taxes on many of these lands, and the land office is now making a resurvey, and will replat these areas at the request of said adjacent landowners: Therefore

Be it enacted, etc., That M. M. Want, as trustee for the owners, their heirs, administrators, or assigns, of lands adjacent to those portions of sections 1, 2, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 14, 15, 16, 18, 21, 22, 27, 28, 33, 34, 35, 36, township 10 north, range 7 east, in Poinsett County, and sections 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, township 10 north, range 8 east, in Mississippi County, Ark., shown in the official surveys as Tyronza River, Dead Timber Lake, and lake on the official plats of these townships, which have been, by Executive order No. 3123, issued on July 19, 1919, temporarily withdrawn from settlement, location, sale, or entry in order to adjust claims of patentees against the United States and among themselves arising from alleged incomplete or erroneous surveys, is hereby granted preferential right at any time within 90 days after the passage of this act and the filing of the plats of a corrected survey of said lands in the United States land office at Little Rock, Ark., to purchase said lands of the United States of America, and to pay for the same at the rate of $1.25 per acre, and said purchase shall be in trust for said adjacent landowners, and, that upon the issuance of said patents to said trustee, he shall forthwith convey to each of the said adjacent landowners that portion of said lands which may lie adjacent to his lands upon the payment by said party of his proportionate part of said purchase price and entry fees for the same, and in case either of said lakes or said river may be the boundary line between two adjacent owners, then, if they have not otherwise agreed upon a line of division, the center of said lake or river shall be the boundary between said adjacent landowners: Provided, That if any person, in good faith, may have located and settled upon any portion of these lands prior to the Executive order withdrawing said lands from such location and settlement, then nothing in this act shall be construed to deprive said party of any rights he may have gained by said location and settlement.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

FORT SEWELL MILITARY RESERVATION, MASS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2736) providing for the conveyance to the town of Marblehead, in the State of Massachusetts, of Fort Sewell Military Reservation for public use, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, some objection was made the other day by a number of Senators when it was proposed to grant to the State of Florida a certain abandoned military reservation, and a number of Senators stated that if it was the purpose of the Government to part with the title to unused military reservations they would insist that similar grants be made to all the States, whereas other Senators took the view that the Government had paid large sums for most of the lands which it had acquired and that it ought not be giving such lands away, but that it ought to sell them and cover into the Treasury as large an amount as was possible to be derived from the sale of those lands. May I ask the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] whether or not the Military Affairs Committee purposes to adopt a policy by which all these abandoned military reservations are to be given away or are we to sell them and to cover back into the Treasury as large a sum as we can possibly obtain from such sales?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, the Military Affairs Committee has not attempted to adopt any policy in this respect. This is a rather unusual situation. Perhaps it will interest the Senator from Utah to turn to the report of the committee on this bill, from which he will find that—

The lands comprising the reservations of Forts Lee and Pickering were donated to the Federal Government by the local communities for the purpose of the erection thereon of defensive works for the fortification of the harbors of the near-by towns.

In making this donation specific provision was made in the deeds to the United States, with the exception of a part of Fort Pickering, for reversion to the grantor, the town of Salem, in case the Government should cease at any time to use the lands for the purpose for which they were conveyed.

This conversion, Mr. President, was made in 1794. The deed recited that if the United States Government did not need these tracts of land at any time for military purposes the Government should return them to the town of Salem. The Government has not used these tracts for military purposes for generations. A few acres in Fort Pickering were purchased. I think the cost was $250 to the United States Government in 1794. Now the War Department feels in duty bound, and I think the Government should feel in duty bound, to give these lands back.

Mr. KING. I think if there is a reversionary interest in the land, with the abandonment by the Government, ipso facto the land would revert to the grantor.

Mr. WADSWORTH. But the Government has no authority to take such action without the sanction of Congress.

Mr. KING. Then I think we ought to sanction it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment to the bill which has been reported by the Committee on Military Affairs.

The amendment was, on page 2, after line 7, to insert:

That the Secretary of War be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to convey, by quitclaim deed, to the city of Salem, in the State of Massachusetts, for perpetual use as a public park or other public use, all the proprietary right, title, and interest of the United States to and in that certain tract of land, together with all structures and improvements thereon, owned by the United States, embraced within the military reservation known as Fort Lee, situated on Salem Neck, in Essex County, in the State of Massachusetts, and containing approximately 2.3 acres.

That the Secretary of War be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to convey, by quitclaim deed, to the city of Salem, in the State of Massachusetts, for perpetual use as a public park or other public use, all the proprietary right, title, and interest of the United States to and in those certain tracts of land, together with all structures and improvements thereon, owned by the United States, embraced within the military reservation known as Fort Pickering, situated at Salem, in Essex County, in the State of Massachusetts, including a tract on Hospital Point and a portion of Winter Island, in the harbor, and containing an aggregate area of approximately 32 acres.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to convey, by quitclaim deed, to the town of Marblehead, in the State of Massachusetts, for perpetual use as a public park or other public use, all the proprietary right, title, and interest of the United States to and in that certain tract of land, together with all structures and improvements thereon, owned by the United States, embraced within the military reservation known as Fort Sewall, situated at the west entrance to Marblehead Harbor, in the State of Massachusetts, and containing approximately 2½ acres: Provided, however, That the town of Marblehead shall not have the right to sell or convey aforesaid property nor to devote the same to any other than a public use; and in the event the said property shall not be used as above provided the right, title, and interest hereby authorized to be conveyed shall revert to the United States.

That the Secretary of War be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to convey, by quitclaim deed, to the city of Salem, in the State of Massachusetts, for perpetual use as a public park or other public use, all the proprietary right, title, and interest of the United States to and in that certain tract of land, together with all structures and improvements thereon, owned by the United States, embraced within the military reservation known as Fort Lee, situated on Salem Neck, in Essex County, in the State of Massachusetts, and containing approximately 2.3 acres.

That the Secretary of War be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to convey, by quitclaim deed, to the city of Salem, in the State of Massachusetts, for perpetual use as a public park or other public use, all the proprietary right, title, and interest of the United States to and in those certain tracts of land, together with all structures and improvements thereon, owned by the United States, embraced within the military reservation known as Fort Pickering, situated at Salem, in Essex County, in the State of Massachusetts, including a tract on Hospital Point and a portion of Winter Island, in the harbor, and containing an aggregate area of approximately 32 acres.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill providing for the conveyance of certain unused military reservations in the State of Massachusetts to the city of Salem and the town of Marblehead."

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 140) for the relief of Peter Shell was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I ask that that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2498) to correct the military record of Alonzo C. Shekell was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I ask that that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

JUDICIAL DISTRICTS IN WEST VIRGINIA.

The bill (S. 2810) to amend and reenact section 113 of chapter 5 of the Judicial Code of the United States, as amended and reenacted by an act approved the 22d of August, 1914, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 113 of chapter 5 of the Judicial Code of the United States, as amended by the act approved August 22, 1914, be further amended and reenacted so the same shall read as follows:

"SEC. 113. The State of West Virginia is divided into two districts, to be known as the northern and southern districts of West Virginia. The northern district shall include the territory embraced on the 1st day of July, 1910, in the counties of Hancock, Brooke, Ohio, Marshall, Tyler, Pleasants, Wood, Wirt, Ritchie, Doddridge, Wetzel, Monongalia, Marion, Harrison, Lewis, Gilmer, Calhoun, Upshur, Barbour, Taylor, Preston, Tucker, Randolph, Pendleton, Hardy, Grant, Mineral, Hampshire, Morgan, Berkeley, and Jefferson, with the waters thereof. The terms of the district court for the northern district shall be held at Martinsburg on the first Tuesday in April and the third Tuesday in September; at Clarksburg on the second Tuesday in April and the first Tuesday in October; at Wheeling on the first Tuesday in May and the third Tuesday in October; at Elkins on the third Tuesday in June and the third Tuesday in November; at Parkersburg on the second Tuesday in January and the fourth Tuesday in May.

"The southern district shall include the territory embraced on the 1st day of July, 1910, in the counties of Jackson, Roane, Clay, Braxton, Webster, Nicholas, Pocahontas, Greenbrier, Fayette, Boone, Kanawha, Putnam, Mason, Cabell, Wayne, Lincoln, Logan, Mingo, Raleigh, Wyoming, McDowell, Mercer, Summers, and Monroe, with the waters thereof. The terms of the district court for the southern district shall be held at Charleston on the third Tuesday in April and the third Tuesday in November; at Huntington on the first Tuesday in March and the third Tuesday in September; at Bluefield on the first Tuesday in January and the third Tuesday in June; at Williamson on the first Tuesday in February; at Webster Springs on the fourth Tuesday in August; at Lewisburg on the first Tuesday in July: Provided, That a place for holding court at Webster Springs and Lewisburg shall be furnished free of cost to the United States: Provided further, That a place for holding court at Williamson shall be furnished free of cost to the United States by Mingo County until other provision is made therefor by law."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 1456) for the relief of Col. Herbert Deakyne, Corps of Engineers, United States Army, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I ask that that bill go over until I may have an opportunity to examine it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2493) to relieve enlisted men affected thereby from certain hardship incident to the operation of the proviso of section 4b of the national defense act of June 3, 1916, as amended by the act of June 4, 1920, and to protect disbursing officers in connection therewith, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

COLLEGE OF WILLIAM AND MARY, VIRGINIA.

The bill (S. 2173) to loan to the College of William and Mary in Virginia two of the cannon surrendered by the British at Yorktown on October 19, 1781, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments on page 2, line 7, after the name "Virginia," to strike out "together with proper mounts, the same"; in line 8, after the word "college," to strike out "subjbect" and insert "subject"; and in line 9, after the word "act," to insert "Provided, That the War Department shall not incur any expense because of the transfer of the cannon authorized herein," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to loan to the said College of William and Mary in Virginia two of those cannon surrendered by the British at Yorktown on October 19, 1781, which are now at Old Point Comfort, Va., to be held by said college subject to the right of Congress at any time to amend or repeal this act: Provided, That the War Department shall not incur any expense because of the transfer of the cannon authorized herein.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was rejected.

RETIREMENT OF DISTRICT SCHOOL TEACHERS.

The bill (S. 2589) to amend section 11 of the act entitled "An act for the retirement of public-school teachers in the District of Columbia," approved January 15, 1920, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have asked for certain information as to the effect of this measure and whether it would constitute a precedent under which many others separated from the service of the Government before retirement laws were passed would be entitled to pensions. On its face it is a meritorious bill and has my sympathy; but if it would constitute a precedent that would cost the Government hundreds of thousands of dollars of additional expense and place upon the retirement list thousands of others who have separated themselves from the Government service, I can see an objection, not to the bill itself but because of the precedent which it would establish. When I obtain that information I shall be glad to impart it to the Senate, but in the meantime I shall ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

LAND IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The bill (S. 2616) to empower the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to convey certain land was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments on page 1, line 4, after the words "convey to the" to strike out "Sanitary Grocery Co., a body corporate under the laws of the State of Virginia," and insert "owners of the abutting property;" and on page 2, line 1, after the word "than" to strike out "the assessed value of the contiguous private property," and insert "$1.50 per square foot"; so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized to convey to the owners of the abutting property, the land contained in the bed of Seaton Place and in the bed of S Street east of Fourth Street NE., and extending to the line of the Metropolitan branch of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Co., in the city of Washington, D. C., upon the payment therefor to the District of Columbia of an amount not less than $1.50 per square foot, the amount so paid to be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

METHOD OF CAPITAL PUNISHMENT IN THE DISTRICT.

The bill (S. 1074) to prescribe the method of capital punishment in the District of Columbia, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I ask that that bill go over.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I hope my friend from Utah will not object to that bill. It passed the Senate a year or two ago, but failed of passage in the House. It comes from the Committee on the District of Columbia with a unanimous report and has been recommended by the District Commissioners.

Mr. KING. I shall not object to the bill, but shall vote against it. I should like to have the Senator explain it briefly.

Mr. DIAL. The bill is designed merely to change the form of capital punishment in the District of Columbia from hanging to electrocution. In that way it makes the punishment a little milder.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That on and after the 1st day of January, 1922, the mode of capital punishment in the District of Columbia shall be by the process commonly known as electrocution. The punishment of death shall be inflicted by causing to pass through the body of the convict a current of electricity of sufficient intensity to cause death, and the application of such current shall be continued until such convict is dead.

SEC. 2. That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized and required, on the approval of this act by the President, to provide a death chamber and necessary apparatus for inflicting the death penalty by electrocution, to pay the cost thereof out of any funds available and not otherwise appropriated, to designate an executioner and necessary assistants, not exceeding three in number, and to fix the fees thereof for services, which shall be paid out of any funds available and not otherwise appropriated.

SEC. 3. That upon the conviction of any person in the District of Columbia of a crime the punishment of which is death, it shall be the duty of the presiding judge to sentence such convicted person to death according to the terms of this act, and to make such sentence in writing, which shall be filed with the papers in the case against such convicted person, and a certified copy thereof shall be transmitted, by the clerk of the court in which such sentence is pronounced, to the superintendent of the District Jail, not less than 10 days prior to the time fixed in the sentence of the court for the execution of the same.

SEC. 4. That at the execution of the death penalty as herein prescribed there shall be present the following persons, and no more, to wit:

The executioner and his assistants; the physician of the prison and one other physician if the condemned person so desires; the condemned person's counsel and relatives, not exceeding three, if they so desire; the prison chaplain and such other ministers of the Gospel, not exceeding two, as may attend by desire of the condemned; the superintendent of the prison, or, in the event of his disability, a deputy designated by him; and not fewer than three nor more than five respectable citizens whom the superintendent of the prison shall designate, and, if necessary to insure their attendance, shall subpœna to be present. The fact of execution shall be certified by the prison physician and the executioner to the clerk of the court in which sentence was pronounced, which certificate shall be filed by the clerk with the papers in the case.

SEC. 5. That all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. DIAL. I move to amend the bill on page 1, line 3, by striking out "January" and inserting "June." The 1st day of January, specified in the bill as the date on which the new method of capital punishment shall take effect, has already passed. Under the amendment the bill will begin to take effect on the 1st of June next.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 1, line 3, after the word "of," it is proposed to strike out "January" and insert "June," so as to read "the 1st day of June, 1922."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OVERMAN. I did not hear the bill read, and I should like to inquire of the Senator from South Carolina what is its purpose?

Mr. DIAL. It is to change the method of inflicting capital punishment in the District of Columbia from hanging to electrocution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

POTOMAC INSURANCE CO.

The bill (S. 1312) to amend the charter of the Potomac Insurance Co. of the District of Columbia was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I ask that that bill go over.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I withdraw the objection.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I merely want to say that when this measure came up once before on the calendar on the suggestion of the Senator from Utah it was referred back to the committee, where additional hearings were held and the amendment, which as I understood was suggested by him, was put in the bill. It is embodied in section 2, which reads:

That Congress reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act at any time.

The effect of the bill is simply to extend in a slight degree—I do not remember exactly the items—the scope of the powers of the Potomac Insurance Co. so that they may write additional insurance.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator whether by reason of extending the scope of the powers of the insurance company and permitting it to insure against casualties of a nature different from those which it has been permitted to insure against in the past it will be required to maintain additional reserves?

Mr. JONES of Washington. There is nothing in the bill that requires that to be done. Unless there is some provision of the general law enforcing such a requirement it would not be done under this bill. I do not know as to that. I will say to the Senator that I was not present at the meeting of the committee when this bill was ordered reported, as I was unable to be there.

Mr. KING. The Senator has in mind the fact that certain reserves are properly required, and they depend upon the character of policy which may be written. If the line of insurance is limited, for instance, to burglar insurance or to plate-glass insurance a very small reserve might be required, whereas if the company were allowed to write general insurance against all kinds of casualties a larger reserve should be required. I am not familiar with the charter of the company——

Mr. JONES of Washington. Nor am I.

Mr. KING. Or with the general law, but I assume that, if they are required, additional reserves will be provided.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I assume that to be so. This bill has the indorsement of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and, as I have said, on the second consideration of the matter by the committee they were satisfied regarding its provisions, although as I have indicated I was not present at that meeting.

Mr. KING. As it is a Senate bill, of course, it has not passed the House.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It is a Senate bill.

Mr. KING. I shall not object to the present consideration of the bill. Undoubtedly the point which I have in mind will be called attention to, and, if ample provision has not been made, I am sure the House will make such provision.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think the Senator is safe in that assumption.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment on page 3, after line 6, to insert a new section as follows:

SEC. 2. That Congress reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act at any time.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to incorporate a fire insurance company in Georgetown, in the District of Columbia," approved the 2d of March, 1831, and the act entitled "An act to amend the charter of the Potomac Fire Insurance Co. of Georgetown," approved the 3d of March, 1837, and the act entitled "An act to renew and continue in force the charter of the Potomac Insurance Co. of Georgetown, District of Columbia," approved the 25th of March, 1870, and the act entitled "An act to change the name of the Potomac Insurance Co. of Georgetown, and for other purposes," approved the 10th day of March, 1900, be, and the same are hereby, amended so as to grant to the Potomac Insurance Co. of the District of Columbia, in addition to the powers, privileges, and immunities granted to the said company in and by its original act of incorporation, as amended, full power and authority to make insurances against lightning, windstorm, tornado, cyclone, earthquake, hail, frost or snow, civil riot and commmotion, and by explosion, whether fire ensues or not (except upon steam boilers and pipes, flywheels, engines and machinery, connected therewith or operated thereby, against explosion and accident, and except against loss or damage to life or property resulting therefrom, and except against loss of use and occupancy caused thereby); and also against loss or damage by water to any goods or premises arising from the breakage or leakage of sprinklers, pumps, or other apparatus erected for extinguishing fires, and of water pipes, and against accidental injury to such sprinklers, pumps, or other apparatus; also insurances upon automobiles, whether stationary or being operated under their own power, which shall include all or any of the hazards of fire, explosion, transportation, collision, loss by legal liability for damage to or resulting from the maintenance and use of automobiles, and loss by burglary or theft, or both, but shall not include loss by reason of bodily injury to the person; and to effect reinsurances of any risks taken by

it; and the said company shall have full power and authority to make and effect any and all of the above-described insurances and reinsurances.

SEC. 2. That Congress reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act at any time.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER.

The bill (H. R. 8762) to create a commission authorized under certain conditions to refund or convert obligations of foreign Governments owing to the United States of America, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. That bill is the unfinished business. I ask that it may go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

WATER ON NATIONAL FOREST LANDS IN ARIZONA.

The bill (S. 386) authorizing a right of way for the transportation of water for improvement of grazing and development of the live-stock industry upon public and national forest lands in Arizona was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, as hereinafter provided, there are hereby granted to any firm, citizen, association of citizens, or corporation of the United States engaged in the live-stock industry in the State of Arizona, easements and rights of way in and over national forests, public lands, and reservations of the United States, surveyed or unsurveyed, in said State of Arizona for reservoirs, canals, pipe lines, flumes, tunnels, or other water conduits and waterworks and appurtenances, for the purpose of furnishing water to live stock and for other beneficial purposes connected with the live-stock industry. Upon the filing by the grantee of maps and other pertinent data showing the location and character of such easements and rights of way, and the approval thereof by the said Secretary, all lands, whether surveyed or unsurveyed, in or over which such easements and rights of way shall extend, shall be disposed of subject to such easements and rights of way: Provided, That said approval of the Secretary of the Interior shall not be given within or through any national forest except with the approval of the Secretary of Agriculture and under such conditions and stipulations as the latter may require for the fullest utilization and proper administration of the national forest, and such approval may be withheld whenever in the opinion of the Secretary of Agriculture it would not be for the best interests of the national forests. Said maps may be filed in such sections and at such times as the Secretary of the Interior may permit or require.

SEC. 2. That the grant herein authorized shall be upon the express condition that from and after a date to be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior and not exceeding 50 years from the date of approval of the Secretary of the Interior the United States shall have the right to take over the easements and rights of way herein granted and any other property of grantee dependent in whole or in part for its usefulness upon such easements and rights of way, and upon condition that it shall pay, before taking possession, the reasonable value of all property taken over, including structures and fixtures acquired, erected, or placed upon the lands and included in the water plant, such reasonable value to be determined by the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That such reasonable value shall not include or be construed to mean or be affected by the value of the franchise, good will, or profits to be earned on pending contracts or any other intangible element.

SEC. 3. That all or any part of such rights of way shall be forfeited and annulled by the Secretary of the Interior upon proper finding by the head of the department having jurisdiction over the land, or failure to complete construction within five years or for nonuse for a period of two years.

SEC. 4. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to perform any and all acts and to make such rules and regulations, not inconsistent with this act, as may be necessary and proper for carrying its provisions into full force and effect.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 1297) for the relief of George Van Derburgh Brown was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over until I have a chance to examine the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 103) for the relief of Morgan Miller was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over until the next time the calendar is called.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2765) for the relief of the Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland, Baltimore, Md., was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over. I have not had a chance to examine the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 1362) for the relief of M. Fine & Sons was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

KRISTINA FURJAK.

The bill (S. 160) for the relief of Kristina Furjak was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Kristina Furjak, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $495, being the amount deposited with the Commissioner of Immigration at Ellis Island for safe-keeping pending determination of her right to enter the United States, said sum having disappeared from the safe and all efforts made to determine the responsibility for the loss having proved unsuccessful.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I am not going to object to the consideration of this bill; but I do think the time is about here, if not already here and past, when the Government ought to require a bond whenever money is handled by employees of the Government. There is hardly a time when the calendar is called, either in the House or in the Senate, when the Government of the United States is not asked to pay money on account of thefts that have occurred or in many cases we do not know how the money disappeared.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I notice, too, the extraordinary number of these cases for the relief of immigration officers to whom money belonging to immigrants is intrusted. It is extraordinary to me that money should be taken from these immigrants and put into the hands of perfectly irresponsible persons.

Mr. KING. The same thing happens in our hospitals, too.

Mr. SMOOT. Not only that, but I think the Treasury Department ought to issue an order that no official shall receive money from an immigrant for safe-keeping and the Government of the United States be responsible for it; or, if they are going to be responsible for it, I want the Treasury Department to take a bond or secure a bond in some way.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Of course, the Senator realizes that it would be a wrong that none of us could justify that the Government of the United States should not be responsible to the immigrant, who is practically obliged to intrust the money to the Government officials.

Mr. SMOOT. I say that I am not going to object to the consideration of this bill, but cases of this kind are getting so numerous, and not only that but other claims for all manner of losses are coming here to such an extent that there ought to be an overhauling of the whole practice.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I wonder if some one responsible for this bill, or the chairman of the Committee on Immigration, can not give us some information about how it comes about that money is taken from the poor immigrants here, a little matter of $50 or $75, or in this case a poor woman gives up $400 to an officer, and then it disappears.

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER], who introduced the bill, if he knows anything about the details.

Mr. SPENCER. I know all the facts about this case. Here was an immigrant woman who came over here with approximately $495. That was all she had in the world. When she came to Ellis Island she intrusted that money to the officials of the United States. The department report to us that what became of that money they do not know, but that they lost it. The bill is one which was drawn in the Department of Labor and sent down here by Secretary Wilson when he was Secretary of Labor.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I will say to the Senator from Missouri that I take it no one has any reason to complain about the reimbursement of the poor woman who intrusted her money to these officers. What we are interested in knowing is how such a thing could happen, and what provision of law there is that will insure that it shall not happen again. I call the attention of the Senator from Missouri to a fact which has struck me heretofore—that there is scarcely a call of the calendar when there is not a bill here to reimburse some immigrant whose money has thus been appropriated and disappeared.

Mr. SPENCER. I quite agree that there ought to be general legislation that will do just what the Senator from Utah indicates, and that is to require every Government employee at Ellis Island and elsewhere who handles money to be under bond; but that is a matter for general legislation, which ought to be considered at another time, and not tacked on to an individual bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I am not suggesting it for that purpose; but that woman must have known what official she gave that money to, and there is not a word here to show what the result of the investigation was. The money ought to have been traced to somebody. I can not see how it is possible that an official of the Government receiving $495 from a woman could not give some account of it, at least, and where the money went as far as he was concerned.

Mr. SPENCER. May I say to the Senator from Utah that here is exactly what happened: This woman was taken by the watchman to the Treasurer's office. She put her money into the hands of the Treasurer and received certificate No. 7651 for the money. When she came back to get it the department were absolutely unable to locate the envelope in which it was or to return to her the money for which they had given the official receipt.

Mr. SMOOT. In other words, somebody stole the money. I think there are so very few officials that have access to the safe that the department ought to have found out something more about it, rather than to hasten down to Washington and ask the Treasury of the United States to pay the amount.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. It is encouraging the theft of these funds.

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly; there is not any doubt about that. Not only that, but it has gotten now so that whenever any officer, from the highest to the lowest, in the Navy or the Army loses an overcoat or a pair of shoes or any part of his apparel, or his wife loses her jewelry or perhaps her hat or anything else, the Government of the United States has to pay for it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. It would be interesting to know if any employee of the office in which the money was placed was dismissed or whether an investigation was had.

Mr. SMOOT. This woman is without the money and she is entitled to it, but I hope this is the last claim of the kind that we will pay until there is a stricter account of it and until we know more about how the money is lost.

Mr. KING. Let me add that we have appropriated during the past month several sums to reimburse individuals who have lost money, notwithstanding the War Department and the Navy Department and the Post Office Department have recommended against it. That is to say, those departments have found negligence, and notwithstanding the negligence the Senate has passed three bills that I remember within the past month or six weeks making appropriations; so that we have encouraged the looseness which has prevailed in many of the departments and have gone over the heads of the departments in making appropriations when the heads of the departments have recommended against it. Congress is to blame largely for the presentation of these claims. We are encouraging them by the manner in which we treat the negligence and the felonies of persons in the Government employ.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be proposed the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALASKA STEAMSHIP CO.

The bill (S. 978) for the relief of the Alaska Steamship Co. was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 6, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$9,024.27" and insert "$5,974.27," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay to the Alaska Steamship Co., a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Nevada, the sum of $5,974.27, in payment of the balance due said company for services rendered at the request of the United States deputy collector of customs at Unalaska, Alaska, and in pursuance of an agreement with him for the transportation and care of 193 survivors of the wreck of the American ship Columbia near Scotch Cap Lighthouse, Alaska, in May, 1909.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 67) for the relief of the heirs of Adam and Noah Brown was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

ELIZABETH MARSH WATKINS.

The bill (S. 841) for the relief of Elizabeth Marsh Watkins was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,500, to compensate Elizabeth Marsh Watkins, of Wakpala, S. Dak., for permanent bodily injuries sustained by her on the 9th day of November, 1908, at the Government Indian school at Flandreau, S. Dak.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 2258) for the relief of Jesse L. Clay was announced as next in order.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, these bills are going through rapidly, and we do not understand what they are. It seems to me the Senators who introduce the bills ought to make some brief statements about them.

Mr. KING. I object to the consideration of this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

OWNER OF THE DERRICK "CAPITOL."

The bill (S. 1767) for the relief of the owner of the derrick Capitol was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I object to the consideration of this bill. If the Senator who introduced it will amend the bill so that a court of admiralty may make findings and report, I shall have no objection; but I object to the bill as it stands, authorizing them to pronounce judgment.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, of course Congress must appropriate the money before the claim can be paid. I think the bill conforms to the uniform practice followed in this body in cases of this kind. In the case of this bill, an examination of the record will show clearly that the Navy tug which was towing this barge was responsible for the accident. The claim involves about $1,500. The Navy Department would have settled it if it had had the right under the law, as the report from the department clearly indicates.

Mr. SMOOT. Why did they not have the right?

Mr. CALDER. It is over $500.

Mr. KING. My recollection is that objection has been made a number of times to referring these bills to the Court of Claims or to a court of admiralty with authority to pronounce judgment. We have referred them to the courts in order that they might ascertain what the facts were and make findings of fact and perhaps conclusions of law, and then upon those findings Congress could make such appropriations as they saw fit.

Mr. CALDER. I will say that the bills have been passed in both forms. They have been passed in this form, and also referring the claims to the Court of Claims for findings and report to Congress. It is so apparent from the record in this case that the Government is responsible that it seems to me only fair to this concern that they should be permitted to go to court and sue, giving the court the same right to render judgment against them if they were in error. I think, if the Senator will permit me, this is a very fair thing to do under the circumstances.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, the fact of the matter is precisely as the Senator from Utah indicates. From time to time objection has been made to bills which carried a judgment of the Court of Claims, but I think the objection was made under a misapprehension of the custom of the Committee on Claims and the action both of the Senate and of the House.

I had in my desk—I have just looked for it, but have not laid my hands on it—a package of bills which have been passed since I have been here by both the House and Senate, in each one of which the Court of Claims had rendered judgment. The judgment of the Court of Claims is not self-enforcing. The judgment of the Court of Claims can not be collected; there is no power in the world to pay it unless Congress approves of it and appropriates the money for its payment. Therefore the Committee on Claims always has recommended the passage of bills in precisely the form of the bill introduced by the Senator from New York.

Mr. KING. Congress feels, perhaps, a little higher obligation to pay a judgment than to pay a recommendation.

Mr. SPENCER. No; the difficulty, I think, lies here: I assume that there would not be any difficulty if the Court of Claims were instructed to make a finding of facts including the amount which under the evidence the Court of Claims believed was due, because that finding of fact, including the amount which they believed was due, would have precisely the same moral effect as a judgment of the Court of Claims would have for any definite amount; but the difficulty has been that if that is not in the bill the Court of Claims are apt to make a finding regarding the facts and say nothing about the amount that is actually due, and that leaves Congress still in the dark.

Mr. SMOOT. This, however, goes before the United States District Court.

Mr. SPENCER. The same thing would apply there.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the claim of the owner of the derrick Capitol, arising out of collision while in tow of the United States Navy tug No. 80 on April 3, 1919, at Harlem River, N. Y., for and on account of the losses alleged to have been suffered in said collision by the owner of said derrick Capitol by reason of damages to said derrick, may be submitted to the United States District Court for the Eastern District of New York under and in compliance with the rules of said court sitting as a court of admiralty, and acting under the rules governing such court, and said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine such suit and to enter judgment or decree for the amount of such damages and costs, if any, as shall be found to be due against the United States in favor of the owner of the said derrick Capitol or against the owner of said derrick Capitol in favor of the United States, and upon the same principles and measures of liability as in like cases in admiralty between private parties and with the same rights of appeal: Provided, That such notice of the suit shall be given to the Attorney General of the United States as may be provided by order of the said court, and it shall be the duty of the Attorney General to cause the United States attorney in such district to appear and defend for the United States: Provided further, That said suit shall be brought and commenced within four months of the date of the passage of this act.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I can not sympathize with the position taken by the Senator from Utah with respect to these matters. He proposes, as I understand, to empower the district court to make findings of fact, and upon those findings of fact the Congress then will determine what the law is, and apply the law, and accordingly give the relief to the complainant or withhold it; or else it must be that he intends that the Congress shall determine, even if the law and the facts are with the claimant, that compensation shall be withheld.

I can not believe that the Senator from Utah intends that the United States shall escape an obligation which is justly due by it; and I submit to him that the question as to whether, under the facts found, the United States is legally liable if it were otherwise open to suit can be infinitely better determined by the district court and by the circuit court of appeals and by the Supreme Court of the United States upon appeal than it could ever be determined by the Congress of the United States. So I am utterly unable to understand the contention that is made from time to time in these cases that the court should determine the facts, but that the question of the law which should be applied to those facts should be determined by the Congress of the United States.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will pardon me, the position which has been taken by others—and in what I have said I have been merely echoing the statements made by older Senators who have had many experiences with regard to these matters—is that the procedure has been to have a reference of these matters to some appropriate judicial tribunal, the Court of Claims or a court of admiralty, to ascertain the facts, and report the facts back to Congress. I would go further and not only have them ascertain the facts, but report the conclusions of law that inevitably must follow from the facts, and make recommendations as to what in their judgment should be done, and how much should be paid by the Government. The point which has been made by Senators, however, was that they do not want judgment rendered by the court, but prefer to have the recommendations of the appropriate tribunals not only with respect to the questions of fact, but with respect to the questions of law, and then leave it to Congress to make the appropriation.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator will understand that much depends upon the character of the claim. A claim may be made with respect to a complicated state of facts, and even if the facts are admitted as contended by the claimant, yet no legal liability would arise. Often we are appealed to in cases to pass bills where no legal responsibility exists at all, but we are appealed to upon moral grounds, asserting that there is a moral responsibility in the matter. In a case of that kind we can very readily leave the matter to the Court of Claims or some other court to determine what the facts are. Then we would be appealed to where there is no legal liability whatever to make appropriation notwithstanding there being what is claimed to be a moral obligation.

But here is a case in which it is claimed that a vessel was destroyed by reason of a collision with a tug owned by the Government of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will suspend. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The READING CLERK. A bill (H. R. 8762) to create a commission authorized under certain conditions to refund or convert obligations of foreign Governments owing to the United States of America, and for other purposes.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the consideration of the bill which has been before the Senate may be concluded, provided it does not take more than 5 or 10 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside for that purpose for not to exceed five minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection, and the unfinished business is temporarily laid aside.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. In a case of the kind to which I have referred, where a legal liability arises, if the facts found are in favor of the claimant, I can see no reason whatever for taking the matter away from the court which can most appropriately determine whether a legal liability exists, and transferring it to the Congress. That seems to be the case here.

Mr. KING. Let me say to the Senator that there has been a feeling that judgments ought not to be rendered in the courts upon these claims, but that the courts should make their findings and report what, in their opinion under the facts and under the law, ought to be done. I have accepted that as a standard to guide Congress in the determination of these cases.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REPORT OF THE NATIONAL ACADEMY OF SCIENCES.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MOSES) laid before the Senate a communication from the president of the National Academy of Sciences, transmitting, pursuant to law, the report of the academy for the last half of the fiscal year ended June 30, 1921, which was referred to the Committee on the Library.

ADJUSTMENT OF FOREIGN LOANS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 8762) to create a commission authorized under certain conditions to refund or convert obligations of foreign Governments owing to the United States of America, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Finance with amendments.

Mr. McCUMBER obtained the floor.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Harris	Myers	Smoot
Borah	Harrison	Nelson	Spencer
Brandegee	Heflin	Nicholson	Stanfield
Broussard	Hitchcock	Norris	Sterling
Bursum	Johnson	Oddie	Sutherland
Calder	Jones, N. Mex.	Overman	Townsend
Capper	Jones, Wash.	Owen	Trammell
Caraway	Kellogg	Page	Wadsworth
Culberson	Ladd	Phipps	Walsh, Mass.
Curtis	La Follette	Poindexter	Walsh, Mont.
Dial	Lenroot	Ransdell	Warren
Dillingham	McCumber	Sheppard	Watson, Ga.
Fletcher	McKellar	Shields	Watson, Ind.
France	McLean	Shortridge	Weller
Gooding	McNary	Simmons	Willis
Harreld	Moses	Smith

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-three Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, on August 20, 1921, Senator Penrose, as chairman of the Committee on Finance, reported from that committee the bill (S. 2135) to enable the refunding of obligations of foreign Governments owing to the United States of America, and for other purposes. That bill was discussed for a considerable time, and probably all of the objections that could be made were raised at that time. The bill did not pass.

In the meantime, to meet many of the objections that were raised, another bill was introduced in the House for the same purpose, but containing many modifications. That bill, with some amendments, has been reported favorably by the present Senate Committee on Finance.

I think it proper at this time to show the differences between the previous bill, which was discussed in the Senate for a considerable time, and the present bill. I think that much of the discussion on the old bill can be eliminated, because the provisions upon which the discussion arose have been eliminated from the present measure. I shall, therefore, briefly designate the principal differences between the two bills.

In the first bill the entire matter of the settlement of the foreign debts was given to the Secretary of the Treasury, with almost unlimited authority. Serious objections were made to this on the ground that no one man should be vested with such extensive authority in the settlements of debts amounting to more than $10,000,000,000. Equally earnest objections were made to the provisions of that bill which allowed the Secretary, or which did not prevent the Secretary from accepting bonds, especially from Germany, in lieu of those of Great Britain, France, or Italy, and there was a widespread fear throughout the country, growing, undoubtedly, out of the discussion in the press, that this Government would accept German bonds for those of other countries.

Another serious objection was that there was no limit to the time which the Secretary might give as to the date of the maturity of the obligations which we would receive for the indebtedness due from the foreign Governments.

Another objection was that there was no limitation as to the rate of interest that should be agreed upon between this Government and the debtor nations.

To meet these objections a new bill was prepared, which provides for a commission of five persons, one of whom shall be the Secretary of the Treasury, the other four to be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Therefore, the objection that we were placing too much power in the hands of a single person in the matter of a settlement of this great indebtedness has been eliminated. We have also provided that the Senate shall pass judgment upon the qualifications of any person presented to become a member of this commission.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, would it interrupt the Senator if I should ask a question at this point?

Mr. McCUMBER. Not at all.

Mr. KING. I believe the bill provides for a commission of four in addition to the Secretary of the Treasury?

Mr. McCUMBER. It does.

Mr. KING. Obviously the work of the commission will call for coordinated and integrated action, practical unanimity. What is the necessity of having four? It seems to me that two independent persons outside of the Treasury Department, who with the Secretary of the Treasury would be charged with the execution of the powers conferred by the act, would be sufficient.

Mr. McCUMBER. Finally, the President of the United States is the arbiter in the matter. In other words, the action they take must be passed upon by the President of the United States, so that we practically have another one added. But the reason for making it four might be as obvious as the reason for making it three. The purpose was to avoid the criticism which was urged against placing a matter of such vital importance in the hands of a single individual, and therefore it was thought better to make it five. It might have been made two or three or four.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will pardon me, that argument does not address itself very forcefully to me.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yet it was a very earnest argument made on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. KING. It becomes necessary to assemble certain data with respect to the condition of the debtor nations. These data have been provided, or substantially so. It means negotiations with those nations with a view to agreeing upon certain terms, and of course those negotiations must be based upon information which we possess. So it comes back to the proposition which I suggested a moment ago, that it only contemplates action by a small body of men, and, as the Senator stated, that very question in the final analysis is to be determined by the President of the United States himself. It seems to me three men could assemble this information just as well as five men, and that three men could conduct the negotiations just as well as five, indeed a little better. It is a case which essentially calls for the exercise of discretion and authority and power by a limited number of men.

Mr. McCUMBER. I am perfectly free to say that I think one man could have done it just as well. The Secretary of the Treasury, with his experts, I think, could have settled the matter satisfactorily for and on behalf of the American people. But there was such a strong and earnest objection made to having one man pass judgment upon this matter that for the very purpose of avoiding that criticism provision was made and a new bill introduced providing for a commission of five members.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. To guard against any danger from the appointive power, those four must be confirmed by the Senate. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Will the Senator be so kind as to advise the Senate what became of the negotiations that have continued for some time between the officers of the Treasury Department and other Governments, particularly the British Government, concerning the adjustment and, we might say, the funding of these obligations?

Mr. McCUMBER. For a long time, according to my information, there have been no negotiations because the negotiators came to the conclusion that with the law as it now stands the Secretary could not grant an extension of time beyond that which was provided in the present law, and that the provisions of existing law are too limited to afford a satisfactory basis for the complicated refunding operations involved. Therefore, all matters of negotiation were held in abeyance pending the legislative authority which was thought necessary on the part of the present administration for the proper refunding of the foreign debt.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Has the Senator from North Dakota investigated the record so as to know and to be able to state when the negotiations were dropped?

Mr. McCUMBER. I have invested the record and we have the testimony. I should have to refer back to the testimony of the Secretary of the Treasury in order to answer the Senator's question, and I have not that testimony before me just at the present time; but undoubtedly before we get through with the argument all of that matter will be presented.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Can the Senator state whether or not those negotiations were discontinued prior to the advent of the present administration?

Mr. McCUMBER. They were.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. And they have not been resumed since that time?

Mr. McCUMBER. It is my understanding that they have not been.

Mr. President, the new bill also provides that no portion of the debt of any country may be released except upon payment. It also provides that the bonds of one country may not be received in payment of the debts which are due from another country.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, from what bill is the Senator from North Dakota reading?

Mr. McCUMBER. I am reading from Order of Business 408, being House bill 8762.

Mr. McKELLAR. Then I have the wrong bill.

Mr. McCUMBER. Again, the present bill, differing from the first bill which was introduced, prohibits the commission from accepting a rate of interest from any country lower than that provided by existing law. The existing law, as Senators well understand, provides that the bonds that shall be taken shall not bear a rate of interest less than the highest rate which this Government provides in any of its bonds out of the proceeds of which the loans were made.

These, Mr. President, are the essential differences between the two bills. I have stated that the bill provided that the interest rate should not be less than that provided by law. May I correct that statement? The bill as reported leaves that matter to the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, but the committee will present another amendment, which will restrict the right of the commission to accept less than the rate of interest provided by law.

What authority other than the authority which they now have under existing law is left to the discretion of the commission.

First, they have the right to fund past due interest into bonds, either short time or long time, provided, of course, that the sum can not be collected in cash.

Second, they have the right to fund into national bonds obligations which are held by the United States Grain Corporation. Those are now simply demand obligations.

Third, they have the authority to fund obligations received from the War and Navy Departments for surplus Army and Navy materials sold to foreign countries. Practically all of those are simply demand obligations at the present time. They may fund them into long-time bonds, allowing such length of time as in their discretion should be allowed, not longer than 25 years.

Fourth, they have the right to fund into bonds moneys which have been advanced by the American Relief Association for which we simply hold the obligations of foreign countries, practically all of which are demand obligations.

Fifth, they have the right to arrange with different countries, according to their financial conditions, the date on which interest is to be paid.

I presume that that provision is practically the only provision in the whole bill upon which the members of the Committee on Finance were at all in serious disagreement, and it does not entirely meet the request of the Secretary of the Treasury. He thought he ought to have the right not only to fix the time at which the bonds should begin to bear a rate of interest, but, in addition to that, that he should have the right to fix the rate of interest which he thought would be for the best interests of the American people. Of course, he has asserted over and over again that what he really expected to do was as to the important countries, those that were regarded as still solvent, to obtain an interest rate of about 5 per cent; and he thought he would be able to do that; and, furthermore, that some of the countries would be able to pay the interest semiannually and to make the first payment within six months after the issuance of the bonds, but that he might not be able to make such an agreement with all of the countries, though the commission would attempt to do the very best they could in that respect.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, would not the commission under this bill have the right to defer the interest payments as they might see fit?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly; that, as I have said, is the only question of difference, and I will explain that, and we shall see what a difficult question it is. I can answer that, perhaps, just as well now as at any other time.

We have now held these demand obligations ever since the money was loaned to the foreign Governments. With the exception of the interest payments shown on page 8 of the committee report, no interest has been paid by the foreign Governments. Shortly after the close of the war the then administration agreed to allow the payment of interest to be held in abeyance; in other words, agreed that the United States would not press the interest for some two or three years.

A great deal of criticism has been made, and probably more has been made upon this side of the Chamber than upon the other, against the action of the Wilson administration in granting that extension. I do not think, taking everything into consideration, that the criticism is well founded in all respects. I try to be fair in all matters of that kind. I do not think there is anything in the law that allowed the Secretary of the Treasury or that administration or would allow any other administration to extend the time of the payment of the interest; but I realize that there were a great many unsettled questions. For instance, there were counterclaims of one country against another for money advanced and services performed, and until there was a settlement of those claims we could not tell just exactly how much we were owing Great Britain and France and Italy, and how much Italy, France, and Great Britain were owing us on unsettled accounts. My understanding is that the real basis of the extension of time was that those accounts were unsettled, and it was agreed that the matter might lie in abeyance until it was ascertained just how those accounts stood. So, without going into the question of whether the administration really had the legal authority to do so, I desire to say that it was a time when we were at war and when those accounts remained to be settled. Therefore, I can not find it in my heart to criticise the administration for saying to the debtor countries, "We will hold the matter in abeyance for two or three years"—for whatever time they thought was necessary—"in order that the accounts between the different nations may be settled."

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from North Dakota if that time has expired?

Mr. McCUMBER. If we consider that the extension was to be for two years, it has expired; but the request was for an extension of two or three years, and the three years' time has not expired; but if an extension of three years was granted, it has very nearly expired.

Mr. McKELLAR. Under those circumstances why should we not, allowing the full limit of three years, deal with the matter, and say that the commission shall have the right to defer interest up until that time which we have promised—that is, until the expiration of the full three years, if necessary—but that thereafter the interest shall be collected?

Mr. McCUMBER. I understand the Senator's question, and I can answer it thoroughly. Before we get through I will state why the Secretary of the Treasury will need to grant extra time to some of the countries before the payment of the interest is demanded.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let me ask the Senator another question: Suppose the commission were to extend the time for the payment of the interest for 5 years or 10 years or 15 years or even 20 years, they would have the right to do that, would they not?

Mr. McCUMBER. There is no time limit fixed in the bill to which the payment of the interest may be extended.

Mr. McKELLAR. That was my understanding.

Mr. McCUMBER. The first question which we must determine is whether or not the commission shall have authority to extend the time in which the interest may begin to be paid. If once we concede that we ought to give the commission that authority, then should we place a limitation upon that authority? If so, what shall the limitation be? If we say in the law that it shall be three years or four years or five years, then every nation which owes us a penny will press us for an extension for five years. If a little nation like Czechoslovakia can not begin to pay interest for five years, Great Britain and France and other nations will ask for the longest time which may be allowed under the bill.

I assume that a commission will be appointed and that the members of the commission will be Americans; I assume that they will not receive confirmation at the hands of the Senate of the United States unless they are possessed of the patriotism and intelligence necessary to settle that matter, and to settle it to the best interests of the United States, and to settle it with each country according to the condition of that country. If we are to place a limit as to when the payment of interest is to begin and when it is to end, we shall make it exceedingly embarrassing for the commission in dealing with the several countries, for the reason which I have expressed, that all those countries will ask for the same treatment.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, when the Senator from North Dakota says that authority is to be given to the commission to fix the date upon which nations shall begin to pay their interest, does he refer merely to the payment of interest, or does he mean that the commission shall have the right to fix the date from which the interest shall begin to run?

Mr. McCUMBER. I think the only serious question is as to when the payment of interest shall begin. If we provide in the bill that the interest shall be paid semiannually, for instance, and that it shall not be less than 5 per cent or its equivalent, and then, if we reach an agreement and accept the bonds of France or of Italy a month from now, then seven months from now the first interest on the debt becomes due. If any of these countries fail to pay, they will have shown to the world that they are absolutely bankrupt and in default in their debt and they will thereby injure their credit.

Mr. HITCHCOCK rose.

Mr. McCUMBER. Let me make that clear.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator from North Dakota has not quite gotten my idea.

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not think that any country will agree to put itself in a position where it must default on the payment of its bonded obligations.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I ask the Senator this question: Is there any question whether or not the interest on these obligations began to run when the debts were incurred?

Mr. McCUMBER. Not the slightest.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. So that the Secretary of the Treasury or the commission, then, is not to be given any authority to defer the date upon which the interest shall begin to run? Is the answer to that question yes or no?

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not understand exactly what the Senator means. Interest is accruing all the time. Neither the Secretary nor the commission can yield one penny of the interest.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. So that the power which it is proposed to give the commission is the power to defer the date upon which the bonds shall mature?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; and when the first interest shall begin to be paid upon the bonds.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Let me ask another question. At the present time we hold demand obligations and no interest substantially is being paid?

Mr. McCUMBER. No.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. What reason, then, is there that we should at this time change the form of the contract so long as the nations are not ready even to begin payment of the interest or the principal?

Mr. McCUMBER. We want, Mr. President, from every one of those countries bonds which are negotiable in form, bearing a definite rate of interest, the principal of which is due at a definite date, and the interest on which shall begin at a definite date, bonds that we may use and sell. I may have a debtor owing me $1,000 upon an open account. I say to that debtor, "Put it in the form of a note bearing 6 per cent interest, due on a certain date, and I can use it in the bank or elsewhere; I shall then know definitely under your signature what you are owing me, what interest you are to pay, and if I desire to dispose of the note I may dispose of it."

Mr. HITCHCOCK. But I understand that the Senator is talking about a condition in which these nations are not yet ready to say that they can begin the payment of interest. If that is so, why place in the hands of any commission the power to do a thing that is still in the future?

Mr. McCUMBER. Because, Mr. President, some of these nations will begin the payment of interest six months after the bond is issued. Some of them can not do it, and therefore we should not fix by law that all must do it. If we grant further time, fix a time by law; then every one of them will ask for the privilege, and we do not want to invite them to ask for the privilege.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Then the fact is that any nation which can begin the payment of interest now, or six months from now, can do so on the existing demand obligations, and the obligations are in such shape that the Secretary of the Treasury can take the interest at any time, and it simply depends upon their ability to pay. Then why undertake to vest these extraordinary powers in the hands of a commission so far in advance?

Mr. McCUMBER. Then the Senator would leave those matters standing just as they are, and let the Secretary collect the interest if he can, and if they do not see fit let the matters remain in abeyance. Their agreement, however, when we loaned them the money, was that they would put the loan into bonds that would become due at the same time and bear the same rate of interest or the highest rate of interest that we might pay upon our bonds issued during the war. What we are seeking to do now is to carry that into effect, with the modification that where we find nations that can not do it, and where we find those that, while they will be able to do it, may have to have an extension upon the matter of the accumulated interest, we may be in a position to accept that.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, it seems to me that as the thing stands to-day, with these demand obligations in the Treasury, the matter is in the hands of the United States, and that what it is proposed to do now is to change the law, to take it out of the hands of the United States, which holds demand obligations and which can demand the interest at any time, and we are going to place an enormous discretionary power in the hands of a little commission appointed by the President, practically, and allow that commission to modify the rights and the benefits that the United States now holds.

Mr. McCUMBER. No, Mr. President.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The only benefit I can see is that we might secure bonds which would be negotiable and salable; and I ask the Senator whether it is the purpose of the Treasury Department to get such bonds and market them?

Mr. McCUMBER. The first thing is to get the bonds, and when we get the negotiable instruments that we can market we will do with them just whatever we see fit and whatever the situation at that time requires. Of course, the Secretary would have no right to sell those bonds unless an act of Congress should be passed giving him that right, and, therefore, what we shall do with the bonds in the future is to be determined by a future Congress. Let us get the bonds first; let us settle our accounts; let us put them into interest-bearing obligations in which the interest is due on certain dates and the bonds will become due at a certain time and then use those bonds as we see fit.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator says that some of these nations are not able to meet the obligations which they have entered into with the United States, and that others are. Why not, then, let the Secretary of the Treasury carry out the law that now exists, and take from the nations that are able to meet their obligations the bonds which are called for by the law?

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. McCUMBER. I will answer the Senator's question. I can answer only one at a time, but I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. NELSON. I want to suggest to the Senator from Nebraska—and I have had occasion to look into it—that some of these loans were made to, and some of these obligations were obtained from, no regular governments. They were simply temporary organizations that had been established during the war. We made loans to them, and got the obligations of such governments as they had at that time. Those de facto governments have now been superseded by regular governments; and it is very important, instead of having obligations from those temporary military governments, you might say, that we have them now from regularly organized governments. Some of these obligations are of that character.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I quite understand that, and I am not talking about those. I am asking the chairman of the committee now, if there are governments that are able to carry out their obligations under existing law, why they are not carried out by the Secretary of the Treasury under the powers that he holds?

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not think there is a Government that is owing us that could pay its back interest to-day.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; and then I will go on, after I have yielded this once.

Mr. McKELLAR. Very well. With the exception of this interest matter, it seems to me that this bill is in a thousand times better shape than it was when it came to the Senate. I think the Senate committee has improved it very much. The question I desire to ask about the matter is this:

Suppose, for instance, we take the bonds of Italy for the amount that Italy owes us, with interest-bearing coupons, as is provided here, at the rate of interest that is fixed under the present statute, as provided in this bill. Even after we have taken those bonds, with the interest coupons attached, this commission will still have the right to defer the interest if that Government makes an agreement with it.

Mr. McCUMBER. No.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will just read to the Senator what the bill says and call his attention to this language, because, judging from what the Senator has stated, that is not the intention of the bill, and I think it is very proper that it should not be the intention of the bill. It says—I am reading on page 1—

> Is hereby authorized to refund or convert, and to extend the time of payment of the principal or the interest, or both, of any obligation of any foreign Government now owing to the United States of America, or any obligation of any foreign Government hereafter received by the United States of America.

Manifestly, under the broad power given there, even after bonds with interest coupons attached have been given, this commission would have the right to defer that interest. I take it, from what the Senator has said, that that is not the purpose of the committee, and I hope it was not the purpose of the committee; and it seems to me that eventuality ought to be guarded against.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think when the Senator reads the whole bill together he will find that after they have received the bond of one of these foreign Governments there will be then no right to make a different contract concerning that bond. It becomes then the property of the United States. Their right to change that bond has been exhausted in securing it, and the moment it is secured it becomes the property of the United States. There would be no authority upon the part of the commission to modify it any more than there would be such an authority upon my part in acting as the Senator's agent in securing a note for him. While I might have the authority to fix the rate of interest and to determine when the first interest should become due, the moment that I have received the note I have exhausted my authority upon it. It then becomes the Senator's note, and I have no further authority with reference to the interest or the principal.

Mr. McKELLAR. I dislike to interrupt again; the Senator has been very kind about allowing interruptions for information; but the Senator can easily see that a different construction can be placed on this language.

Mr. McCUMBER. If there is any possibility of any construction whereby, after the commission has made arrangements for the bonds, it could change those bonds or make a different arrangement with reference to the interest than that provided in the bonds themselves, I am perfectly willing and anxious to have it corrected, because there can be no purpose to grant any such authority.

Mr. McKELLAR. Very well. That will be entirely satisfactory. I hope the Senator will look over that language to-night, or at some time that may be convenient, and see if we can not agree on language that will prevent it.

Mr. McCUMBER. I shall be glad to confer with the Senator. I do not want any possible question to exist in that respect.

Now, let us look into the question of the necessity for special authority; and I want the Senator's attention to this.

The act of April 24, 1917, providing for credits to foreign countries, authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury—> to purchase, at par, from such foreign Governments * * * their obligations hereafter issued, bearing the same rate of interest and containing in their essentials the same terms and conditions as those of the United States issued under authority of this act.

I leave out a little, now.

Mr. KING. Is that the April law or the September law?

Mr. McCUMBER. That is the April law.

> But such arrangements shall provide that if any of the bonds of the United States issued and used for the purchase of such foreign obligations shall thereafter be converted into other bonds of the United States bearing a higher rate of interest than 3½ per cent per annum * * *, then, and in that event the obligations of such foreign Governments held by the United States shall be, by such foreign Governments, converted in like manner and extent into obligations bearing the same rate of interest as the bonds of the United States issued under the provisions of section 5 of this act.

That is the act of April 24, 1917.

By the act of September 24, 1917, we made a little change in that provision, and I will read a portion of that act.

This act first provides for credits similar to those granted in the preceding law, then it proceeds:

The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to purchase, at par, from such foreign Governments respectively their several obligations hereafter issued, bearing such rate or rates of interest, maturing at such date or dates, not later than the bonds of the United States then last issued under the authority of this act, or of such act approved April 24, 1917, and containing such terms and conditions as the Secretary of the Treasury may from time to time determine * * * and any such obligations shall contain such provisions as the Secretary of the Treasury may from time to time determine for the conversion of a proportionate part of such obligations into obligations bearing a higher rate of interest if bonds of the United States issued under authority of this act shall be converted into other bonds of the United States bearing a higher rate of interest; but the rate of interest in such foreign obligations issued upon such conversion shall not be less than the highest rate of interest borne by such bonds of the United States.

The fair construction of the act of April 24, 1917, is that while the bonds that will be accepted shall bear a higher rate of interest than 3½ per cent if we subsequently issue bonds at a higher rate, the foreign bonds issued to cover such loans shall mature at the same time as the first Liberty bonds. The other laws state that the bonds given shall mature not later than the date fixed by the last bonds; so there is a difference between the first law and the second law in that respect.

The first Liberty bonds become due in 1947, with a call privilege in 1932. The fourth Liberty bonds become due in 1938, with a previous call provision. All of these matters must be taken into consideration in the matter of the settlement under the present law. The purpose now is to secure a set of bonds from each country maturing at such time as the countries may be able to meet them, because we do not want any of them to default in the payment of their principal or interest.

It has been asserted, I think, by some that the past-due interest can be funded without any law into new bonds. I do not think that is the case. I can not give the law any such construction, and I think the Secretary of the Treasury and the law department of the Treasury Department agree with my construction. I do not think the other position can be supported from the laws themselves.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, is it not a fact that the obligations signed by these Governments which we have accepted contain the distinct provision that the accrued interest may be converted into bonds bearing the same rate of interest?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; but even if that were done there is no authority on the part of the Secretary of the Treasury to receive the bonds. Even though they may have made an arrangement in these I O U's that they might be so converted, the law says that they shall pay interest. It says that the interest shall be the same as that provided in our bonds, and shall be paid at the same time. With that law upon our statute books the moment interest becomes due it belongs to the Government of the United States, and the Secretary of the Treasury has not any authority on earth either to excuse that interest or to fix a payment different from that provided in the law itself.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. Just a moment. If he could do it upon the first year's interest, he could do likewise on the second year's interest, and the third, and the fourth, and the twentieth. He could grant the authority on any year's interest that might run over; but there is no such authority in the law itself.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. Just a minute. All that the Secretary asks is that he be given the authority to fund this past-due interest, the accumulated interest, into new bonds, either adding it to the principal or as a separate principal, due at a separate time.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I understood the Senator to say that the Treasury Department never had construed the law in such a way as to permit the acceptance of bonds for interest. I cited the fact that the Treasury Department at the time evidently put that construction upon the law.

Mr. McCUMBER. What Secretary of the Treasury did that?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Secretary of the Treasury then existing when these obligations were taken, because they distinctly provide that when the bonds are issued, and these demand obligations are taken up, additional bonds covering the interest that is remaining unpaid may be accepted at 5 per cent interest; so it is evident that that was the construction placed upon the law at that time.

Mr. McCUMBER. Let me ask the Senator if he believes that the Secretary had the right to extend the time of the payment of interest in a manner differing from that which the law provided? I am not going to quarrel with the Senator. Will the Senator answer that question?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. My question——

Mr. McCUMBER. Never mind; I am not going to quarrel with the Senator. Will he answer my question?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Any creditor has the right, when there is interest in default, to accept the interest that may be tendered and to give the necessary extension for that purpose. The fact——

Mr. McCUMBER. Oh, no; neither the Secretary nor anyone else has a right to change the law.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The fact is——

Mr. McCUMBER. What I am asking the Senator is, Does the law provide that the interest shall be paid at certain times; and if it does so provide, has the Secretary the right to extend the time?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am citing the Senator——

Mr. McCUMBER. Will the Senator answer that question? The Senator is putting it to me. Let me put it back to him, so that I may get his own view. He is evidently presenting to me the point as to whether I agree with that Secretary's action at least, and I am not forced to that. I agree with what the law says. Does the Senator agree that the law allows the Secretary to change the date at which the interest shall become due?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I trust the Senator will now permit me to make a statement or two.

Mr. McCUMBER. I thought I had yielded to the Senator.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator is not giving me the opportunity to fully answer him.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator is speaking in my time, and I am asking him a question. He asked me a direct question and I gave him a direct answer. Will the Senator kindly answer me directly whether he himself, under the law as he construes it, believes that the Secretary of the Treasury has the right to extend the date of the payment of interest?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I have not any doubt that if the Secretary of the Treasury lacked any power he could get it by applying to Congress or he could make an arrangement with Great Britain or any other country and refer it here for ratification.

Mr. McCUMBER. Ah, that is a different proposition.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. But here is the question I put to the Senator. The Senator said the Treasury Department had not so construed the law. I have in my hand here the form of certificate or obligation which we took from those countries at the time——

Mr. McCUMBER. I did not say that the department had not so construed the law.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator does not allow me to finish my sentence.

Mr. McCUMBER. I said the Secretary of the Treasury, the department as it is now constituted, does not construe the law as granting them any authority to extend it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That may be, but I am drawing the Senator's attention to the fact.

Mr. McCUMBER. I know what is the fact.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The obligations of those countries which we hold contain in themselves a statement, which was drawn up and agreed to between the countries at the time, undoubtedly with legal assistance, and that statement provides that for any interest that is delinquent bonds may be issued bearing the same rate of interest as applies to the principal. In view of that fact, why not carry out that obligation which now exists?

Mr. McCUMBER. I will answer the Senator, and I will answer him directly. Why not carry it out, he asks? I say, because it is contrary to law. That is the reason why we should not carry it out. If we are going to carry out any such provision let us give the Secretary of the Treasury the law under which to do it, and let him act under the law and not contrary to the law. I think that is a direct answer and a conclusive answer to the Senator's question.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an interruption?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. KING. I am not certain that I have understood the positions of the Senators from Nebraska and North Dakota. Let me inquire: Certain certificates of indebtedness were given by the Governments to whom the United States extended credits during the war. These certificates were the obligations of the debtor nations and evidenced the respective amounts of their indebtedness and constituted promises to pay. Now, may I inquire whether in the refunding program, which is to be worked out, can there be any objection to the adoption of a plan which calls for the payment of accumulated interest provided for in the certificates of indebtedness, and adding the same to the principal and embracing the aggregate indebtedness in bonds to be issued by the debtor nations?

Mr. McCUMBER. Shall I now answer the Senator's question?

Mr. KING. If the Senator pleases.

Mr. McCUMBER. I would like to answer it in simple language which will illustrate the matter so that I think we will all understand it. Suppose the Senator was a creditor and that he had a dozen or fifteen debtors, one-half of them or one-third of them on the verge of bankruptcy and the other two-thirds practically bankrupt. Suppose he wanted to get his debt from every one of them paid in full and wanted to get it paid in the very best possible time. Suppose that while he had obligations that were due and past due from some of them, the condition of each debtor was such that he would feel that he could not simply continue the old obligations, even in the manner in which they were willing to grant them at that time, but that there must be time extended to this one or that one; there must be an arrangement made so that we could have one country, when it pays its debt to the other, pay it to this country, or, in the case I have illustrated, if the debtor A is owing another one of the debtors B, and the debtor B is owing the Senator, a plan that they can so arrange their times of credit and the notes which each will take from the other that each one may, according to its ability, pay what it can upon the obligations.

Let me apply it to the countries in this way. We have a demand against Great Britain. We have a demand against France. We have a demand against Italy. Now, remember that we loaned practically $9,500,000,000 in the first instance. I say loaned; we did not entirely loan it in one respect. We gave them credit.

Mr. KING. We sold them our products at high prices.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; and we made a mighty good profit out of that credit. I can assure the Senator of that. We gave that credit for about $10,000,000,000. Great Britain turned right around and loaned $9,500,000,000 to her allies. France loaned about $3,000,000,000 to her allies. Great Britain owes the United States. France owes Great Britain. Italy owes France and Great Britain and the United States at the same time.

Now, for instance, we press France. Great Britain presses her claim against France at the same time. Immediately there is a contest as to which is going to be the preferred creditor nation. If France gives an obligation she will want to know what Italy will do with reference to the obligations due from her to France. When Great Britain finally puts her immense indebtedness into an obligation she would like to have it due at some relation of time in which she may get from her debtors the same amount of money or interest that it may be necessary to pay us.

Therefore, in order to allow each of these creditors and the United States with them to get together and get the very best conditions, and, with the present demoralized bankrupt condition of Europe, allow them to make the very best terms they can, we will have to call them all in together. We can not deal with one nation absolutely independently of the others.

There ought to be a discretion in the commission to be exercised in such manner that they can get an agreement between the other nations with reference to their debts and with reference to the payment of debts to us. When we ask France to pay us, France, who owes Great Britain just as much, will say, "Well, what time will Great Britain give me? When will she demand hers? How can I get something out of Italy, and when will Italy make her debt due to me?" There are questions on which you as a creditor would deal with your debtors if they were in the condition that Europe is in to-day. We should give the commission authority to deal in the same way with those nations and to protect their credit just as much as we possibly can. It would be to the Senator's interest in collecting from his debtor that he did not drive him into bankruptcy. It would be to the interest of the United States in dealing with all of these countries, when one is depending upon the other, that we take no step that will drive one of those nations into bankruptcy or compel them to default in their interest.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FERNALD in the chair). Does the Senator from North Dakota yield further to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. McCUMBER. With pleasure.

Mr. KING. If I may trespass further for a moment on the Senator's time, I agree with much of what the able Senator has said. In my opinion it would be not only ungenerous but exceedingly unwise and impolitic for the United States to force our allies into bankruptcy. The situation of Europe to-day is deplorable. Our allies in the Great War are bowing beneath very heavy burdens—burdens resulting from the World War into which they were forced. In their struggles for liberty and to save the world from a brutal militarism they were compelled to incur crushing obligations. They needed food and raw materials and other supplies and we sold to them enormous quantities of the value of billions of dollars. We loaned them no money; we extended to them credits, which they exhausted in the purchase at high prices of American products. They were fighting for the ideals and principles for which we fought when later we entered the war.

Some of the obligations due us are from States which we helped to establish. Poland, Czechoslovakia, and the new Jugo-Slav nation are some of the fruits of the war, and we in part are responsible for their existence. There is a moral obligation upon our part, if not a legal one, to aid these States which we helped to erect. If we choose to abandon them, we can not afford to crush them by a demand for an immediate payment of the amounts which we advanced to help them in their early struggles for existence. It would be cruel, indeed it would be cowardly, for the United States to adopt any course that would crush the States which this Republic helped to erect.

If I understand the Senator, I agree with the implications arising from his remarks that Great Britain and France and Italy and Belgium and other allied and associated nations fought for the ideals and principles for which we contend this Nation stands. They have made contribution to the cause of civilization. They have aided in the advancement of the ideals the principles of liberty espoused by this Republic. We can not afford to crush them or to adopt an oppressive or intolerant course which would constitute an impediment to their rehabilitation, politically and economically.

I agree with the Senator, if I understand his position, that in adjusting the indebtedness and in executing this refunding program there should be some latitude in order that the debtors may be brought together for consultation and conference, so that while the United States does not abate its claim or suffer injury, a policy may be agreed upon that will not be destructive of or injurious to our former allies—our former, and it is hoped our present and future, friends. A plan must be agreed upon with respect to the time and manner of payments that will not only not be harmful to Europe but indeed beneficial to it.

It is to the financial advantage of our country that peace and prosperity come to Europe. Europe's bankruptcy would prove of incalculable injury to this Nation. Not only would there be the loss of the billions owing the Government, but there would be billions lost owing to American bankers, business houses, and individuals. In these days, when there is so much talk of our domestic troubles and of our disturbed financial conditions and of depression in business and of millions without employment, a description of the tragic situation is always followed by a discussion of the economic and political conditions of Europe. We are beginning to see that without the rehabilitation of Europe our prosperity will be long deferred. The American people are beginning to perceive the intimate relations between the nations of the earth. They are learning that though seas divide us the world is in close relationship and that obstacles to the progress and prosperity and peace of any nation constitute impediments to the prosperity of other nations. We are linked to the world. We are a part of the world.

With more than $16,000,000,000 due from Europe to the United States Government and to nationals of our country, it would seem obvious that we can not adopt any course that will impair the economic strength now possessed by Europe or interpose obstacles to European revival. In a material way, to say nothing of the moral question involved, we are profoundly interested in Europe. We not only want payment sooner or later for what is due to America, but we want European peoples to be buyers of our surplus products. They must have strength to build their waste places and devasted lands and replenish their exhausted treasuries. Common business sense dictates a policy of forbearance and patience in dealing with this important question.

If I understand the Senator, I am in accord with many of the suggestions contained in his able plea for a wise and prudent policy in settling the obligations due the United States from European nations.

But returning to the question suggested a moment ago, as I construe the law, there is nothing to inhibit the United States in making settlement from treating deferred payments of interest as principal and adding the same to the principal. The amounts thus stated could be the basis of the bonds to be issued by the debtor nations which we are to accept.

Mr. McCUMBER. Under the present law?

Mr. KING. I am not sure as to that.

Mr. McCUMBER. I am sure that the Senator is not sure as to that.

Mr. KING. No. I will be entirely frank with the Senator. If I am not sure of a proposition, I will frankly confess it.

Mr. McCUMBER. I am certain of that.

Mr. KING. As a legal proposition there may be, indeed there is, very much in the position of the Senator that we need additional authority to convert the deferred payments of interest into bonded indebtedness.

Mr. McCUMBER. And also the other obligations that we took for the sale of property, and so forth.

Mr. KING. Yes. But if I understand the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], for whose judgment I entertain such a high regard, and whose leadership I accepted with so much satisfaction—I am not quite in accord with his position. I am not willing to allow the status quo to be maintained. I think it is unfair to Europe. I think it is unfair to the United States. The nations of Europe who are indebted to us are entitled to know now, or as soon as possible, what our exactions will be. They have to formulate their budgets. They have to rearrange their international credits among themselves; and their course depends upon our course. Great Britain can not tell what she will do with France, nor France with Italy, until they know what we will do with them.

I think it is important that we put into proper form the evidences of indebtedness, the amounts due the United States, so that our debtors may know exactly what they owe us when they have to pay it, and the rate of interest which is to be paid. Therefore, I am in favor of some refunding bill. I am not willing to rely upon the obligations that are now existing. They ought to be refunded. France, Italy, and the other nations of Europe who owe us ought to know exactly what they owe us and the form of obligations which they must assume.

I thank the Senator for his courtesy.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think I could carry the Senator's argument a little further to show the necessity of it. I will take, for instance, if he desires, France, who is now indebted, I believe, in the sum of $51,000,000,000. That is the national indebtedness of a little country with about one-third the population of the United States and with perhaps not more than one-tenth the resources of the United States. If we feel the burden of this mighty obligation upon us of carrying our indebtedness of some $23,000,000,000, how must the French people feel in carrying the indebtedness of $51,000,000,000, with their country devastated; and how must Great Britain feel carrying $37,000,000,000, with a population about one-third that of the United States, and with about one-tenth of her male population down in their graves?

I agree with the Senator from Utah. We either fought the war for humanity's sake or we did not. If we fought it for the benefit of humanity and the benefit of the world, then let us not forget for one single moment that these other nations had three years of hell before we got into it, and they suffered beyond expression. That being the case, for God's sake let us not attempt to play the rôle of Shylock toward our allies. We want every dollar, we want it as soon as they can pay it, and I am certain we will get it as soon as they can possibly pay it. But in the meantime let us exercise at least the generosity that a man would grant to his friend who was in trouble in the payment of a debt.

I agree entirely with the Senator from Utah as to what we want to accomplish. All that we are asking is that we settle these obligations in a manner that five patriotic American citizens, the best that can be selected in the United States, can agree upon after they have weighed every possible question. What objection can there be to that? Why tie them down upon the rate of interest that may be charged this one or that one?

Let us take France. We come to France and say, within a month after this commission is appointed, "We want your bonds for everything that you are owing us." France says, "I will give you those bonds. I intend to pay my debts." We say, "We want semiannual interest payments." Suppose she answers, "I can not pay the interest in six months. I have to have a little breathing time after this awful struggle through which I have just passed before I can get my fiscal matters in such shape that I can pay the first interest."

We answer that, "No, if you can not pay it, of course, you can not, and we will not press you, but we want you to agree to pay the first interest in six months." "Ah, but," she says, "when I default in that interest my credit will be ruined; I can not afford to do it; give me two years before you charge me the first interest. I will make the interest big enough so that it will take care of the interest which will be accruing during those two years, but I can not pay it within that time, and if I default in the payment I shall have ruined the credit of my country." I should not want to exact that of France if the conditions were as outlined. I know as to Czechoslovakia that she could not pay within one year or two years or even within three years; I am positive she could not.

Mr. KING. The same is true as to Poland.

Mr. McCUMBER. But if we put into the bill that we shall grant any country three years, then Great Britain and France and Italy and all of the other countries will ask for the three years extension. Therefore, I do not want to fix that time because we want to begin to get interest from the country that will be able to pay it at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I wish to ask the Senator a few questions in order to ascertain whether I understand his idea as to just what this bill proposes to accomplish. I shall be very brief. First, it provides that the commission may take bonds for the principal of the debt.

Mr. McCUMBER. That they may refund the principal into long-term bonds.

Mr. McKELLAR. They may refund the principal into long-time bonds to mature not later than 1947?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. In the second place, the bill requires bonds to be taken for the past due interest?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. And in the next place it permits the commission to take bonds for such sums as are due us for supplies furnished by the Army or the Navy?

Mr. McCUMBER. It permits those debts to be funded into long-time bonds.

Mr. McKELLAR. And so as to the Food Administration and some other agencies which loaned foreign Governments money, and for which we have only their "I O U's."

In addition to that, the bill provides that the interest rate shall be precisely the same as the interest rate now provided by law on the obligations of the United States from the proceeds of which the loans were made to foreign Governments?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. Then, there is no change in that respect?

Mr. McCUMBER. The provision is that the interest rates shall not be less than the rates now provided by law.

Mr. McKELLAR. I presume the rates will be the same?

Mr. McCUMBER. In some instances they may be greater.

Mr. McKELLAR. The next proposition, as I understand, is that the bonds are to run for exactly the same length of time as provided in the present bond act; that is, they can not go beyond 1947.

Mr. McCUMBER. No.

Mr. McKELLAR. And finally the only discretion which is proposed to be given to the commission is that they may extend the time when the interest payments shall begin; but after they shall have begun the commission shall not have the power to extend the time for the payment of either the principal or interest beyond the dates fixed. If the Senator's bill so provides it is much better than the House bill.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is just exactly what the bill does provide.

I will give one instance where I think the authority might be exercised not to take the same rate of interest which is provided in the bond acts, but where it would be to the advantage of this country to take a higher rate of interest and absorb the past due interest into a higher rate of interest. I do not say that such an occasion will ever arise, but I can imagine a condition in which the commission might find it to the advantage of the United States to have some of the past due indebtedness included as additional interest, provided a stipulation were contained in the bonds that they would have to run to a time which would absorb the deferred interest; in other words, the bonds could not be so drawn as to allow the deferred interest to be included in a higher rate, with the privilege of taking up the bonds the next year, but that they would have to run without that privilege for the number of years which would be necessary to absorb the deferred interest.

Suppose it should be deemed advisable to utilize the bonds of a given country to take care of payments under a soldiers' compensation law or to meet the exigencies of the Government at any time; it would be to our interest to sell those bonds. The French bonds, without any guaranty, sold on a basis of 8 per cent interest. It might be possible that if some of the British bonds, for instance, one or two or three billions of them, should bear an interest, say, of 8 per cent, which would take care of the past due interest, with a provision that they would have to run a length of time sufficient to cover the deferred interest, we could dispose of those bonds on the market without even the guaranty of the Government, the same as France disposed of her bonds bearing a high rate of interest without any guaranty other than the French credit. I do not say that there would ever be an occasion for that, but I can appreciate that such an occasion might arise when it would be to our interest to follow that course.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield.

Mr. LENROOT. Suppose that course should be followed in a given case. If this bill gives any authority to take that course, which I do not believe, but assuming that it does, in that event, so far as the Government is concerned and so far as the people of the United States are concerned, it would be equivalent to a cancellation of the interest now due, would it not?

Mr. McCUMBER. No.

Mr. LENROOT. If we sold those bonds at par so that the person who purchased them would get the 8 per cent, how would the Government obtain the deferred interest?

Mr. McCUMBER. If we guaranteed the bonds, of course, they could be sold for a premium equivalent to the interest. I do not say that an occasion of that kind would arise, but I only say that there might be a condition in which it would be better to take a higher rate of interest and even to absorb some of the interest provided the Government was protected. I do not know whether the course which I have suggested would be a profitable one.

Mr. LENROOT. Is it the Senator's construction that the bill in its present form would authorize the commission to refund merely the original principal, and then, by a higher rate of interest, to take care of the interest now due?

Mr. McCUMBER. I am doubtful if it would be subject to that construction.

Mr. LENROOT. I am very frank to say that I do not believe it is, but if there is any doubt about it I think it ought to be cleared up.

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not think there will be any occasion for doing what I have intimated might be done, but I am simply speaking of it in connection with the discretionary power.

Mr. LENROOT. If the Senator will yield once more, I desire to ask, assuming what he thinks might be the construction is correct, does the Senator think, as a matter of policy, that there should be any power conferred upon the commission that would be equivalent, so far as the people of the United States are concerned or the Government of the United States is concerned, to a cancellation of the interest now due?

Mr. McCUMBER. No matter what I myself might believe, there is no authority under the bill as it is now drawn to cancel one penny of interest or principal or to make any kind of contract that could operate in such manner as to cancel it.

Mr. LENROOT. That is what I had supposed.

Mr. McCUMBER. I merely referred to the matter suggested to indicate that occasion might arise in connection with fixing the rate of interest, if such an arrangement could be made, when it might be to the benefit of the United States to allow some discretion on the part of the commission.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, I have not interrupted him up to this time because I prefer to wait until he concludes; but the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] has raised a question which I think is the serious question in connection with this whole transaction. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from North Dakota to the fact that in the committee the very question which the Senator from Wisconsin has propounded was the subject of discussion. In connection with the hearing given to the Secretary of the Treasury, it was brought to his attention that certain newspapers in this country had given currency to the idea that if the Secretary had the power to extend the interest, without any limitation on that power, he would have the right to take bonds for the principal and to provide a rate of interest which during the life of the bonds would be sufficiently high to cover the normal rate of 5 per cent as well as the interest which has already accumulated or the interest which may be extended.

The Secretary was asked the question if serious consideration had been given to that suggestion, and it was pointed out to him at the time that if he took bonds from our foreign debtors in the amount of $10,000,000,000, the present indebtedness, and then fixed a rate to cover the billion dollars of interest that is now due, and such bonds were either paid before maturity or put upon the market by the Federal Government and sold, the effect of such a transaction would be that the United States would lose the entire amount of interest and that the interest would accrue to the purchasers of the bonds.

The Secretary admitted that that had been discussed by himself and by the President of the United States, and he said the President of the United States approved of the plan of adding a sufficient amount to the interest rate to cover the past due interest or the extended interest, as the case might be. He thought that would be an admirable scheme and would enable us to sell any part of those bonds that we wanted to sell in the markets of the United States without difficulty.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, so long as that is not in the bill itself, what is the use of making it an objection?

Mr. SIMMONS. I will say to the Senator that I had intended to read what the Secretary of the Treasury said about that. I think it was brought out that the President of the United States had made a speech in New York and had commended that plan of settlement of the deferred interest.

When it is considered that there has been a proposition made recently in this country to take $4,000,000,000 of British bonds and sell them in the markets of this country, in order to raise the money to pay the soldiers' bonus, the danger of that proposition will be appreciated. If we pass this bill as it now comes from the committee the Secretary of the Treasury will undoubtedly have the power to fix a rate of 6 per cent or 7 per cent or 8 per cent, or whatever rate may be necessary to cover the accumulated interest; take the bonds only for the principal, and then put them upon the market and sell them; and if they bring no more than par the United States will undoubtedly lose the entire interest.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, the Senator I think has not given a full statement. Of course, in none of the tentative propositions was there ever a thought of allowing any Government to escape the payment of the full amount of interest, and if any such suggestion was made, of course, it was always understood the bonds were to be arranged in such a manner that, if they were redeemed before the time when they became due, then the foreign Governments would have to pay the full amount; so that full protection would be accorded. But let us turn to the bill itself now——

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator will pardon me, I admit that such an arrangement might be made, but the other question is the serious one.

Mr. McCUMBER. Let us turn now to section 3. In the preceding part of the bill provision is made for both past-due interest and the principal of the obligations. Then the bill says:

SEC. 3. That this act shall not be construed to authorize the exchange of bonds or other obligations of any foreign Government for those of any other foreign Government, or cancellation of any part of such indebtedness except through payment thereof.

I can only put one construction upon that, namely, that it means the payment of all of the debt and all of the interest.

Mr. SIMMONS. Will the Senator pardon me further?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield further to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield.

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Secretary or the commission should take a bond for the principal and then provide a rate of interest that would cover the deferred interest there would be no cancellation, but we would have a bond which, if paid before due, would deprive us of the benefit of that high rate of interest. Of course, Mr. President, if a bond should be allowed to run until its maturity, there would be no loss by reason of such an arrangement. I asked the Secretary if it was his proposition to put into the bonds a provision that they should not be payable until the date of maturity. He never answered that question, but he said that it was customary to allow optional periods of payment. That, however, is not the serious matter; I think that could be adjusted by providing that the bonds shall not be payable before the date of maturity; that could be arranged; but if the Secretary or the commission arrange bonds with a sufficient rate of interest to cover the deferred interest and then the Government negotiates and sells those bonds at any time before they fall due, it will lose that part of the interest which represents the deferred interest between the time of sale and the time of the maturity of the bond. It would not be a cancellation, either technically or otherwise; but it is a scheme—if I may call it a "scheme," and I do not use that word in an obnoxious sense—which might be easily worked in such a manner that the Government would inevitably lose the interest.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, to meet that objection all that the Government would have to do would be to hold on to the bonds. They are not obliged to sell the bonds. The Government can simply hold the bonds and carry them.

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. FLETCHER. If they need money, they can raise the money in the usual way, but they are not obliged to sell these bonds. I was going to ask the Senator if it is contemplated that the Government will put upon the market the bonds which they take from foreign Governments?

Mr. McCUMBER. I am not contemplating anything, because I can not speak of what the administration may have in mind; but it is my hope that in the case of our bonds from Great Britain, if we pass any legislation that would require further taxation without the sale of such bonds, instead of imposing taxes we may meet the necessities of the situation by the sale of a sufficient number of those bonds.

Mr. FLETCHER. Does the Senator think the Treasury Department would be authorized to dispose of these bonds in its own way and at its own pleasure without any legislation on the part of Congress?

Mr. McCUMBER. It could not do so, and I know the Senator will agree with me in that statement. The Secretary of the Treasury could not dispose of those bonds without legislation. There is nothing in the present law that allows him to do it. There is nothing in this law which would allow him to do so. They are the property of the United States, and he has no authority on earth to sell them or dispose of them in any way except by an act of Congress.

Mr. FLETCHER. One other question. May I ask the Senator—who has given this matter very close attention, of course—whether he construes the authority given by this bill to this commission as enabling it to fix according to its own views the rate of interest on the obligations of any government? In other words, would it have authority to say that Great Britain must pay 5 per cent, France 3 per cent, Italy 2 per cent, and the same way on down?

Mr. McCUMBER. No.

Mr. FLETCHER. Has the commission the power to do that?

Mr. McCUMBER. No; the commission can not accept interest at a less rate than that provided by law when we issued our Liberty bonds, which was the highest rate of interest that any of those bonds should bear, which I believe was 4¼ per cent.

Mr. FLETCHER. That applies, of course, to the Liberty bonds. It applies to our own bonds; but I do not find anything in this bill that requires——

Mr. McCUMBER. I stated that an amendment will be offered to the bill on behalf of the committee which will provide that the interest shall be not less than that provided by existing law.

Mr. FLETCHER. That is in the case of each and all of the Governments?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes. In that way they could not accept from any of them less than the highest rate of interest borne by our Liberty bonds.

Mr. FLETCHER. Then the further discretion would rest in the commission to determine when that interest would be paid in each case?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes.

Mr. FLETCHER. They would have the authority to do that, because the authority here is to refund or convert the principal or the interest of these obligations into bonds or other obligations of such foreign Governments in such form and on such terms, conditions, date or dates of maturity, and rate or rates of interest as the commission may determine. So they have the discretion there to determine in each case when the interest is to be paid, and they can fix that in their settlements with the other Governments; but the Senator now says the amendment will compel them to charge the same rate of interest that we have to pay on our Liberty bonds.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; the highest rate of interest that we paid on our Liberty bonds.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Florida pardon me? I think the Senator from Florida is in some confusion about that. The present law fixes the rate of interest on Liberty bonds, and says that these bonds to be delivered to us by the debtor Governments shall not be at a rate less than that, but above that rate the Secretary would have absolute discretion in fixing the rate. He could not fix it at less than 4¼ per cent——

Mr. FLETCHER. Precisely.

Mr. SIMMONS. But he could fix, in each case, as much more as he pleased. He could make it more in the case of one Government and less in the case of another Government above that margin.

Mr. FLETCHER. Even if the amendment is adopted that the Senator suggests he would still have a discretion.

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not think it is particularly necessary to adopt that amendment. It is innocuous. The present law gives that authority. I take it that under the present law—and I think the Senator from North Dakota will agree with me about that; there is nothing here that repeals the present law—if this bill should pass, the rate of interest fixed on the Liberty bonds would be the controlling minimum rate.

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes; but we will have to provide for that in this bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. Not necessarily. It is already in the law, and is not repealed.

Mr. FLETCHER. This bill deals with foreign Governments. The law as it relates to Liberty bonds deals with our own Government and our own bonds.

Mr. SIMMONS. When we are authorizing the rate of interest I am inclined to think that that would be taken in connection with the present rate, as prescribed by the Liberty bond act, unless that act is repealed. I may not be correct about that.

Mr. FLETCHER. But unless we require in this bill that the rate shall not be less than the rates charged on Liberty bonds this law would not cover it at all, and the discretion in this commission would be to fix the terms, conditions, date or dates of maturity, and rate or rates of interest with respect to all of these bonds taken from foreign Governments. I think that is a very important amendment. Otherwise, they would have the absolute latitude to fix one rate of interest for one Government and a different rate of interest for another, and a different rate for another. Then they have a further discretion as to claims which have not already been adjusted. They have the authority to adjust and settle any and all claims not now represented by bonds or obligations, and to accept securities therefor.

Therefore they have the discretion to adjust and settle all outstanding claims according to their own views, and to accept security or not to accept security; in other words, to make the best settlement they can, I presume, to compromise those claims that are not yet adjusted and settled.

Mr. McCUMBER. Of course, they can not compromise anything to the extent of lessening the amount which will be paid, because that is prohibited in the law itself.

Mr. FLETCHER. But there are cases where the amount has not yet been agreed on.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think at the present time, according to the statement of the Secretary of the Treasury, there is full agreement between every nation as to exactly what they owe. In other words, there are no unsettled balances between this Government and any one of these debtors. The whole question now is the settlement of the balances on which they have agreed.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. DIAL. I should like to ask the Senator whether there is any good reason why the Secretary of the Treasury and the War Finance Corporation should not act as this commission? I am opposed to increasing commissions unless it is absolutely necessary. Is that a practicable arrangement?

Mr. McCUMBER. Oh, certainly it is practicable if we make that agreement. Any agreement that the Congress sees fit to make, I assume, would be practicable. The Senator will remember, as I stated a short time ago, that the first bill that was introduced and was reported to the Senate was a bill which vested all of the authority in the Secretary of the Treasury, but the settlement had to be confirmed by the President before it could become effective. There was so much objection to that, and such a fear that the President might appoint some one who would be in favor of surrendering some of these debts, that a new bill was introduced, this time in the House, which provided for this commission, because it was felt that there would be less objection on the part of those whose hearts were filled with fear that the Secretary would not act fairly in the matter if a commission of five were appointed—four besides the Secretary of the Treasury—who must be confirmed by the Senate.

Mr. DIAL. I am against creating any more commissions unless it is absolutely necessary. I am sorry I did not hear the Senator's statement, but I have been attending a committee meeting, and was obliged to be out of the Chamber for that reason.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me. I do not wish to interrupt him unless he is willing to be interrupted——

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield to the Senator if he wishes.

Mr. SIMMONS. The matter that we have been discussing is a very serious one. I made a statement a few minutes ago with reference to some proposition to pass the bonus bill and arrange for making the payments authorized under it by the sale of a large number of British bonds. I want to ask the Senator a question in that connection, because I think it is very pertinent to the question we are discussing, about a possible method, and one which the Secretary seemed in his testimony to prefer, as I read his testimony, or as I understood it at the time he was delivering it. I should like to ask the Senator—of course, he need not answer the question if it will embarrass him in any way—if it is true that it has been seriously in contemplation by the administration or any branch of the administration to arrange this method of raising the money to pay the bonus?

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I can only answer that question in this way: I desire, and I think the majority of the Senate and of the House desire, that if we shall enact a soldiers' compensation law it shall be the one which has once been reported on favorably, and which goes into effect upon the 1st day of July, 1922, and that payments shall begin to be made under the law as soon as claims have been filed and settled. I do not want to extend the time when that legislation shall become effective. It is my fear—possibly I might go a little further and say that it is my opinion—that we will not have all of these matters settled, and possibly not even with the more important countries, in time to utilize any bonds for that purpose. If I were to say what I think would be the better way to do, and what I think would perhaps meet with approval from the executive department and the Treasury Department, it would be, if we pass the soldiers' compensation bill, to provide for the payment in some other way than by a dependence upon the foreign debts at the present time, fearing that possibly we might not get them settled in time or might not get in time the interest that we have been hoping to receive.

Of course, we must not pass any bill that will provide for a large expenditure without providing for means of meeting it; and therefore it would seem the better policy to provide the other means by some form of special taxation sufficient to take care for one year, for instance, of the expenditures that might possibly have to be met the very first year. I do not think the bill would necessitate the payment in the first year certainly of over $300,000,000, and therefore it would not be a heavy taxation; and then we might provide for selling a sufficient amount of the bonds of any other country which might be in our possession to take care of the amount that would become due any year thereafter if the interest received were not sufficient.

That would be my idea, and it seems to me to be the safer and the better plan. As to what the President would do in case we should provide for paying the soldiers' compensation out of these bonds, I will say that I think he would object seriously, upon the ground that we do not know what we are going to get out of those bonds, or when we can get them settled; and we must know positively how we are going to meet any obligation when it becomes due. That is the only answer I can give to that question, Mr. President.

I should like to put in the RECORD as a part of my remarks a few tables that may be of interest in the discussion of this matter. I have here a table of the principal and interest owing by Great Britain, France, Italy, and Belgium to the United States. I desire to insert that without reading as a table by itself.

There being no objection, the table referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Principal and interest owing by Great Britain, France, Italy, and Belgium to the United States.

Great Britain:
Principal	$4,166,318,358.44
Interest	509,173,742.89
		$4,675,492,101.33
France:
Principal	3,358,104,083.20
Interest	358,410,444.27

Mr. McCUMBER. I desire to follow that with another table showing foreign obligations in addition to the obligations from the loans made for the purpose of carrying on the war.

There being no objection, the table referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FOREIGN OBLIGATIONS.

The Treasury holds $10,150,401,305.49 of obligations of foreign Governments, distributed as follows:

Obligations of foreign Governments.

Held for advances made under the various Liberty bond acts	$9,434,774,829.24
Received from the Secretary of War and from the Secretary of the Navy on account of sales of surplus war materials (act of July 9, 1918)	574,673,710.21
Received from the American Relief Administration (act of Feb. 25, 1919)	84,093,963.55
Held by the United States Grain Corporation (act of Mar. 30, 1920)	56,858,802.49
Total	10,150,401,305.49

The interest accrued and unpaid up to and including the last interest period upon the obligations of foreign Governments and so-called governments held by the United States amounts to $1,178,879,925.88, and the amount of interest heretofore paid on such obligations is $478,863,632.99.

Mr. McCUMBER. I have here another table showing loans to foreign Governments by France as of June 30, 1921, showing to whom France made the loans and the total amount. I ask to have that printed in the RECORD without reading.

There being no objection, the table referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Loans to foreign Governments by France as of June 30, 1921.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I think now I have covered the question thoroughly and fully upon the main propositions. The whole question resolves itself down to the one proposition of whether we wish to give this commission the authority to say when the interest shall begin and the payment be made by any particular country.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, may I inquire if the Senator from North Dakota put in the RECORD any statement concerning the obligation of the British Government showing that on one loan on which over $500,000,000 of interest was due, the time of payment of that interest was deferred until October, 1922?

Mr. McCUMBER. What is the Senator's statement?

Mr. CURTIS. On one of the loans of the British Government, covered by an obligation made, I think, in 1919, the interest payment was deferred until October, 1922. Did the Senator place in the RECORD a statement regarding that?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I would like to ask the Senator from Kansas what authority the Secretary of the Treasury had in law to grant that sort of an extension?

Mr. CURTIS. I am not stating that he had any such authority, but I asked if that fact was put in the RECORD, in order that Senators might see what kind of a situation the committee had to meet. There was an obligation and a promise.

Mr. NORRIS. Does the Senator think, because an agreement was made which was plainly contrary to the law, that Congress is bound by it?

Mr. CURTIS. I do not think Congress is bound by it, but I think Congress would undoubtedly stand by it because of the fact that it was made.

Mr. NORRIS. It would depend a good deal on how far it went. They might have made an agreement that they would not have to pay the interest for 40 years. We would not stand for that. They might have agreed that they would cancel the debt, but it would not be any more legal than the agreement which was made to extend the payment of the interest until next October.

Mr. McCUMBER. May I answer the Senator from Kansas? The Senator spoke of a particular interest indebtedness of $500,000,000?

Mr. CURTIS. Yes; five hundred and odd million dollars.

Mr. McCUMBER. Let me call attention to the fact that while that proposition came from the debtor nation, it was never consummated. That particular agreement never resulted in anything. Nothing ever came of it. There was no agreement to extend the time at all, but it was simply a request from the debtor that the time of payment of the $500,000,000 of interest be so extended.

There was an agreement made, however, by the previous administration that the payment of the accrued interest up to that time might be deferred for two or three years. That is the way the agreement read. The present Secretary of the Treasury has thought that inasmuch as that was acted upon by the foreign Governments there is at least a moral obligation upon him to follow it. That is the reason why nothing has been done to press that beyond what the previous agreement was.

I wish to say that the tables which I have just presented were made up as of the last interest-paying date. That was several months ago. I think on the whole there could be added an average of about six months' interest to each of those tables.

Mr. POMERENE. May I ask the Senator what is the amount of the bonds and other indebtedness shown by the tables?

Mr. McCUMBER. They are shown in the committee's report. The total under the Liberty bonds was $9,434,774,829.24. Then there were other loans for surplus war materials amounting to $574,673,710.21. Then there is accrued interest, I believe, of $1,178,879,925.88. Then we have in addition to that the obligations received from the American Relief Administration of $84,063,963.55 and obligations of the United States Grain Commission of $56,858,802.49.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the pending bill, which I desire to have printed and lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, it is getting late, and I had desired to leave the Chamber in a very short time. If the Senator from North Dakota does not object, I would be glad to have the bill go over until to-morrow. I understand the Senator from Kansas wishes an executive session.

Mr. CURTIS. Yes; a short one.

Mr. SIMMONS. I could only cover part of what I wish to say about the measure, and it might involve the necessity of reviewing in the morning what I would say this afternoon.

Mr. McCUMBER. I am extremely anxious, as I have stated, that we shall proceed with all diligence to dispose of the bill; but I also appreciate that this is the first day we have brought it before the Senate in its modified form, and I expected nothing more to-day than the mere presentation of its present status.

Mr. CURTIS. Then the Senator has no objection to letting it go over until to-morrow?

Mr. McCUMBER. None whatever.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 25 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, January 24, 1922, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, Thou dost guard us with infinite care and solicitude. May we make response to Thy divine goodness with all diligence and faithfulness. Stir the best hints of our higher natures, and gather them up into some rapture, so that we may serve human burdens, human hearts, and human tears. O hear us as we beseech Thy blessing to abide with all of us. Keep us within Thy shadow, O Lord, for there is no life without its pain; there is no hope without its cloud; and there is no prayer without its doubt, so be Thou with us until we finish the last mile. In the blessed name of Jesus. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, January 21, 1922, was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of H. R. 9981, the independent offices appropriation bill.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FOCHT. I should like to inquire of the Chair the status of District of Columbia day? As this day is set apart under the rules for the consideration of bills from the Committee on the District of Columbia, I would like to know when an opportunity will be given for the consideration of District of Columbia business?

The SPEAKER. If the House should vote down the proposition to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the appropriation bill; in other words, if the House should prefer to consider District business, then it would be in order to take up District business.

Mr. FOCHT. Following the consideration of the appropriation bill?

The SPEAKER. Immediately, if the House should vote down the motion to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, if I may be allowed, there is no disposition to neglect the District of Columbia business. On the other hand, there is an earnest desire to consider District business; but it is highly important that we should continue our program for the consideration of appropriation bills. I hope that within a reasonable time we may be able to afford an opportunity for the consideration of District business.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the importance of appropriation bills. At the same time there is a strong desire and an urgent necessity for the passage of legislation pertaining to the District of Columbia, particularly on account of the congestion here during the past few years.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of order, for the purpose of getting a ruling by the Chair, that this is District of Columbia day and that District business can not be set aside by such a motion but can only be set aside by a motion to dispense with District day.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas interrupted the gentleman from Pennsylvania to make a point of order, and although the Chair dislikes to interrupt the gentleman, he feels constrained to rule on the point of order. The Chair thinks it is well settled that on District day a privileged measure is in order, the House having, of course, the option if it does not desire to take up the privileged matter, to vote down the motion, when it would be in order to take up District business. So the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Speaker, I have consulted with some of the members of the committee who are very desirous of having District of Columbia legislation passed, but who realize the importance of these appropriation bills; and with the assurance we have had from the leader of the majority [Mr. MONDELL] that due opportunities will be given for the considering of District of Columbia business, as chairman of that committee I will yield the day for the consideration of appropriation bills, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield before he takes his seat?

Mr. FOCHT. Yes.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman state, if he can, when it is probable that we may have a District day in the House?

Mr. FOCHT. I can only rely on the assurance of our distinguished leader [Mr. MONDELL] and of those gentlemen who shape and fashion the legislative program.

Mr. DYER. I understand.

Mr. FOCHT. I would say to the gentleman that he is no more desirous than I am of securing early consideration of District of Columbia business.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, let us stop this horseplay, if we can, and proceed with the consideration of the appropriation bill. It is evident that we will get no further information now.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD].

The motion of Mr. WOOD of Indiana was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the independent offices appropriation bill (H. R. 9981), with Mr. TOWNER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee rose on Saturday, the pending motion was the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ROACH], to strike out lines 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, and 15, inclusive, on page 7.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to oppose the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, I am reluctant to offer suggestions to my fellow Members based upon experience. Experience implies advancement in years and maturity, and those are qualities which do not appeal to a very large share of the electorate. Maybe it is exceptionally desirable to avoid reference to them since the passage of the nineteenth amendment. But as a result of many years of public service I confidently advise my colleagues that it is best to have as little as possible to do with matters of patronage.

In the first place, legislative duties and the seeking of patronage are inconsistent. The pursuit of patronage takes too much time. Again, it involves the Congressman who makes recommendations in obligations to members of the executive departments which are sure to plague him. Still further he is confronted with a standard as to fitness for the Government service sure to be a source of embarrassment. Many people who strenuously insist upon appointments have no adequate idea of the qualifications for service here or elsewhere under the Government. That is well caricatured in a French novel—The Cross of Berney. A woman who had come into possession of estates said: "I must do something for my steward. Now, that I have estates I would make him manager of one of them; but, alas, he is stupid. He would eat the hay rather than make it. I know what I will do. I will obtain for him a position under the Government. The Government is the only institution that can utilize a fool." [Laughter.]

The constant importunity for place is one of our worst embarrassments. So I am cordially in favor of the new system, which may not work well at first, but will prepare the way for a better method in selecting postmasters.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The trouble with this system is that while on the face of it it is intended to relieve Members of Congress from this responsibility, as a matter of fact they are by the people they represent still held responsible for the appointment without any power to control the appointment.

Mr. BURTON. To a degree that is true, but it relieves the Congressman of the importunities of a great mass of candidates, and reduces the number who are supposed to have exceptional qualifications for the position to three. I am frank to say that I think it should be reduced to one.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTON. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Does the gentleman think that the ease and comfort of the Congressman should be taken into consideration rather than the wishes of the people as to who should serve them as postmasters?

Mr. BURTON. It is not a question of comfort; it is largely a question of efficiency and usefulness. Which will the Congressman do—serve the people as a lawmaker or act as a solicitor for positions?

Mr. WILLIAMS. One further question. The system that you set aside has been in vogue since the beginning of the Government. Presidential postmasters have been appointed by the President on the recommendation of Members of Congress from the districts belonging to the party in power, and has not the Postal Service during all these years been fairly efficient?

Mr. BURTON. I think so, although I believe it could be very much improved even over the present high standard inaugurated by Postmaster General Hays. In the long run the privilege of making recommendations and appointments does not do a Member of Congress or any other official any good. Thomas Jefferson once said that he was tired of making appointments, because the result was nine enemies and one ingrate. I am in favor of the enlargement of the Civil Service to include the largest possible number of places. If we are to have a system under which a multitude is to be turned out at the beginning of each conflicting administration it will prove a most serious disadvantage and conduce to inefficiency in the administration of public business. Then, too, while we are all grateful to those who support us, while we would like to have them appointed to offices, it would be an impossible task to provide for more than the barest fraction of the number who have claims for recognition. Still further, regulations for competitive examinations will diminish that great mass of people who think if they are discontented or out of work they can find refuge in an office under the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. GENSMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Ohio have five minutes more. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Reserving the right to object, although I shall not object, a great many gentlemen, I suppose from the statement on the bulletin board as to the business, are absent, evidently thinking that other business is under consideration. We have no complaint as to the business that has been taken up, but in justice to them I think they should have some notice of the change of plan, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee makes the point of no quorum. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and five Members are present, a quorum.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise. I state very frankly that I do that in order to get the bells rung.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee demands tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chair appointed as tellers Mr. WOOD of Indiana and Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported that there were 6 yeas and 85 noes.

So the motion was lost.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Is there objection to the extension of time for the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURTON. A very unnecessary amount of discussion and excitement is aroused in communities in regard to appointments. Many have far greater interest in the selection of the postmaster than in the enactment of a great statute of national importance. The status and the environment of applicants for appointive offices are very different from those of a candidate before the people. The latter is subject to all kinds of criticism. Yarns, new and old, are circulated about him, and then the opposition newspapers offer him a wealth of weird suggestions. On the other hand, the applicant for appointment to office dwells in an atmosphere of flattery. No one declines to sign his petition. His pastor, his neighbors, the sheriff of the county, and all candidates for office write letters of recommendation on his behalf which are models of style and give him an amount of praise altogether unlooked for and very gratifying to him.

There are two classes of office seekers—first, those who come to Washington to present their case.

The typical applicant of supreme assurance and greatest self-estimation comes here with the thought that he is to be the guide, philosopher, and friend to the President. Like a sage he stands at the White House gates with "Atlantean shoulders fit to bear the weight of mightiest monarchies," but his hopes descend in the scale, and from applications for a position as a foreign ambassador or Cabinet officer he finally becomes contented to accept a place in the Bureau of Prohibition Enforcement and finds solace in the fact that a part of his duty is to partake of the samples that are presented for examination there. [Laughter.]

Then there is the other applicant who merely sends in his application, numerously signed. Probably it is consigned to dusty pigeonholes and to that great mass of recommendations which all creation's junk shops could not hold, but he believes in hope and cherishes the strange delusion that his application was taken up in a Cabinet meeting and that the discussion in regard to it was protracted until late at night. He is satisfied that the senior members of the Cabinet—the Secretaries of State, Treasury, and War—favored his appointment, but he thinks that the junior members were opposed. Maybe he imagines the Secretary of Agriculture who has to do with noxious weeds and insects caused his defeat. In any event, he is firm in the belief that some YOUNG TURKS in the administration stood between him and the office to which he felt he was entitled. He is, indeed, a pathetic figure. His hopes are dead. The patriotic subjects which have aroused his eloquence or engaged his thoughts, incidents, and studies, such as Burgoyne's surrender, the social status of Mrs. Eaton in Andrew Jackson's administration, the moral basis of the reconstruction legislation after the war, phases of the progressive movement, Susan B. Anthony, Porto Rico and the Philippines; all these have lost their charm, and his disappointed spirit suffers then the nature of an insurrection. [Applause and laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, any step looking toward the improvement of the standard of efficiency in all branches of public endeavor is for the best interests of this Government. It is best for us who are here. It relieves us of a burden which at times becomes almost intolerable. It turns our attention from matters of patronage to subjects of far greater importance, and however much we would like to help our friends we have all of us such a multitude of friends that we must fail in fulfilling their hopes.

I trust this motion may be voted down and voted down by an overwhelming vote.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTON. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. If it is such a disgrace and discredit to an American citizen to run for an appointive office as the gentleman appears to think, why would not the same disgrace apply to a man who runs for an elective office?

Mr. BURTON. I have already said there is a great deal of difference between the two. The man who runs for an elective office finds his place. A candidate for election may say of the unfriendly newspapers and his critics, in the language of the banished duke, "These are counselors that feelingly persuade me what I am." He has no royal road to victory, but the man who is a candidate for an appointive office dwells in an atmosphere of adulation and does not have that shaking up that is sometimes wholesome for us.

Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTON. Yes.

Mr. COCKRAN. The gentleman's speech is predicated entirely upon the assumption that by some system of competitive examination efficiency of the public service is advanced. I would like to ask the gentleman on what he bases that assertion, and whether, according to the actual facts of history, he is justified in saying that the liquidation of war expenses and the reorganization of conditions after the Civil War, without the waste of a penny—so far as I know—shows any inferiority to the liquidation of war expenses and the reorganization of industrial conditions at the present time?

Mr. BURTON. I think there were some very erroneous policies adopted at the close of the late war, but that is a matter that I did not intend to discuss.

Mr. COCKRAN. I mean the efficiency of the public service generally.

Mr. BURTON. I think the efficiency of the public service has been infinitely increased by submitting the claims of applicants for office to competitive examinations. Then, again, it is a truly democratic method, because it gives to everybody a chance.

Mr. COCKRAN. I would debate that last assertion under other conditions; but when the gentleman undertakes to base an argument on a statement of facts, I would like to have the facts established on some better authority than mere assertion.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate upon this amendment close in 10 minutes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, I would object to that.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, the pending amendment, as I understand, is an amendment that was offered Saturday striking out the item to appropriate several thousand dollars for the Civil Service Commission to hold examinations for presidential postmasters—that is, postmasters of the first, second, and third class. I should not have had anything to say, although I think the amendment ought to be adopted, if a certain gentleman had not referred to some statements which I made heretofore with reference to those appointments and challenged the accuracy of my charge that in spite of pretentions to the contrary, politics still controlled these appointments. I shall not have the time to go into the facts by reading the two-bushel file which I stated the other day to the gentleman from Iowa I had, the gentleman who challenged my statement. I wish to reiterate what I said in the discussion which was referred to, that I do not oppose political appointments of men to places in executive or supervisory positions. I believe that the civil service for the purely clerical positions is proper, but I think that whatever party is in power it should have the right to place in every supervisory, executive position men who are in sympathy with the policies of the administration, because the administration must be held responsible. [Applause.] So I say I am not opposed to proper civil service.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. I can not yield now. I am not opposed to Deacon Hays making political appointments and appointing faithful Republicans postmasters. The thing I object to is the hypocrisy of pretending that he is using the merit system when I know, and every man who has investigated it knows, that he is using the political spoils system. I did not say that any Republican Member of Congress could get what he wants. That is another thing I protest against—the playing of favorites. There are some Republican Members who can get what appointments they want, but there are other Republican Members who can not, but in some States if there is a Republican Senator he controls, or perhaps a Republican chairman, or a national committeeman, and that is not fair. Another thing that I protest against is that ex-service men are not given the preference to which they are entitled, and which the law Congress passed gave him.

But the gentleman from Iowa the other day—I am glad to notice that he corrected it in the RECORD—said that the complaints I had were from men who were not competent—that was the substance of it—and were disappointed applicants.

I want to ask the gentleman if he investigated the appointments in Indiana?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I have not.

Mr. WINGO. Have you investigated the appointments in Illinois?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I have not.

Mr. WINGO. Have you investigated them in any State in the Union except in your own district?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. In my own district and from reports of Members from the other States.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman has not investigated in all the States, or he would know that ex-service men have been kicked out in practically every State. The gentleman talked about something he did not know about. If the gentleman will give me a committee and give me authority to summon witnesses and produce papers, I will show that not only Democratic service men were kicked out, but Republican service men. I will show you a case where a Republican could not get the indorsement of the Republican boss of his State, although he won first place in two examinations and was appointed by Wilson. He was turned out and a Republican boss selected his man, he was appointed, and the Republican Member of Congress wrote a letter stating he had to yield to the organization demand.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. We will come to that.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman is fearfully ignorant, or he is trying to mislead the House. The gentleman says that politics do not count.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WINGO. I ask five minutes more.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. WINGO. I am not surprised the gentleman objected. His own State is affected by these hypocritical actions.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I object.

Mr. GENSMAN. Mr. Chairman, it strikes me that the committee has resolved itself into one of the old-fashioned "experience meetings," similar to those that I attended in the little country schoolhouse in my boyhood days "down on the farm" 25 or 30 years ago, which were held under the auspices of the United Brethren Church or were a part of that church's proceedings. I have seldom inflicted myself upon the House or the committee; I have tried not to have the appearance of an "atlas toter," but this is a time when, in the language of some of the old brethren of the dim and hazy past who attended the experience meetings I have just spoken about, that the "spirit moves me to speak."

Unfortunately the remarks made by my esteemed, distinguished, and delightful friend from Missouri [Mr. ROACH] do not appear in Saturday's CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and I have not had the opportunity of reading the same, but I did not gather from the remarks of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ROACH] that he meant to leave the impression that the Civil Service Commission, so far as post offices are concerned, is "bunk." As I heard his remarks, I concluded that he intended to convey the impression thereby that it had gone out to the country that the civil service was "bunk," but that as a matter of fact it was a stern reality, so far as the Members of Congress are concerned.

As to the definition of this newly coined word "bunk" I am not sufficiently learned on the subject. I have not taken the opportunity of consulting Webster on the subject, but we from Oklahoma have our own ideas of "bunk." In fact, I am very much of the impression that "bunk" was first discovered wandering up and down Red River, or the adjacent territory on the south, in what the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] has so freely christened "the Jumbo district."

Taking the definition of "bunk" as it is generally understood to be in Oklahoma and the "Jumbo district," I am prepared to say from actual experience that so far as the post offices are concerned, the civil service is anything but "bunk," and I can not conceive of a Member on this side of the House declaring himself of the view that the civil service is anything but a stern reality. I believe that the civil service is doing the best that it can under the circumstances and with the facilities that they have. We must remember that there are about eight applicants for every post office in the United States who have filed or are about to file applications for the post office. That at this time there are applications piled up in the Civil Service Bureau in enormous heaps, and that they certainly have a job on their hands down there looking these papers over. Taking into consideration the faults and weaknesses of human nature, it seems to me that they are doing about all that could be expected of them under the circumstances.

My experience has, absolutely and entirely, beyond the peradventure of a doubt, convinced me that the civil service is just what it purports to be. My experience is that the papers of the applicants speak for themselves. That they are graded carefully and concisely by an aggregation of apparently "exschoolmarms," who insist on the dotting of every "i" and the crossing of every "t," and insist on "docking" the applicant for the omission thereof. In fact, I am rather of the opinion that they are rather too technical and too precise. I have in mind a man who was a postmaster for 10 or 12 years, who undoubtedly understands third-class post offices from top to bottom, but who failed to pass the mental test, or examination, and although I have asked a reexamination, regrading, and everything imaginable, I find that the civil service will not budge one inch.

The main trouble about the civil service as it now operates is that the impression has gone out that it is a farce—and, in the language of the Congressman from Missouri, "bunk"—when, as a matter of fact it is more exacting, more technical, freer from politics or political influence than any teachers' examination in the country. I find that if an applicant does not come up to the standard that that is all there was to it, and that a Congressman has absolutely no influence, political or otherwise, in getting the civil service to change its views or figures on an applicant's showing before the Civil Service Commission; but the trouble about the matter is in all the years past it has been more or less of a sham and a smoke screen for politicians, and it is hard for the boys "down at the forks of the creek" to believe that a Congressman can not go down to the civil service and tell them what he wants and get it. My idea about the proposition is that the post offices should be taken entirely out of politics, thereby abrogating the time-honored principles of Andrew Jackson, when he inaugurated "Tenure in office" and said "To the victor belongs the spoils," or that the entire selection of the postmasters should be turned over to the Congressman. This half-way business would be all right if we could make the people understand it. In time that may be possible, but so far as present needs are concerned the people have not been educated up to a real civil-service examination. They can not understand it. In time the position of a Congressman may be thoroughly appreciated by his constituents, but for the present the country has the wrong view of the civil service and the post-office situation and the whole load is thrown upon the shoulders of the Congressman, and I am rather afraid that so far as the present is concerned it is more of a liability than an asset. The man that is appointed postmaster insists that he is under no obligation to the Congressman and that he won by being the best man. The fellow that lost insists that the Congressman was not for him; that the civil service is "bunk," and that he was "double-crossed" somewhere along the line, when the opposite in each case is true in nine cases out of ten.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to perfect the text.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 7, line 13, strike out the figures "$75,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$30,000."

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, referring to this matter, my amendment is, of course, preferential, because it perfects the text by reducing it to something like it ought to be. But I was interested in the colloquy which was going on about this matter of examination and about the statement that was made by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] the other day that the veterans who were discriminated against were those who were not competent.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. If the gentleman will pardon me, I made no such statement.

Mr. STEVENSON. That those who failed to get appointments were not capable and were not found to be the best on the list.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I did not say that, either, although I might well have said it.

Mr. STEVENSON. The gentleman says he did not say it, but he practically says it now.

In my district a man came back from the war who had been shot through the shoulder. He stood the examination under the old order and he made the highest mark. He was appointed in August, 1920. His appointment was held up; they refused to confirm him. He was made a postmaster and continued to act as postmaster. When this three-card monte affair was issued I went to see them, and I said, "Here is the law that says a veteran shall have preference. Here is a man who made the highest mark, and he is a veteran, with scars of war on him." "Oh, no; he will have to take another examination. That is not an examination that is worth anything. We can not recognize an examination that is made by the Civil Service Commission at that time, I suppose, because there happened to be a Democratic President in at the time." They made them go to the mat again, and the soldier who was in, and who was acting as postmaster, had the highest rating by all odds, about 10 points higher than the other fellow. What did they do? They backed and filled, and hemmed and hawed, and twisted and turned; and the lowest man, who never had been called into the Army and never had anything to do with the Army, was finally appointed, and they kicked out the postmaster that every business man in the town practically had asked to be retained, a postmaster with a bullet hole through his shoulder and a postmaster that stood the highest examination, and who, under the preference act, was entitled to the appointment. The preference act reads as follows, and in certifying the eligible list the Civil Service Commission always specifies those with soldier preference, but the Post Office Department ignores it. This is the statute, found at Forty-first Statutes at Large, page 37:

That hereafter in making appointments to clerical and other positions in the executive branch of the Government in the District of Columbia or elsewhere preference shall be given to honorably discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines.

Mr. KINCHELOE. That is "humanizing" the Post Office Department.

Mr. STEVENSON. That is "humanizing" the Post Office Department, and that is encouraging patriotism; that is selecting the most competent man for the place, to wit, the man at the tail end of the procession. I am a civil-service man myself, when it comes down to the classified fellows, but I believe the revenue offices and the post offices ought to be filled by people who respond to the political situation. I am a good deal of an Andrew Jackson Democrat. He was born in my district and raised there, but I say, if we are going to have a civil-service examination, let us regard, in the first place, the statute which we wrote which said that the veterans should have preference in all civil-service appointments. Let us regard that and let us do away with this hypocrisy which says we are having this examination for the purpose of getting the best men. The Civil Service Commission observes the law, but the Post Office Department rejects it.

Mr. DUNBAR. Was not Andrew Jackson born in North Carolina?

Mr. STEVENSON. No, sir. He was born in South Carolina, and he left his punch bowl, which I think Mr. VOLSTEAD is going to get, to his native State of South Carolina, setting it out in his will as "my native State of South Carolina."

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I am one of those who have failed to see any beauty or virtue in the Executive order of May 10. I think the issuance of the order was a very big mistake on the part of the administration. It has utterly failed to do those things which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] in his very forceful speech undertook to say it did. It has not relieved Members of Congress from the embarrassment incident to the appointment of postmasters. It has not given them more time to be devoted to legislation. It has added embarrassment to the Members of Congress. I am not in favor, however, of the adoption of the motion striking out the paragraph. The President has decided on this machinery to assist him in arriving at proper candidates to be appointed, and the appropriations should be carried in the bill. But I do want to submit a few remarks and observations on the way this order works in practical operation.

To start with, I believe in party government. I believe the administration in power should have its supporters in all the appointive positions in the Government. I served here during the administration of President Wilson. I had a great many letters during that time from people in my district about rural routes and post offices. I had letters from Republican friends asking me to help them in securing these places, but I never, during the entire term of President Wilson, attempted to name a rural carrier or a postmaster in my district. I wrote every one who inquired of me about these matters that the administration was Democratic, and that while these places were under the civil service, yet under the law and under the rules, if a Democrat was on the eligible list he would and should receive the appointment. And they were entitled to receive them. The people of this country in November, 1920, recorded a stupendous majority against the party then in power. The people had in mind, when they returned a majority of over 7,000,000 for the Republican candidates, three things, in my opinion.

In the first place, they wanted to get rid of President Wilson. In the second place, they wanted to get rid of Wilsonism. In the third place, over and above all that, they were determined to get rid of the thousands of Wilsonites who were in office all over the country, and they voted in unnumbered thousands for that purpose, the majorities running into the millions in some of the States. The change the people had in mind was not just a few of the big offices. They expected a complete change.

The country is disappointed. Mr. Hays was chairman of the Republican national committee for three years, and he wrote during that time millions of letters to the Republican workers out in the counties and in the small towns and in the precincts; letters in which he urged the importance of a change of administration and the necessity of putting Republicans in office. When the election took place, with more than 7,000,000 majority for the Republican ticket, everybody thought the change they had voted for would take place. Mr. Hays went into the Cabinet, and other members of the national committee and prominent Republican leaders got Cabinet positions and important appointments and these leaders proceeded to divide up big places among themselves without delay. But, when it comes to the small towns and the country districts and in the minor precincts and they take up the problems of Republican county and precinct committeemen, then they say, "Oh, no; we must have efficiency. We must proceed under the civil service. Submit your claim to the Civil Service Commission." And I say to you, what you all know, there is disappointment among Republicans, and among the people who made possible that 7,000,000 majority.

Now what does this order do? In the first place, it does not relieve Members of Congress of a single embarrassment. It adds immeasurably to their embarrassment, because there is a widespread belief among the common people of this country—I know it is prevalent in my district, and I know that from conversations with other Members of Congress it is prevalent everywhere—that in some way or somehow Members of Congress can control these appointments—that they can control the action of the Civil Service Commission. I had one case under my observation where a good woman in my district was an applicant for a third-class post office. She had the indorsement of the Republican men and women's committee, and from the county supervisors, and all of the indorsements necessary in a case of that kind. I very much desired to appoint her. I wrote her and inclosed a copy of the Executive order. I explained fully that it was necessary for her to get on the eligible list. I also stated plainly what we all know is true, that a Member of Congress had no way of controlling that matter. I assured her if she was one of the three eligibles I would be glad to recommend her appointment. An examination was held, but she was not one of the three. She wrote me that she feared I had neglected to properly represent her interests down here. [Laughter.]

The good lady was no exception to the rule. I find that most applicants honestly believe a Member of Congress can get them on the eligible list if he desires to do so. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] assumes that under this system only two people are dissatisfied. Not so; all the applicants who fail to get on the eligible list feel they have not been fairly treated. The two eligibles who are not appointed agree that they were defeated through some kind of frame-up to which the Member of Congress was a party. And often, too often, the successful applicant convinces himself that he won through merit alone and that he is under no obligation to anyone.

If the purpose had been to devise a scheme to embarrass Members of Congress, to destroy their prestige at home, and to defeat them either in a primary or general election, the present scheme could not be improved upon. If Members of Congress are to be held responsible for postmaster appointments in their districts, they should have the power to recommend candidates whom they want.

Under this system they are held responsible by the folks back home, and are absolutely powerless to name their choice or the choice of the patrons interested in the appointment. The thing to do is to take this whole matter either entirely out of the hands of Members of Congress or go back to the old system, where both the responsibility and the power of appointment is definitely fixed and known.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, may I have five minutes more?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WINGO. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, I would like to know if the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] is here.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes. I object. [Laughter.]

Mr. LAZARO. Go on. You have your time.

Mr. WASON, Mr. SCOTT of Michigan, Mr. MONDELL, Mr. KEARNS, and Mr. COCKRAN rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kansas object?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes; I object, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is too late.

Mr. COCKRAN rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made.

Mr. WASON. Mr. Chairman, I move you that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WILLIAMS] have five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. That motion is not in order. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN].

Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Chairman, I take the floor in support of the amendment. I support it without qualification or limitation of any kind. I rise to say a word in behalf of what I conceive to be an essential feature of republican government, and in defense of the species almost extinct—the Andrew Jackson Democrat. [Applause.] It seems to me that in his speech the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] (interesting as always and clothed in such glowing terms as are apt by entrancing the mind to benumb its critical faculties) misapprehends completely the character of our Government in the eulogy he has pronounced upon this method of selecting persons for appointive offices, which has been imported from across the sea.

It is an extraordinary feature of some mental equipments that anything which is of foreign origin seems to be held excellent by reason of its alien extraction, and anything developed in our own country seems to be considered objectionable by reason of its peculiar and distinctive American character.

Now, the genius of our Government is absolutely hostile to any method of filling public offices except through untrammeled exercise of the power of appointment by the head of a department chosen by the people directly at the ballot box, or appointed by an officer elected by popular suffrage.

It must be obvious that any limitation upon the power of an officer elected by popular suffrage to choose his own subordinates is a limitation on the suffrage through which he has been chosen.

The vital distinction between this Government and all others existing under parliamentary institutions is that here both the executive and legislative are fruits of popular suffrage, while in all other countries only legislative representatives are elected by the people. Under these other Governments, where the only power vested in the people is to choose their legislative representatives, methods of selecting public officers belong naturally to the parliament. They are not determined, and could not be determined, by vote of the people at the polls. The personnel or methods of administration are never before the electors for discussion or decision.

But in this country, as the gentleman who has just taken his seat, Mr. WILLIAMS, has shown most conclusively and lucidly, the question before the people at every election is not always or even usually adoption or rejection of some legislative proposal; that is often a minor issue; sometimes so indistinct that there is little, if anything, upon which the people can pronounce an intelligent judgment. But the issue that is always before them is the manner of administering the Government. There is no way by which the people can express their judgment on that issue except by the election of officers who will discharge their functions through persons responsive to the prevailing opinion of the country. Surely this must be self-evident.

But, sir, if rigid application of that system could be shown to have proved at any time incompatible with the highest efficiency in government I would be prepared to concede that it was a serious question whether the abstract principle should not give way before an actual demonstration that it hampered or threatened the well-being of the Nation. The object of my question to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] was to ascertain whether he could offer any definite proof that officers appointed by untrammeled exercise of the appointing power were of inferior efficiency to men appointed under this system of competitive examination. No such proof was forthcoming—none will ever be offered—none exists. I challenge anyone to show in the whole record of human experience a single instance where a great war—a civil war, always the most destructive of wars—had been waged with a degree of devastation never before paralleled, and after it was ended and the country pacified, the operations of government during its continuance were subjected to the most rigid scrutiny and not a sixpence was found to have been misapplied; at least not by any subordinate officer. I go further, I charge that prolonged tenure in office makes not for purity but for corruption in the public service. I challenge any man to show where a person recently appointed to office has ever proved to be an embezzler of public funds or a source of official corruption. I have had some experience in examining into the administration of public offices and I have never known one instance where corruption was uncovered that had been practiced by a recent appointee. That stands to reason.

The new appointee does not know enough about the methods of administration to cover up his footsteps if they were turned from honesty to corruption. Because in every instance where corruption has been uncovered in the National, State, or municipal governments, it has been found that it was a person who had grown gray in the service that developed from his own experience the scheme to outwit the law and evade its pursuit. I have additional reason for opposing this last attempt to extend the list of permanent officeholders.

Mr. Chairman, I think it is to the glory of this country that without any attempt to hamper the functions of elective officers the American people succeeded in establishing the best civil service the world has ever seen. And therefore I am opposed to every attempt to substitute for that system of incomparable excellence a method of appointing officers which after long experience has shown no superiority and which is repugnant to the spirit of our political system.

Gentlemen choose to assume that superiority of qualifications for an ordinary office is to be determined by a literary examination, but they offer no justification in theory or experience for that assumption. Certainly not a shadow of reason has been advanced for claiming that by such a method qualifications of a first-class postmastership can be most clearly ascertained. What is the character of the service the postmaster must render? Why, it is simply to deliver or cause to be delivered in the minimum of time the books and papers addressed by mail to persons living in his community.

Obviously the function of a postmaster is to understand his people, to get the best service for them out of his subordinates. He must know his neighborhood and his neighbors. His capacity must be determined by his knowledge of men, not of books; his knowledge of affairs, not of literature. An attempt to ascertain his qualifications by an examination as to the boundaries of Afghanistan when the ability to be exercised is how to get a letter in the most expeditious way to the address on the envelope—in New York City, for instance—from the post office to Van Damm Street, or Vereck Street—localities not familiar to the learned—is a proposition that would be considered extravagant in comic opera. In the sober operation of Government it is amazing that it should be submitted to an intelligent body.

Mr. Chairman, I oppose this extension of this ridiculous principle to selection of the heads of post offices in important cities, because it is indefensible in policy, entailing, as it must, emasculation of the suffrage, and because I believe that better administration will be secured by leaving these appointments to the discretion of the administration, which must pledge its prospect of success upon the manner in which it discharges that function. [Applause.]

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the pro forma amendment which I offered.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment to the amendment offered by him. Is there objection?

Mr. ROACH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment which I offered.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will submit these requests one at a time. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. STEVENSON] asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object——

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, in order to expedite business I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ROACH] asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. WINGO. I object to that.

Mr. LANGLEY. I object to that, too.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, whatever dissatisfaction exists, and whatever justification there is for that dissatisfaction, may be traced back to the precedents furnished by the last administration. There are a great many people in this country who are firm adherents to the idea of the strictest civil service examination with reference to qualifications for those who serve in civil service appointments. Carrying out the idea first promulgated by President Wilson, but giving a latitude whereby some choice might be had, as against the proposition offered by President Wilson under which there could be no latitude, this revised program has been afforded. And I will say, gentlemen, that whatever may be our likes or dislikes with reference to the established order of things, I think we will all admit it would be a foolish thing to sustain this motion. If this amendment were adopted, it would not wipe out the Executive order——

Mr. LANGLEY. It would wipe out the enforcement of it.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It would result in confusion worse confounded. The objections and the dissatisfaction, in many cases well founded, are due to the fact that the Civil Service Commission, charged with all its other duties, has imposed upon it this additional duty without extra force to do this work.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No; I can not yield. By this means important positions and the qualifications of the applicants for those positions are being passed upon by clerks receiving $1,200 and $1,400 a year. We would very materially add to the present difficulties if we were to adopt this amendment. If we want to make our burden less, if we want to make it easier for ourselves and better for the administration of public affairs, we should pass the provision of the bill whereby relief may be offered where responsibility is now lodged, and thus provide for an examination of these applicants which will in a degree at least afford information as to their qualifications.

So I say that we are trying to fool ourselves if we support this amendment. I do not think any gentleman, whether he is in favor or against this method of appointing postmasters, should vote for this proposition. It brings him no relief and only makes the mesh tighter.

Mr. STEVENSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. STEVENSON. I am not complaining of the Civil Service Commission, but does the gentleman approve of the policy of the Post Office Department in deliberately setting aside the provision for the soldier's preference and appointing a man who is not a soldier over the highest man that is a soldier?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I do not think that has ever been done.

Mr. STEVENSON. I know that it has been done.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The gentleman may make the assertion.

Mr. STEVENSON. I know it. It was in my own district. I will give you the name. Theron L. Gregory was appointed over a soldier, Hazel E. Estridge, of South Carolina, under those circumstances.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I think the last action taken under the last rule of President Harding took place in Baltimore. We know that President Wilson issued an order that the man receiving the highest average, if his character was all right, should be appointed. That was modified by the present administration by making it the first three men, so that it was possible to select one from the first three having the highest average. In Baltimore 15 candidates entered the contest and they were all able, efficient, and good men. Three men were selected as having the highest average. They were Col. Sherlock Swann, Mr. Benjamin F. Woelper, jr., and Clarendon I. T. Gould. Col. Swann received the highest average. He has served as postmaster for Baltimore City for the past eight years. His department has been above criticism, and if the business people of Baltimore, regardless of politics, could have their way he would be selected and reappointed postmaster.

I received a letter from the First Assistant Postmaster General, which I want to read. It is as follows:

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, January 16, 1922.

Hon. JOHN C. LINTHICUM,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. LINTHICUM: The Civil Service Commission has certified the names shown below as eligible for postmaster at Baltimore, Md.

The department must make a selection from this register in accordance with the terms of the Executive order of May 10, 1921, under which the examination was held.

Any information which you may desire to submit regarding these eligibles before a recommendation is made to the President will be appreciated and carefully considered.

Sincerely, yours,
HUBERT WORK,
First Assistant Postmaster General.

Eligible No. 1: Sherlock Swann.
Eligible No. 2: Benjamin F. Woelper, jr.
Eligible No. 3: Clarendon I. T. Gould.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LINTHICUM. No; I am sorry; I have only five minutes. When this order was issued by the present administration, the people of the country, Democrats especially, thought it was an important change and that politics would creep in. The Postmaster General then issued the following statement or declaration. The declaration was made by the Postmaster General in March, 1921, when he was asked what the appointment policy of the Harding administration would be. Said he:

> First, to make such rectification as in all decency and fairness must be made to insure a square deal; secondly, to strengthen and broaden the civil service at every point wherever possible to the end that merit may govern; thirdly, with absolute fidelity to put the entire Postal Service upon a purely business basis, so sound and so serviceable that no political party will ever again dare to ignore or evade it ultimately.

Now, when I received the letter I mentioned relating to this postmaster at Baltimore, I naturally went to see the First Assistant Postmaster General, who had the matter in charge. I told him of the excellent qualities of Col. Swann, of Baltimore, what a splendid administration he had given, how the people liked him, and how the whole service had stood for him, and so forth. What was the reply? He said, "I would like to say to you that you had better see the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WELLER], who lives in Baltimore, because this administration proposes to appoint Republicans wherever it is possible to do so. [Applause.] That some places in the South Democrats would be appointed where qualified Republicans could not be found.

I am not objecting that under a Republican administration they should appoint Republicans, but I do object to the hypocrisy and the camouflage of any such statement. If the Postmaster General intended to recommend the appointment of Republicans, would it not have been more just to absolutely rescind the order of President Wilson and give the offices to the Republicans, as they intend to do? Why not be honest and aboveboard to the people of Baltimore and of the country? When Mr. Hays, Postmaster General, who is respected by everybody, issued that statement we had a right to believe that he was in earnest and that there would be no hypocrisy or camouflage back of it. [Applause.]

Why should the declaration have been issued by the Postmaster General which evidenced an intention to place the Post Office Department upon the very highest level, purely business basis, where no political party would ever dare to attempt to ignore or evade it? Certainly the selection of Mr. Woelper, the second man on the list, who I understand will be designated, is not placing it upon a purely business basis, is not assuring a square deal, he not having received the highest mark, is not strengthening and protecting the civil service and does not let merit control.

Mr. Woelper, I imagine, is a very fine gentleman, one of considerable business ability, and stands well in the community, but he certainly has never had any experience, knows nothing of postal affairs, and it will take him a very long time to reach the efficiency, if he ever does, which Col. Swann, by long service and hard work, has attained. The city of Baltimore has now become a vast business center, with a population of some 750,000 people. Its post-office system extends to every condition and walk of life; its efficiency is the very vitals of the business of the city; and surely we are entitled to the very best that can be had. Col. Swann has been recognized by a Republican civil service board as the best, and if the administration wants to live up to the declarations of the Postmaster General he should have been selected.

I thought when the war was over we would discontinue this camouflage, this hypocrisy in trying to fool the people. You certainly could not fool those of Baltimore. They know and will remember that no matter how accurately a man performs his duty, his politics, if he be a Democrat will deprive him of office no matter how many declarations the opposing party may make. I say I do not cry out against the appointment of some one else, but I do cry out upon the system by which the appointment is to be made. If the department stands for a square deal, let us have a square deal; if it stands for political appointments, let us have political appointments, but do not camouflage and try to fool the people. Are we to believe that the words of the Postmaster General are but sounding brass and tinkling cymbal? I regret, indeed, the occurrence. I should so much rather have seen the Postmaster General absolutely abrogate the Wilson order and select postmasters freely from the Republican ranks. The case in Baltimore is not the only one. The same thing is transpiring all over the country.

In Dayton, Ohio, where the Democrats led and the Republican whom they wanted appointed was fifth on the list, the third and fourth men were by some system eliminated as unqualified, and the fifth man put in position of the third and will no doubt receive the appointment. It is a disgrace upon the civil-service system, and I deplore the fact that the Postal Department is to be brought under such spoils system, when we thought we had reached a high basis according to the words of the Postmaster General. [Applause.]

[Mr. LINTHICUM had permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.]

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this amendment close in 10 minutes.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLACK) there were 78 ayes and 32 noes.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, some years ago when a discussion similar to this was proceeding in the House, I stated, as the gentleman who has just taken his seat stated, that when the Republicans are in control there should be Republicans holding the offices, and that when the Democrats are in control, the Democrats are entitled to them. I have nothing to take back. If there is to be a civil service, it should be fairly and honestly administered.

I want to give you a concrete illustration of how it is being operated now. There were eight fourth-class post offices in my district that became third class. Six of the postmasters were Democrats and two were Republicans. I received a letter from the First Assistant Postmaster General to the effect that these postmasters were eligible for appointment as third-class postmasters. I knew of six and how their records were, and I wrote him and recommended promotion of six, one being a Republican and five being Democrats. I knew all six were giving good service and should be promoted to be postmasters of the third class without examination. One of the Republicans and one Democrat I did not know, and I did not submit any recommendation in respect to them. I stated that if he desired me so to do, I would make inquiry and let him know. I heard nothing more from him. What was the result? Both of the Republicans were promoted to third-class postmasters without examination, and an examination was ordered for all of the offices where postmasters were Democrats and all six of the Democrats were required to take the examination and were not promoted. Is that fair civil service? I know it is partisanship. I do not object to partisanship. I said years ago, and I say now, that a Republican administration ought to be administered by Republicans in office, and that a Democratic administration should be administered by Democratic officers. The civil service, however, should not be a fraud. The civil service should not be a camouflage, and should not be used as a means to deceive the people, creating a false impression and generating in the public mind a contempt for the administration of what is proposed to be just and fair and honorable, using it as an instrumentality, as a means and a method of political preferment, when all the while disclaiming that it is political.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. CARTER. It has always been customary, has it not, for the Civil Service Commission to be composed of two of the majority party and one of the minority?

Mr. PADGETT. I think that is true.

Mr. CARTER. And the gentleman is aware, of course, of the fact that at this time there is no Democrat on the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. PADGETT. I am. I will give another illustration: An examination was held for one of these six post offices and three Democrats qualified. I saw a letter from the chairman of the Republican State executive committee of Tennessee, calling on the department and asking for another examination, because there was no Republican on the eligible list; all three of the eligibles were Democrats. This letter asked for a reexamination to be held because all three were Democrats and not one of them was a Republican.

Mr. MICHENER. Was that examination held?

Mr. PADGETT. The appointment has not been made, and it has been pending weeks and weeks and weeks and no action taken.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time for debate upon this paragraph and all amendments thereto be extended for five minutes, and that that time be allotted to my colleague, Mr. WILLIAMS.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that the time has been limited by the action of the committee, is a request of that kind in order?

The CHAIRMAN. It is only in order by unanimous consent. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois? The Chair hears none, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WILLIAMS] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, when my time expired when I had the floor a few moments ago——

Mr. STEVENSON. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment before he begins?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. STEVENSON. My statement about the soldier preference was questioned, and I just want to read——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, I shall ask the gentleman to put that in afterwards. I want these five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois declines to yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I make the statement that the examinations to which applicants for second and third class post offices are subjected is not a fair test in any way of the fitness or competency of the applicant for the position. It seems that the Postmaster General has recently come to that conclusion himself, because since the 1st of January he has issued an executive order requiring all postmasters after they are confirmed by the Senate, and before they take charge of the office, to visit some central point in the State in which they reside in order to attend school for about two or three weeks and receive instructions as how to discharge the duties incumbent upon them as postmasters. I have here an article from a country newspaper out in my district, giving an account of one of our new postmasters attending school in Chicago. He was appointed postmaster, the Senate confirmed the appointment. He had taken this examination and presumably was qualified for the position. The matter had been four or five months in abeyance, when everybody was excited and speculating about what was going to happen. And after he was confirmed he received instructions to go to Chicago. Here is what the paper says they instructed him in:

> Among the many things in which the newly appointed postmasters will be instructed are: How to meet the public; the postmaster's place in the community; how to educate the public, through publicity, in the use of the mails; how to handle complaints; how to guard the mails; and the postmaster's relationship with the postal department. Newly appointed postmasters will be informed that their community's welfare depends to a very great extent upon their willingness and capacity to give it better postal service.

The thing about this that I particularly complain about, aside from the utter nonsense of the whole thing, is that the applicants have to pay their own expenses.

If the Postmaster General had not resigned and was not going out of the Cabinet shortly I would be very much inclined to advise the newly appointed postmasters of my district that are put to this expense to bring suit against him to recover the money they are forced to expend, because there is no law that requires this sort of thing. Further than that, it is making the Postal Service the laughing stock of the country. [Applause.] If we are going to have civil service, if we are going to have the merit system in post-office appointments, let us have it by law, and write the law so plain that every citizen of the Republic will know that these places are under civil service. Let us not have a pretended civil service, one that is not civil service, but a system concocted to destroy every Congressman that has a number of post offices in his district. I say to you that this executive order, and the confusion and the disgust that it has caused throughout the country, has done more to injure Republican Members of Congress and to make the next Congress of the United States Democratic than all the hard times, railroad rates, unemployment, and everything else growing out of reconstruction problems this Congress has had to meet.

So far as I am concerned, while I am not in favor of voting this appropriation out of the bill, the whole system is a farce. It was stated here by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ROACH], on Saturday, that there was an impression throughout the country that Members of Congress could control the results of these examinations. We all know Members can not do that. At least it is my experience that Members of Congress can not do it. I have no complaint to make of the Civil Service Commission. I think the commission has tried honestly to function under this order, but, unfortunately, that impression does exist. Thousands of good people believe it and they can not be convinced otherwise. So in place of having one or two people in the community disappointed, after you go through a four months' agitation awaiting the result of the examination, with all the talk and all the rumor in the community, you have everybody mad and disgusted, and it is not a very wholesome place for a Member of Congress to spend his vacation. [Applause and laughter.] Now, that is the merit system under which we are operating——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. UPSHAW. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes. His speech is very illuminating.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Illinois be extended for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I will be forced to object.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I did want to make a few observations on these schools of instruction the Postmaster General has instituted, but will defer it until another time.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the perfecting amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. STEVENSON], which the Clerk will, without objection, report.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky objects. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RHODES], which the Clerk will report.

The amendment was again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. COCKRAN. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 38, noes 73.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For necessary traveling expenses, including those of examiners acting under the direction of the commission, and for expenses of examinations and investigations held elsewhere than at Washington, and including not exceeding $1,000 for expenses of attendance at meetings of public officials when specifically directed by the commission, $20,000.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Awhile ago in discussing the question of the administration of these two provisions I made the statement that the soldier preference law was being ignored. The assertion has been made here that that applied merely to the classified civil service, and therefore this not being classified civil service they were not required to respect the soldier preference. Now, I propose to read into this record what the soldier preference act is:

That hereafter in making appointments to clerical and other positions in the executive branch of the Government in the District of Columbia or elsewhere preference shall be given to honorably discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines and widows of such, and to the wives of injured soldiers, sailors, and marines who themselves are not qualified but whose wives are qualified to hold such positions.

That is found in the Forty-first Statutes at Large of the United States at page 37. Now, the gentleman——

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEVENSON. No; I can not.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman give the date of it?

Mr. STEVENSON. The date is 1919, and, of course, it is a general law; but it has been observed from that time. Now, that is either the soldiers' preference now in existence or there is not any, because it has not been repealed and that is the only one there is. Now, I ask the gentleman whether it indicates there that that is merely the classified service—any position in the executive branch of the Government as to clerical and other positions?

That means any position in the executive branch of the Government here in the District of Columbia or elsewhere. There is absolutely no restriction to the classified civil service, and the assumption and assertion under which they have turned it down, under which they have consistently ignored it, as they have done in my district and elsewhere, is simply a begging of the question, and is one of the evidences of the humbuggery with which this is used by the Post Office Department—this order of the President—which was never intended to be used in any such way.

Mr. ROBSION. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from South Carolina yield to the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. STEVENSON. No; I regret I can not yield. I am deaf on that side.

It is the procedure under the order which the President has made that I am complaining about, and the action taken when you come to make the selection of a man who is chosen under that order, although the Civil Service Commission makes proper certification of the eligible list to the Post Office Department. [Applause.]

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Chairman, there are a great many Members on the Democratic side of the House this morning who seem to be very much exercised because of the way the civil-service law is being administered relative to the appointment of third, second, and first class postmasters. I live in a district in which there are 26 third-class post offices, 2 second-class offices, and 1 first-class. Under the Wilson Executive order, which is very similar to the one under which the postmasters are being appointed to-day, all of these offices were filled, and they were filled in each instance with a Democrat. Up until the 4th of March last there were 26 Democratic third-class postmasters in my district and not 1 Republican. Up until the 4th of March of this year, or during the eight years of the Wilson administration, there was not one rural mail carrier appointed in my district who was a Republican, although they were all appointed under a so-called civil-service examination. Of course, there were rural carriers who were Republicans, but each one was appointed prior to Mr. Wilson's inauguration.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEARNS. Yes.

Mr. LANGLEY. Will it interrupt my friend to say just a word? I have been in the gentleman's State within the past 36 hours, and I want to say that there are more mad Republicans there than I ever saw before in my life, and if the gentleman and other gentlemen from Ohio want to get back, I think they had better get onto the situation. [Laughter.] I refer both to senatorial candidates and candidates for the House.

Mr. KEARNS. I think we are onto the situation in Ohio, and so far as I am individually concerned, I think these men who were appointed ought to have been Democrats during the eight years of the Wilsonian period; but from now on I think the incumbents of those positions ought to be Republicans, and, so far as I am concerned, I am going to try to see that they at least get a square deal. In my district the people are almost equally divided between Republicans and Democrats.

I realize further that I receive a good many Democratic votes. But those men recognize the fact that they were entitled to the post offices under a Democratic administration, and now they are just as much in earnest in saying that the Republicans ought to fill those places during a Republican administration. This is only fair, and I know of no one there who is disputing this position. The Democrats have had their eight-year inning and it was right. I do not know why gentlemen on that side of the aisle should feel so exercised and get all excited about it, because it has been a common occurrence heretofore, and they know it. It was always true during the past eight years. The appointment of Democrats to postmasterships in the first, second, and third class offices only stopped on the 4th of March last, and you gentlemen all know it, and when you talk about this question as you have been discussing it this morning you are not in earnest about it, and you know it. You try now to frighten Republicans into doing something that you refused to do when in power.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEARNS. Yes.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I believe that "to the victors belong the spoils," but I do not think the Postmaster General ought to claim that he is pursuing a nonpartisan policy.

Mr. KEARNS. You always did exactly as is being done now. The Republicans took the examination when the Democrats were in power, and in many instances they got on the eligible list, but not one of them was appointed under the Democratic administration that ended March 4.

Mr. LANGLEY. Not one of them was appointed in my district.

Mr. KINCHELOE. The gentleman is mistaken. The policy of the Democratic Postmaster General was to appoint the highest man. I do not think there was an exception.

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Chairman, I am sorry, but I do not yield further to the gentleman from Kentucky. I have already stated that in my district 26 appointments were made under the Wilson Executive order and they were all Democrats. You held an examination in order to create an eligible list, but the highest man was not appointed. One of the highest three who was a Democrat was appointed. That was the case throughout the United States where a Democrat was on the eligible list, and now when you are complaining about that system to-day you are not sincere about it. You talk only to mislead the country.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pending amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa is recognized.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, we have listened to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. STEVENSON] reading a statute which he and every other Member of this House ought to be able to interpret at once. He says it requires a soldier to have the preference for any civil office under the Government. If that is so, a soldier would have the preference for a Cabinet position, and, of course, the positions of judges, collectors, and commissioners must be filled by soldiers. The statute to which he refers, as in the case of similar statutes, has never been interpreted as applying to offices requiring the confirmation of the Senate, and certainly it could not, because confirmation by the Senate could not depend upon the proposition that he refers to. The Post Office Department has not violated the provisions of this statute, for it has no application to appointments made by the President.

Now, as has been stated by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEARNS] who preceded me, what a farce it is to talk, as gentlemen on the other side have been talking, concerning the manner in which the post offices have been filled. Some of the gentlemen are frank enough to say that they do not find fault with the policy under which the post offices have been administered, and others have frankly admitted that they had no fault to find with the Civil Service Commission. Certainly, under the Republican administration, we have had no such scandals as that which occurred in the last administration, when one of the members of the Civil Service Commission resigned because of interference with his administration of the law by members of the administration.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. LANGLEY. The trouble about it has been that the Republicans have been a little bit too honest in the enforcement of this law while our Demorcatic friends have not. [Laughter.]

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes; that has been one of the troubles. The Civil Service Commission has been perfectly fair. Out in Iowa, in a town where three men out of four are Republicans, but in which few of them choose to apply, I know of one place where all three of those certified on the eligible list were Democrats.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. In a moment. In my own district Democrats have repeatedly been certified and been put on the eligible list, and in many instances first on the ground of their having had experience in the post office before. And what a farce it is for gentlemen on the other side to talk about the presidential order, under which we are now operating, being mere camouflage when the order is practically the same as the one made by President Wilson, of which they never complained. There never has been under either administration any claim that the postmasters were appointed under civil-service rules. Everybody knows they were not under Wilson and are not now.

Mr. KNUTSON. During six of the eight years that Mr. Wilson was President a man named Lynch was Democratic national committeeman in Minnesota. At a certain point the patrons of the post office petitioned him for the reappointment of a Republican postmaster, as no Democrat wanted the position. Mr. Lynch wrote back that if there was no Democrat who would take the office he would import one, and I honor him for that sentiment.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. In the case in which the gentleman said the three eligibles were Democrats has the Post Office Department called on the Civil Service Commission for a rerating?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Not so far as I know.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Does not the gentleman know that in some cases where all the eligibles happened to be Democrats the Postmaster General has called on the Civil Service Commission for a rerating?

Mr. SNYDER. It was done during the Democratic administration.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It was, and the rules then and the rules now permit a rerating to be asked for; but, replying to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], I will say that I do not know of any such case.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I do.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I know that the Republican Members of the House were asked to recommend Democrats because only Democrats had been certified, and I do know that under the last administration the situation was so bad with reference to repeated demands from Democratic politicians that the Civil Service Commission should certify men who were not entitled to be certified that one of the members of the Civil Service Commission actually threw up his hands and resigned in disgust.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I know something about the civil service, as I was connected with it for a long time. There is no question about requests for rerating being granted. Those requests are granted, not only to Members of Congress, but they are granted to other citizens when they ask it. The applicant himself can have a rerating; that is, he can have his papers reviewed upon request. Of course, they rarely ever change the rating, as they assume that they are infallible.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That is true, but they are not rerated simply because there happen to be three Democrats on the eligible list.

Mr. LANGLEY. If I had my way about it, I would abolish all this stuff and give post offices to good, deserving, efficient Republicans. [Applause.]

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman from Iowa yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. In the case in which there were three Democrats on the eligible list, has one of them been appointed?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No; but one of them will be.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Has either one of them been recommended for appointment?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. One of them will be. There is nothing else to do. Why can not gentlemen be fair and admit they are criticizing what they approved under a Democratic administration.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. This seems to be somewhat of a moving-picture show of the Post Office Department that we are having to-day.

Mr. LANGLEY. And we have the star performer on the screen now.

Mr. SEARS. I want to be frank and honest with my colleagues, as I have always tried to be. I voted against placing postmasters under the civil-service rules and regulations because I believed that "to the victors belong the spoils." I would vote the same way again to-day. But the Democratic President did not see fit to follow my vote nor the vote of Congress. So far as I am concerned, in my district the civil-service rules and regulations relating to first, second, and third class postmasters were strictly followed, as I do not believe in making a farce of anything. What I am protesting against to-day is the camouflage that is being used to make people believe civil service is being strictly followed when it is not. I want to be entirely frank. I believe you Republicans are entitled to the spoils, but be open and frank about it. In my State it happened that an examination was held, but nobody passed, and the man lowest on the list, he lacking something like 30 per cent of passing the examination, was certified by the Post Office Department to the President, and his name was sent in, and he was confirmed by the Senate.

I am making no charges against the Civil Service Commission, for as far as I know they are complying with the law. They have certainly dealt fairly with me so far as I know.

Mr. LANGLEY. If the gentleman will allow an interruption, I desire to concur in that statement as to the commission. I am not seeking to indict it, but I am disgusted with the extent to which it has been extended, which is clearly beyond the limits of reason, justice, and common sense, and if you, my colleagues, do not realize it allow me to modestly suggest that you had better find out about it if you want to come back to Congress.

What case was that the gentleman referred to a moment ago? I do not approve of some things our administration is doing, but I do in the main and I want to defend it.

Mr. SEARS. I prefer for reasons best known to myself not to mention the place.

Mr. LANGLEY. All right; I will not press the point. What grounds was there given for the certification to which the gentleman referred a moment ago?

Mr. SEARS. That it was an emergency case, and they did not have time to hold another examination.

Mr. LANGLEY. I venture to predict that he will make the best postmaster you ever had, because under this foolish system it is a tribute to the intelligence and capacity of an applicant to fail to pass it.

Mr. SEARS. Perhaps he will, but I want to say that in this case it so happens to be pretty nearly a Republican precinct. I am frank to say I do not know the politics of the postmaster who was in, but I do know the people, both Republicans and Democrats, of that city petitioned me to have him certified from a fourth-class office to postmaster of a third class, and I sent in the petition and he was certified. Therefore I do not know whether the man that was postmaster was a Democrat or a Republican. But the order does not call for the appointment of a postmaster unless he is an eligible on the list. They could have appointed the other man if they wanted to, as he was on the civil-service list, but they should not flagrantly violate the proclamation of the President. If you are going to have civil service, have it, but if not, go back to the rule which I subscribe to, "to the victor belongs the spoils." As long as you do that I shall not object. What the emergency may have been, I do not know. I have no fight with the Republican chairman of my State who represents the "Black and Tans." The responsibility is his, and it will be for the people to decide. What I want to know is why does the department refer such a case to anyone? But the Post Office Department writes me, wanting to know my opinion, and when I give it I find that the same was referred to the Republican chairman of the State committee, and evidently whether the one he wants passes or not he gets the appointment. I do not believe the Republicans will applaud any such violation of the proclamation of the President or of the law. I do not know the man who was successful, and therefore have no fight to make against him. I am simply protesting against such methods.

In conclusion let me say I have always found the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY], who interrupted me in the beginning, to be a fearless fighter and always in favor of a fair and square deal.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate upon this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

Mr. LANGLEY. I hope the gentleman will make it 15.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I make it 15.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana moves that all debate upon the paragraph close in 15 minutes.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I am among the number who believe that the best postmasters can be obtained by appointment on recommendation of Members of Congress, because that fixes the responsibility. I think that Congressmen are better acquainted with the applicants; they know they will be held responsible; and I think in the end will select the best postmasters; but in order that a correct record may be kept as we go along, I wish to call attention to some things that have transpired. When President Wilson entered upon his first term, in the appointment of first, second, and third class postmasters, he pursued the same course practically that had been pursued by all preceding Presidents of both parties.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. No; my time is too limited. During the 1916 presidential campaign letters were addressed to Mr. Hughes and Mr. Wilson asking them, in substance, if elected, whether they would issue an Executive order putting first, second, and third class postmasters under the Civil Service Commission in their appointments. Both of them replied that they would do so. I think both of them made a mistake, but they both agreed to do it.

So that immediately after his inauguration for the second term President Wilson issued an order to that effect, and further providing that applicants receiving the highest grade should be appointed. After that order went into effect there were something over 2,200 postmasters of the first, second, and third class appointed. Of that number over 900 were Republicans because they headed the eligible registers, and they were accordingly appointed.

Now, when President Harding came into office, after several months travail, during which it was frequently discussed in the newspapers and everywhere that they were considering the question of continuing President Wilson's order, or modifying it, or frankly reverting to the spoils system, they finally decided upon the plan of adopting President Wilson's order with certain modifications. One very important modification was a provision that not the man who made the highest rating should be appointed, but any one of three highest could be appointed. Everybody knew what that meant, and we know from the results what it meant.

Now, that is all right, as has been suggested, for the Republicans to take over all the offices, but they ought not to deceive the public and members of their own party on that proposition. It is not fair to the public and it is not fair to the Republicans themselves to be pretending that appointments are determined upon merit and by the grades made on examination.

There has been a good deal of discussion of the question of the appointment of ex-service men. I am not expecting any Democrats to be appointed in my district, and I am not sore because they have not been appointed. But I want to give you an instance of an ex-service man in an examination that was held for postmaster at Petersburg. The Civil Service Commission reported an eligible list of three names. The first man on the list was C. C. London, a Democrat and an ex-service man, of exemplary character and habits, and fully qualified. The second man on the list was Macon Hart, a Republican ex-service man, a man of the very highest character, a man of exemplary habits, and entirely qualified. Now, not only the Democrat that headed the list was turned down, but the second man on the list, a Republican and an ex-service man, was turned down, and the third man on the register, who was a Republican politician, but not an ex-service man, was appointed. Assuming that there was sufficient justification from the Republican viewpoint in turning down a Democratic ex-service man, what is the justification for turning down a Republican ex-service man of excellent character and qualifications in order to appoint a civilian who had made a lower grade in an examination which was pretended to be held for the purpose of determining the qualifications of respective applicants? [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would suggest that the time has been fixed by a vote of the committee.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. But the gentleman asks unanimous consent to have that time extended.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will put the request.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I shall have to object to it for the reason that other gentlemen indicated they wanted five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes, that time not to be taken from the 15 minutes.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I shall have to object to that, because the gentleman in charge of the bill could not extend the time for the benefit of one or two other gentlemen.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky objects.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Chairman, I am an Andrew Jackson Democrat, and I believe that to the victor belong the spoils. I am in favor of the Republicans filling the national public offices with the proper kind of men so long as they are in power, because that party was successful at the last presidential election.

The great and good Dr. FESS, of Ohio, who represents a congressional district in this Congress, and who is the spiritual guide and mental advisor if not the financial bulwark of the Republican Congressional Committee, on several occasions uttered the most doleful lamentations and direful prophesies about the way the wicked and unregenerate Democrats were violating the civil-service laws during Wilson's administration. During this Republican administration he has been as silent on that subject as the Egyptian sphinx, which has stood speechless for centuries in the trackless Lybian Desert. His tongue cleaves to the roof of his mouth and his fancy takes flight far away on magical wings to other and less embarrassing subjects. When the Democrats were in power he was fervently in favor of a strict enforcement of civil-service laws, but since the Republicans are in a majority, he seems to be in favor of abrogating those laws entirely. When Democrats are in power, he is in favor of civil service; but when Republicans are in a majority, he is against civil service. I judge this to be his position because of his sudden and death-like silence on this subject.

Mr. Wilson issued an Executive order to the effect that the applicant under civil-service laws for the position of postmaster, receiving the highest rating, should be appointed regardless of political affiliation, provided there was no charge of wrongdoing proved against the reputation of such applicant. I can speak only for myself, and in my case that order was adhered to strictly.

Harding, soon after he came into office, revoked the order of Mr. Wilson requiring that the person standing highest on the eligible register should be appointed regardless of politics, provided no substantial charge was proved against the character of the applicant, and issued an Executive order to the effect that in examinations for post offices of the third class business experience and fitness should be rated at 50 per cent and all other requirements put together, at 50 per cent; that in examinations for post offices of the first and second class education and training should be rated at 20 per cent and business experience and fitness at 80 per cent. By this order Harding restored the spoils system and made a farce of the merit system. He turned the clock of civil-service reform back and opened the way to the post offices for ward heelers and guttersnipe politicians, who do not have the good of the public service in view, but are seeking only to advance their own political fortunes.

By making the rating in post-office examinations depend on alleged business qualifications as reported by a Republican post-office inspector on a basis of 80 and 50 per cent, it is quite an easy matter to place qualified Democrats and Republicans not desirable to the Post Office Department below the rating required to get on the eligible list, and this, I believe, is constantly being done.

And, besides, men who for years have not been on the eligible list are constantly, I believe, being restored to that list by Executive order in order to be appointed postmasters without examination.

At Goldsboro, N. C., a prominent gentleman made a recommendation to the Postmaster General that a certain man be appointed postmaster at that place. On June 21, 1921, Dr. Hubert Work, First Assistant Postmaster General, wrote the gentleman who made the recommendation, among other things, as follows:

> In reply I desire to say that at the expiration of the term of postmaster at this office (Goldsboro) on July 21 next the Civil Service Commission will be requested to hold an examination for postmastership in accordance with the Executive order of May 10, 1921.

Goldsboro is a city of over 10,000 inhabitants, but no examination for postmaster at that place was held, although the letter of Dr. Work expressly promised that the Civil Service Commission would be requested to hold one. Anyone knows if such request had been made by the Post Office Department the Civil Service Commission would have had the examination held. Instead a man who formerly had a civil-service status in the mail service, but whose eligibility had expired two years or more before, and who happened to be chairman of the Republican county committee, was restored to the eligible register by Executive order and appointed postmaster at Goldsboro without any examination whatever.

The letter to the person at Goldsboro, who is a minister of the gospel, assuring him that an examination would be requested of the Civil Service Commission was, in my opinion, a deliberate fabrication made with intent to deceive, and I believe the comedian to be Postmaster General Hays, and not Dr. Work, the moving-picture barnstorming actor who directed the entire farcical scenario.

In a letter written by Dr. Work dated August 31, 1921, to the Civil Service Commission in regard to the post office at Goldsboro, he requested the commission to arrange the civil-service status of Simpkins, who was afterwards appointed postmaster, so that he could be appointed postmaster, and stated:

In view of the experience of Mr. Simpkins and the fact that he is strongly recommended locally for this position (by the Republican county committee, of course, of which Simpkins was chairman), the department desires to nominate him for the position of postmaster.

Simpkins was assistant postmaster at Goldsboro on a salary of $1,300 a year. On May 16, 1915, he was demoted because of inefficiency to the position of a clerk at a salary of $1,100 per annum. This demotion was made on recommendation of a post-office inspector, who stated in his report that the work done by Simpkins was not satisfactory; that he did not have sufficient interest in the work done, and would not cooperate with the postmaster in the work to be done, and he is the man restored to a civil-service status by Executive order in face of the fact that he was demoted for inefficiency, and afterwards lost his civil-service status and was appointed postmaster without any examination whatever.

I have it on perfectly reliable authority, which authority will be produced if this Republican Congress will order an investigation of the actions of the Civil Service Commission and the Post Office Department under this Republican administration, that the private secretary to Dr. Work, a Mr. Johnston, I believe his name is, stated to A. P. Richards, who is connected with the Civil Service Commission, that he was returning the eligible list for postmaster at a certain town, with the statement that he noticed a certain person was not on the eligible list; that such person is our friend and we would like to have him on the list, and see if you can not revise the list so as to include our friend.

From the above statements it seems perfectly patent that there is a well-defined working agreement between the Civil Service Commission and the Post Office Department as to eligible lists for post-office appointments, or, rather, I believe the commission obeys the requests of the department as to the eligible lists, fearing if it does not do so the heads of its members will fall into the official waste basket of the Post Office Department.

On October 21, 1921, the eligible list for postmaster at Brownsville, Ky., in the district I represent, was submitted to me by the Post Office Department. It contained a list of three names, all soldiers in the late war, two of them Republicans and one a Democrat. No appointment has yet been made. I understand that the eligible Democrat and one Republican eligible, tired of waiting on the department, have obtained other positions. In consequence another Republican is next on the list. He is a man who is favored by the department, because he is a so-called organization Republican connected with the county organization. He is a civilian never in the Army and stands below the soldier on the eligible list. His eligibility rating is 78.40, while that of the soldier is 86.10, that of the soldier being 7.70 higher than that of the civilian. There is nothing, as far as I know, against the character of either, yet over three months have elapsed since the Post Office Department received the certified list, and no appointment has been made. Probably the department has returned the list to the Civil Service Commission with the request to so arrange the list that "our friend" at Brownsville can be appointed in defiance of civil service laws.

At Bowling Green, in the district I represent, an examination for postmaster was held August 9, 1921, over five months ago, and no eligible list of applicants has been furnished to the department, so I am informed, and I have not received notice of any certification. I have learned that the present acting postmaster, a lady of the highest standing and education who took the examination, was not placed on the eligible list because of lack of business qualifications. She has been postmaster for two years or more, and for a number of years was a teacher in the high school at that place and has splendid business qualifications, and I believe, though I have failed to find out from the department or the commission what the rating of any of the candidates is, she stood first on the list. So well has she conducted the office, a second-class office in a town of 10,000 population, that an official connected with the Civil Service Commission informed me personally that her record as postmaster is "well near perfect." Probably in the face of these facts she will as a smoke screen be placed at the bottom of the list of eligibles, and the Civil Service Commission will be requested by the Post Office Department to so arrange the eligible list without regard to examination or qualification that "our friend" can be appointed, who, of course, will be some one connected with the rotten Republican organization, while all first-class Republicans can do will be to look sad and "cuss."

A few days since I received affidavits and a personal letter from a prominent Republican and coal dealer in a town in my own county who receives a large amount of mail, protesting against the appointment of an applicant for postmaster at that place. These affidavits were all made by Republicans of that town and charged the applicant, when he was formerly postmaster at that place, with having assaulted a woman in the post office one night, with the intent to outrage her. The charge was freely and publicly made; the matter was brought to the attention of the grand jury, but no indictment was returned. It was openly charged that the friends and relatives of the applicant, assisted by the Republican county attorney, had sufficient influence with the grand jury to prevent an indictment. This matter created considerable excitement in the town where the assault is alleged to have occurred, and much talk throughout the county. The grand jury was caustically criticized for not returning an indictment. I know nothing as to the truth of the charge, but do know personally it was made and also that the grand jury failed to indict and the criticism of the grand jury, as stated above, was made. I also know the case caused much talk over the county, and a great many persons believe the applicant was guilty.

The featherweight Republican Senator who misrepresents Kentucky in the United States Senate, and whom many people believe is an actual resident of Ohio, and whose election numbers believe was secured by devious and fraudulent methods, is referee in appointments of postmasters and rural-route carriers in 8 of the 11 congressional districts of Kentucky.

I concluded before I filed the last affidavits I received concerning the charge made against the applicant for postmaster in the town above referred to that I would inform the alleged Senator as a matter of courtesy of the charge so that he might have an opportunity to make an investigation, if he desired. I called him on the telephone and began to lay the case before him, but before I could much more than get started he got mad, flew off the handle, and roughly informed me that the organization down there, meaning the Republican organization of Muhlenberg County, had indorsed the applicant, that he—the featherweight Senator—knew all about it, and that he would not believe a d—n word I said. He used that language over the telephone at a safe distance.

The Republican organization of Muhlenberg County some few years since procured the nomination and election of a penitentiary convict to a county office, and probably that has the indorsement of the Republican Senator from Kentucky. Muhlenberg County has a normal Republican majority of about 1,800 and gave Harding a majority of 1,700, but at the last election many of the decent Republicans in that county became disgusted with the way affairs had been managed by the "organization" and the entire Democratic county ticket was elected by a majority of 300. It is on such organizations that the Republican Senator from Kentucky and the Post Office Department rely for information in the appointment of postmasters, and not on civil-service examinations, which, in my opinion, are made to high tail it to the high and uncut timber when such appointments are under consideration. The comedian to be, Postmaster General Hays, has informed what he evidently thinks is an ignorant and confiding public that politics is not considered at all in the appointment of postmasters. Of course not, only "our friends" are considered, without regard to civil service laws. That is as plain as the trunk of an elephant.

I am in favor of the repeal of civil service laws regarding postmasters and rural-route carriers at least. The civil service law as administered by the Republican Party is a farce and a fraud. Everyone knows the law is being constantly violated, notwithstanding the pious denials of Mr. Hays. The Republicans are in power. They are entitled to the patronage and should fill the offices without resorting to double dealing and false pretenses in a futile effort to deceive the public into the belief that they are enforcing the law when they know full well they are not so doing. The civil-service law as violated by the present Republican autocracy is made a cloak to cover deceit, a mask to hide double dealing, and is building a high towering monument to the hypocrisy of the present alleged Republican administration.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD which I made on Saturday last.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

COMMISSION OF FINE ARTS.

For expenses made necessary by the act entitled "An act establishing a Commission of Fine Arts," approved May 17, 1910, including the purchase of periodicals, maps, and books of reference, to be disbursed on vouchers approved by the commission by the officer in charge of public buildings and grounds, who shall be the secretary and shall act as the executive officer of said commission, $6,000: Provided, That no person shall receive compensation hereunder at a rate exceeding $1,800 per annum and only one person shall be employed at that rate: Provided further, That no part of this sum shall be expended for traveling expenses other than those incurred by members of the commission for actual travel only in going to and returning from Washington to attend the meetings of the commission.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the two provisos as being new legislation and as changing existing law, and I also make the point of order against the whole paragraph. Mr. Chairman, the law of 1910, providing for the appointment of this commission, reads as follows:

It shall be the duty of such commission to advise upon the location of statues, fountains, and monuments in the public squares, streets, and parks in the District of Columbia, and upon the selection of models for statues, fountains, and monuments erected under the authority of the United States, and upon the selection of artists for the execution of the same.

It shall be the duty of the officers charged by law to determine such questions in each case to call upon such advice. The foregoing provisions of this act shall not apply to the Capitol Building of the United States and buildings of the Library of Congress. The commission shall advise generally upon questions of art as required to do so by the President or any committee of either House of Congress.

Under Presidents Taft, Wilson, and Harding Executive orders have been made in accordance with that statute. I shall discuss first the last proviso:

Provided further, That no part of this sum shall be expended for traveling expenses other than those incurred by members of the commission for actual travel only in going to and returning from Washington to attend the meetings of the commission.

It is a rule of statutory construction with which, of course, the Chair is familiar, that a statute must, if possible, be so construed that its operation shall carry out the legislative intent. The proviso which I have quoted would, if made law, absolutely prevent the carrying out of the legislative intent.

For the original law requires, among other things, that the commission shall pass upon models for statues, but these models, Mr. Chairman, such, for example, as those of the Cavalry and Artillery groups of the Grant Memorial—and, by the way, they are said to be, from an artistic point of view, the finest of their kind in the world—could not have been so inspected because to inspect the models the members of the commission were compelled to travel a considerable distance from this city to the studio of the sculptor, Schroeder. It would have been impossible for the commission to pass upon them without going to the studio, because the models were too heavy to be brought here. Everyone knew when this law was enacted that if the commission were to do its work it would be compelled to visit many places beside Washington. Testimony taken before this committee was uncontradicted that if the commission were to perform the duties assigned it by the act of 1910 it must go where these great models are being made, but if you limit them to coming and going from Washington, then, if compelled to go elsewhere, they must defray their own expenses.

Mr. Chairman, the commission has from its inception always numbered among its members some of the most distinguished architects, painters, landscape architects, and sculptors in this country, and these men have always given the Government their professional advice free of charge. And the testimony, Mr. Chairman, is uncontradicted that these very distinguished men, who, out of pure love of public service and desire to help the city of Washington to become what it ought to be, the most attractive capital in the world, have come to this city and gone to New York and other places and each time paid out more money than they were allowed under the appropriation. The testimony is uncontradicted, that it will be impossible——

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order that the gentleman is not discussing the point of order. He is discussing the merits of this proposition.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I am simply suggesting, if the gentleman will bear with me, some facts which demonstrate what must have been the intent of the legislators who enacted this statute. It was meant to be a statute possible of effective operation. It was meant to be a statute under which these eminent professional men could see the models before the statues themselves were cast in bronze or carved in marble, and sent here to be erected in the city of Washington.

Mr. KING. Will the gentleman yield, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. KING. What does the gentleman mean by the word "models"?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I mean, for example, such models as Schroeder had in his studio of the cavalry and artillery groups of the Grant memorial. First sculptors make clay models, enlarge them, change them countless times, and then send for this commission, and its members go as a body to inspect and advise. Before the stage of the bronze cast is reached, it is of prime importance, if this great commission is to do the work which Congress intended it to do, to go where those models are made, because they can not be brought here.

Mr. KING. Was not there an original model made in clay, or some other substance, of this whole Grant memorial and passed upon by this commission? Else why was not the contract made with the artist, without running over this country at great expense to the United States, and going to New York by the way of Detroit, and so forth, for the examination of these models?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The gentleman has assumed some facts that do not exist. It has not been at great expense. The greatest annual appropriation made for the commission was only $10,000; and the gentleman from Illinois could not get men, like Burnham, St. Gaudens, Henry Bacon, the architect of the unrivaled Lincoln memorial, or any other of the eminent men of the commission to consult and advise him professionally without paying from $100 to $500 a day. But these architects and painters and sculptors have all contributed their advice to the Government gratis.

The gentleman said they traveled all over the country, to Detroit and elsewhere——

Mr. KING. To New York by way of Detroit.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Not at all.

Mr. KING. Have you examined the vouchers?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I have seen that record and read it. The gentleman is mistaken. I know to what he refers. And I regret very much that I was not in the Chamber, Mr. Chairman, the other day when one of the fiercest, most unjustifiable attacks ever made upon a lot of exemplary men was made upon this commission in debate here. The gentleman from Illinois refers to what was said in that debate about Mr. Moore, the chairman of the commission. Mr. Moore happened to be in Detroit, and was called to New York City for something growing out of the work of the commission.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I must insist, Mr. Chairman, on the point of order that the gentleman is out of order in not discussing the point of order.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I was simply attempting to reply to——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to hear the gentleman from Wisconsin on the point of order on the second proviso which, as the Chair understood, the gentleman from Wisconsin was addressing himself to first.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I make the point of order on both of them. But the second proviso, Mr. Chairman, will make absolutely impossible the work of the commission.

The CHAIRMAN. May the Chair inquire, Does not, as a matter of law, the limitation apply if the Committee of the Whole sees fit to make the limitation? Could they not deny traveling expenses altogether if they saw fit, as a matter of law——

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Does the Chair mean to deny——

The CHAIRMAN (continuing). And refuse to pay any expenses at all, under a limitation; that no part of the limitation shall be paid for expenses, or they can make it $4, or make it $10, in a limitation on the amount of money used?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Of course, assuming that a commission like this, called upon to perform the duties required by statute, must——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that, and the Chair is inquiring as to this: Is not the question addressing itself to the discretion and judgment of the committee rather than to the Chair on the point of order?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I will answer the Chair in this way: The original law makes provisions touching expenses.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes; it does.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman is in error about that. It specifically makes provision for the traveling expenses of the commission.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes; but even if by the present law traveling expenses of the commission were to be allowed, the word "only" and the expression "only in going to and returning from Washington" is new legislation.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is the wording of the law.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. No. Not including the word "only," Mr. Chairman. "Only to and from Washington" is vital in this connection. If it can be only to and from Washington it absolutely cripples the work of the commission. The word "only" inserted there makes all the difference. It is new legislation.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It is a limitation, is it not?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. No; it is not a limitation of the amount, because no person knows what their traveling expenses would be without it.

Mr. WASON. Is it not a limitation upon the appropriation by just confining it to going to and returning from Washington?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Not upon the amount for the reason I have just given.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin desire to be heard further on the point of order on the first proviso?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. No. The provisos are new legislation.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I do not agree with the gentleman from Wisconsin that either of the provisos is legislation. I am decidedly of the opinion that they are limitations within the rule of the House.

I wish, however, to invite the attention of the Chair to the language in the third line, which reads, "Including the purchase of periodicals, maps, and books of reference," and I desire to invite the attention of the Chair to the further language, beginning at line 7, "who shall be the secretary and shall act as the executive officer of said commission."

About two years ago, when this item of the bill was under consideration, $10,500 was sought to be appropriated—$10,000 for the general expenses of the commission and $500 with which to buy periodicals, maps, and books of reference. When the item was reached I made a point of order to the $500 with which to buy periodicals, maps, and books of reference, and it went out on a point of order because the act does not authorize the commission to purchase periodicals, maps, and books of reference.

The reason why I made the point of order is that one of these commissioners is a high-salaried employee in the Congressional Library, with every book and map that they would want within their reach, and I do not believe that this item of "periodicals, maps, and books of reference" should be duplicated and another $500 appropriated for their purchase when the very things for which they asked this money were, as I say, easily within their reach because one of their principal officers is a high-salaried man in the Library of Congress. The item went out on a point of order then, but it is now included in another form.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman cite the date of that decision?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. It was about two years ago. But the point of order was conceded by the chairman of the subcommittee having the bill in charge, and the item went out on a point of order.

Now I wish the Chair to read carefully the rest of the paragraph down to the "$6,000," and then I wish to make some comment on that language. If the Chair will read the act he will see that the commission is given a secretary. If the commission is given a secretary it has a right to appoint a secretary. The act creating this commission is silent as to who that secretary shall be, but this language designates a particular individual who shall be secretary, and therefore it is legislation. And it is objectionable because of the possibility of designating one to be secretary with a salary of $1,800, and that might make two salaries, in conflict with the law to the effect that there shall not be more than one where the two combined would exceed $2,000.

This language is legislation in two respects: First, that this bill authorizes the purchase of periodicals, maps, and books of reference; and, next, that it designates what person shall be secretary of this commission, when the law is silent on that subject.

The CHAIRMAN. Would not the commission, the Chair asks, in selecting the secretary be authorized under the general authority that they have of selecting this or any other person?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. They may select this individual, perhaps, but Congress can not say to the commission that they shall select any particular man when by the act creating the commission they have been given the option themselves to say who he shall be. Bear in mind, if you please, that the act is silent as to what individual shall be secretary. Here is attempted legislation to designate who that secretary shall be.

The CHAIRMAN. The language of the statute is that "said commission shall have a secretary." It does not say by whom appointed or in what manner he shall be secured.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. If Congress had reserved to itself the right to name the secretary, it would have been in the act. That not being in the act, the only interpretation is that the commission can select its secretary, and it is legislation for Congress now to attempt to do so, when it did not do so at the time of the passage of the act.

And then, again, Mr. Chairman, there is nothing in the act creating a Fine Arts Commission which authorizes that commission to spend one dollar for the purchase of periodicals, maps, and books of reference.

Upon those two propositions I submit the question to the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The act providing for this commission provides that the traveling expenses of the commission shall be paid to and from the city of Washington. The second proviso, to which the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr COOPER] makes a point of order, provides:

That no part of this sum shall be expended for traveling expenses other than those incurred by members of the commission for actual travel only going to and returning from Washington to attend the meetings of the commission.

The Chair thinks that is a limitation on the appropriation and is within the right of the Committee on Appropriations in making up the bill.

The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] makes the point of order that maps, books, and so forth, may not be purchased under the general authority creating this commission.

It has been the practice throughout the history of Congress for appropriating committees to provide for books, maps, and such other necessities as the agencies created by the Government might need. The Chair thinks that the authorization for the purchase of these is within the general scope of the authority of the act.

As to the designation of the secretary, contained in line 7, page 9, that is clearly legislative.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, may I suggest that the second paragraph of the act creating the commission provides that the secretary shall be the executive officer, in the very language of this bill?

The CHAIRMAN. That is not the matter that seems to the Chair to be outside of the purview of the act. That portion of the provision of the bill which seems to the Chair to go outside of the act is that the secretary shall be the officer in charge of Public Buildings and Grounds. It seems to the Chair that that is an extension of the act.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No; it is not an extension of the act. I wish to read the paragraph in the organic act.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has the organic act before him.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It says—

To meet the expense——

The CHAIRMAN. Evidently the gentleman from Indiana is quoting from the appropriation act of 1910.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I am quoting from the organic act of May, 1910, the appropriation made necessary by that act. It provides—

To meet the expenses made necessary by the act approved May 17, 1910, entitled "An act establishing a commission of fine arts," to be disbursed by the officer in charge of Public Buildings and Grounds, on vouchers approved by the commission, who shall be the secretary, and shall act as the executive officer of said commission, $10,000.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the appropriation act of 1910, to which a point of order might have been made at that time.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I wish to call the attention of the Chair, so that there may be no mistake about it. I have an exact copy of the act before me, and the second paragraph reads:

That to meet the expense made necessary by this act an expenditure of $10,000 a year is hereby authorized.

Now the limitation that we are putting on in the first proviso here is limiting the amount that may be expended out of this sum in the employment of any of its employees. This is the fact of the business, that the secretary under the act is Superintendent of Public Buildings and Grounds, who happens now to be Col. Sherrill. He gets no salary at all; but under the original act they are authorized to employ such employees as they may think necessary to carry out the act.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Is that a limitation on anything in the original act?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It is a limitation on the manner in which that may be expended. On every appropriation bill that passes this House we put limitations, and one of the great complaints is because we have not put enough of these limitations upon appropriation bills.

The CHAIRMAN. But may the Chair call the attention of the gentleman from Indiana to the fact that he is still quoting from the appropriation act of May 17, 1910, not the substantive law creating the Commission of Fine Arts. The act creating the Commission of Fine Arts has had read into it language that does not appear in volume 36 of the public laws.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. May I inquire as to which one of these provisos to which the point of order has been raised the Chair is now addressing himself?

The CHAIRMAN. That which provides that the secretary shall be the officer in charge of buildings and grounds.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The point being that a secretary is authorized, but there is no authority for designating any particular person as secretary.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Do I understand then that the point which the Chair has immediately in mind is the word—

Who shall be the secretary and shall act as the executive officer of said commission.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; taken together with the words after the comma, in line 5—to be disbursed on vouchers approved by the commission by the officer in charge of public buildings and grounds, who shall be the secretary and shall act as the executive officer of said commission.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That is the exact language that has been carried in this appropriation from time immemorial, and as I stated the limitation that follows there has no application to any salary, because no salary is paid to the secretary.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not a question of salary, it is a question of the appropriation act designating the person who shall be secretary.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I do not understand that any point of order is raised as to those words.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I raised that point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky made the point of order against those words.

The Chair overrules the point of order as to the second and third paragraphs and overrules the point of order as to the purchase of books and maps and sustains the point of order as to the designation of the secretary. The language that will go out will be—by the officer in charge of public buildings and grounds, who shall be the secretary and shall act as the executive officer of said commission.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I move to amend the paragraph by striking out "$6,000," in line 8, and inserting "$10,000," the amount heretofore carried.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin: Page 9, line 8, strike out the figures "$6,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$10,000."

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The whole paragraph has just gone out on a point of order, as I understand.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the points of order to be made to particular parts of the paragraph.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. But if a point of order is sustained to any part of the paragraph, it reaches the whole paragraph. I was just endeavoring to facilitate matters by suggesting that the chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD], offer an amendment with those words eliminated, so that the motion made by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] would be in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman from Kentucky to make a specific point of order against these specific words, and that it was not made against the whole paragraph.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I was making my point of order to the language the chairman has just sustained. I was endeavoring to be regular, and if I am mistaken, I will readily acquiesce in the ruling of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is entirely regular. The Chair understood he was making a point of order against the language to which he directed his remarks. The gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] spoke upward of three hours in opening this debate. I listened to him and was interested and entertained for an hour or more, until called out of the Chamber to go to my office. After remaining there nearly an hour I returned and heard the gentleman conclude his speech. Members informed me that during my absence the gentleman from Indiana had bitterly attacked the Commission of Fine Arts, and I found this information confirmed next day by the report of his speech in the RECORD. Although never myself associated in any way with that great commission, I have nevertheless through reading and personal observation become fairly well acquainted with its history and with what it has done here; and believing, as I do, that its work has been of inestimable value to the city of Washington and that the attack made upon it by my friend from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] was unwarranted and did the commission a serious injustice, I ask for 20 minutes to reply.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to continue for 20 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I know something about the work of this commission.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. No; I can not.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I can help the gentleman some by saying that I made no attack on the board or commission.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I knew the gentleman would deny some of this.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I did make an attack on Mr. Moore, and I expect to make another attack on him when the gentleman gets through. [Laughter.]

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Well, the gentleman did repeatedly attack the commission. He called it "this thing." Members laughed at it. He directed attention to what he said were facts about the work of the commission, although the record shows that these were not facts. The gentleman was mistaken.

Mr. STEPHENS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I can not.

Mr. STEPHENS. Is this the commission that is responsible for the removal of the statue of Abraham Lincoln in front of a public building and putting it in a cellar?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Not at all, and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. STEPHENS] is another one of those who have been misled by the deliberate misrepresentations about this commission. I repeat it, deliberate misrepresentations. I do not say that the gentleman from Indiana made a deliberate misrepresentation, but I do say that deliberate misrepresentations have been made.

Now, as to the Lincoln statue, let me read the facts from page 206 of the hearings:

Mr. WOOD. There is more in sentiment than there is in art. If there is no sentiment in art, there is no art in it. The sentiment of the people was to put up a statue of Lincoln in front of the courthouse. The sentiment of those responsible for it and all the people except a few in Washington was against the removal of that statue from in front of the courthouse and is in favor of having it placed back there. But I am informed that the Fine Arts Commission is opposed to its being placed back there.

Mr. MOORE. Where did you get that information?

Mr. WOOD. That information is prevalent; everybody is entertaining that opinion.

Mr. MOORE. I know it; and that is one of the mistakes that is being constantly made. As I understand it, the judges requested——

Mr. KING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I will not at this point. Col. Sherrill, who is an appointee of the President, in charge of public buildings and grounds, said, page 210:

Col. SHERRILL. May I read into the record the appropriation in reference to the Lincoln statue?

Mr. WOOD. Yes.

Col. SHERRILL. This is contained in the first deficiency act of 1920, which was No. 73, H. R. 9205:

"For construction of walks and service roads and the restoration and planting of grounds around the courthouse in Judiciary Park, including the removal of the statue, $23,445, one-half of which shall be paid from the revenues of the District of Columbia and one-half from the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. KING. Which statue?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The only one there, the statue of Lincoln.

Mr. KING. That is where they perpetrated a fraud on this House right there.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I respectfully ask that the Sergeant at Arms be given a special mace and sit beside the gentleman from Illinois. [Laughter.] And, if possible, induce him to observe the rules of the House. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois will observe the rules of the House.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Let me read again from that law:

For construction of walks and service roads and the restoration and the planting of grounds around the courthouse in Judiciary Park, including the removal of the statue, $23,445, one-half of which shall be paid from the revenues of the District of Columbia and one-half from the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. WASON then asked—

That was the Lincoln Statue?

And Col. Sherrill replied that it was.

Mr. WASON. Anybody sitting on the floor would not know what it referred to.

Col. SHERRILL. That was put in by Mr. WOOD—

He meant Mr. Good, of Iowa—

the chairman of the Appropriations Committee. I was told that just now—that he put it in himself.

Mr. WOOD. Somebody suggested it to Mr. Good.

Mr. MOORE. The Architect of the Capitol suggested it to Mr. Good?

Col. SHERRILL. The Architect of the Capitol had charge of it.

The Architect of the Capitol was and still is Mr. Elliott Woods. He was then in charge of the work of remodeling the courthouse, and he, the evidence discloses, suggested to Chairman Good, the removal of that statue. Now, I would not say that anyone has ever on this floor deliberately prevaricated about that removal, but merely that the truth has been stretched to the point of breaking. Men have laid that removal to the Commission of Fine Arts, as was shown by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. STEPHENS] when he asked whether this is the commission that is responsible for taking the statue from in front of the courthouse and putting it in a cellar. Why, the testimony reveals that the commission was no more responsible than was the gentleman who propounded the inquiry. Congress itself by law provided for the removal.

To continue now from the hearings:

Mr. MOORE. Why do you not put it down at the National Museum along with the statue of Washington that was taken from in front of the Capitol?

Mr. Chairman, when I first came to the House there stood in front of this Capitol a gigantic statue by Greenough of George Washington. It was taken from in front of the Capitol and has ever since been in the Museum properly housed.

Mr. WOOD. I do not know why they took it away, but I would put this back where it belongs and where the people of this town put it up.

Mr. MOORE. Do you know where they put it up? They put it up in the middle of the street.

Mr. WOOD. The statue of Lincoln?

Mr. MOORE. Yes; and then Boss Sheppard came along, cut down the street by 6 feet, and left the statue up in the air with a base made of rough stone; then they took the space in front of the courthouse and made a front yard of it, and that left the statue in the yard. The original statue was out in the center of the street.

It is evident that the work done on the old courthouse and on the grounds in front of it made conditions very different from those surrounding the statue when it was erected.

Mr. Chairman, I first became interested in the commission when observing the work it did in helping to secure the removal of the old Pennsylvania Railroad station from the corner of Sixth and B Streets in the Mall. When I first came to Washington that is where it stood. From it ran rows of railroad tracks south across that park. A little later the railroads succeeded in having Congress pass a law which gave them forever 14 additional acres in the Mall. Had the provisions of that law been carried out, the park would have been ruined and the view from the Capitol toward the Washington Monument would have been ruined by a great roach-backed station and shed and acres of tracks and cars and smoking locomotives. I was asked to vote for the bill, and, in reply, said that I might vote for it provided its sponsors would not bring in a bill the next day to give the Library of Congress to the railroads for a roundhouse. It seemed to me most preposterous to suggest putting those railroad tracks and that station down there permanently to destroy the Mall. Then the acting Commission of Fine Arts, at the head of which was Daniel Burnham, began to do something to get the station out of the park.

But before Congress could get it out it had to appropriate money to help pay for certain necessary expenses; finally, however, at the suggestion of the commission, the station and tracks were removed from the Mall. Is there anyone who does not think that the commission earned the thanks of the American people when it succeeded in having the old station removed from between the Capitol and the Washington Monument and in causing the splendid new station to be built north of the Capitol?

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Not just now.

The Commission of Fine Arts was created by act of Congress in 1910. The bill was introduced in the House by the Hon. Samuel W. McCall, then chairman of the Committee on the Library, in order, as he said, to correct the haphazard development in Washington.

I pause to remind gentlemen that Samuel W. McCall was for 20 years one of the prominent Members of the House, and that later he served with marked distinction as governor of the State of Massachusetts. His bill to create the commission was supported by Mr. Fitzgerald, of New York, and other prominent Members, and was passed without a division.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], one of the ablest legislators who has ever sat in this House from the time the House was first organized, will indorse what I say when I declare that John J. Fitzgerald, a Democrat, was one of the strongest men ever at the head of the Committee on Appropriations, and one of the most conservative. Fitzgerald supported the bill. In the Senate the bill was handled by Senator Elihu Root.

The act makes it obligatory on the commission to advise upon questions of art when required to do so by the President or by any committee of either House of Congress. President Taft, who was strongly in favor of the legislation, issued an Executive order to the executive officers of the Government requiring them to submit to the commission all matters in which questions of art were involved. Congress required the Lincoln Memorial Commission to ask the advice of the commission on matters connected with that structure. That memorial commission asked for advice on the selection of an architect and the selection of a design and followed the advice. Congress also authorized the building commission to get the advice of the commission on the building program for the Government buildings, and also for the buildings and plans for the Panama Canal. In legislation involving questions of art Congress has almost invariably placed in the bills the requirement that the plans should be passed upon by the commission.

The commission has no authority to enforce its recommendations.

I stop here to say—what everyone familiar with the law knows—that the commission has never had, nor has it ever claimed to have, any power except the power to advise when questions as to the merit and propriety of designs and kindred questions are submitted to it. Its advice can be rejected or accepted.

The fact that the advice has been followed in almost every instance is sufficient testimony that the executive officers have found the advice good. If the work of the commission has grown in extent and scope, that fact argues that the commission has been helpful.

With the increase in its work while the appropriation remained stationary it has been necessary to exercise rigid economy. Often when matters have come up that required prompt action extra meetings have been held at some place, usually in New York, where the cost for travel would be less. Also it has been necessary to go to the place where statues and other large works were being designed, because of the physical impossibility of bringing the models to Washington. In the matter of the Victory medal, the Verdun medal, new coins, and so forth, it has been indispensable that members of the commission visit the mint in Philadelphia to confer with mint officials in order to adapt the design to the mechanical requirements of the mint.

In all matters the commission acts with the artists in an advisory capacity. It does not sit as a court and render decisions, thus creating ill feeling among the artists and defeating the very ends for which the commission was created—namely, to secure good results.

To-day the commission is working in harmony with the executive officers of the Government, and the number of matters submitted by them for the advice of the commission is steadily on the increase. To reduce the appropriation or to limit the meetings to the city of Washington would practically result in making trouble, create expense, and prevent securing the results intended by Congress.

Mr. LANGLEY. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I can not yield now.

The artist members of the commission are all busy men in their several professions. They had made their reputations. It is an honor to serve one's country, but the service they give is a service rendered at a sacrifice of time, comfort, and money.

Mr. WASON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I can not yield now.

The fact that the commission have done such work here has acquainted them with Washington problems and so has made their service valuable.

The real question at issue is as to whether the Government gets from the commission $10,000 worth of service. As a matter of fact the commission annually saves the Government many times its cost. Over and over again the commission has brought about simplicity, combined with dignity, by cutting off ill-devised ornaments from buildings and modifying the design.

The members of the commission not only serve without pay but also the allowance for traveling expenses is so small that each member is put to personal expense every time a meeting is held in Washington.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I hope there will be no objection to my having time enough to read the statement I have in my hand. It will take but 10 minutes or a little more.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I move that the gentleman's time be extended 10 minutes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I wish to say to the gentleman from Indiana——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent——

Mr. KING. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I will answer any question the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KING] or any other gentleman may propound when I finish this statement. But, gentlemen——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin will desist. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. KING. Reserving the right to object, I want to ask the gentleman if he will permit me to ask him a question about directing the service of the Sergeant at Arms? [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin (reading)—

The membership is made up of three architects, a landscape architect, a painter, and a sculptor.

And now I invite the attention of Members who are not acquainted with the personnel of the commission, and especially the attention of all who heard the attacks made and the ridicule heaped upon that body, and ask that they listen to this:

The membership has included or now includes the late Daniel H. Burnham, director of works of the Chicago fair; the author of city plans for Cleveland, San Francisco, Manila, Chicago, and Washington.

Frederick Law Olmsted, landscape architect, who succeeded his father in charge of the Capitol grounds; a member of the commission on city plans for Cleveland, Washington, New Haven, and various other cities. Mr. Olmsted was succeeded by James L. Greenleaf, the designer of many gardens in various parts of the country.

Cass Gilbert, architect of the Minnesota State Capitol; the architect selected to design the new West Virginia State Capitol; the designer of the Woolworth Building and many other structures of the first order.

Thomas Hastings, architect of the Senate and House Office Buildings, the Arlington Memorial Amphitheater, the New York Public Library.

Peirce Anderson, designer of the Washington Union Station and the Field Museum, in Chicago.

Henry Bacon, architect of the Lincoln Memorial.

Charles A. Platt, architect, painter, etcher, the architect of the Freer Gallery.

William Mitchell Kendall, of the firm of McKim, Mead & White, architects of the Pennsylvania Station, New York; the Municipal Building, the new post office in New York; the Army War College, the Patterson and Thomas Nelson Page houses, in Washington; the Morgan Library, the Century, Harvard University, and Metropolitan Clubs, in New York; and the Rhode Island State Capitol.

Louis Ayres, of the firm of York & Sawyer, architects of the Guarantee Trust Building, New York; the Riggs National Bank and the American Security & Trust Co. Building, in Washington.

The sculptor members have been Daniel Chester French, dean of American sculptors, designer of the Minute Man at Concord; the statue of the Republic at the Chicago Fair; statues of Senator Hoar, Rufus Choate, Emerson, Gov. Oglethorpe at Savannah; statues of Lincoln in Lincoln, Nebr., and in the Lincoln Memorial; and an equestrian statue of Washington in Paris.

Herbert Adams, president of the National Academy of Design, who received awards at the Chicago, Paris, St. Louis, and San Francisco expositions.

James E. Fraser, sculptor of the bust of Roosevelt in the Capitol, of the Journey through Life in Rock Creek Cemetery, the monument to John Hay in Cleveland, the statue known as "The End of the Trail," and many other such works.

The painter members:

The late Francis D. Millet, who decorated the customhouses in Cleveland and Baltimore; author, painter, and war correspondent, a victim of the Titanic disaster, whose monument is in the grounds south of the White House.

Edwin H. Blashfield, who decorated the dome of the Library of Congress, the New York Appellate Court, the Wisconsin State Capitol, the South Dakota State Capitol, and many other like buildings.

The late J. Alden Weir, one of the foremost American painters, and J. Siddons Mowbray, former director of the American Academy in Rome, a mural painter among the very first in America.

The lay member of the commission, appointed by President Taft, and twice reappointed by President Wilson, is Charles Moore. He prepared the report of 1901 on the improvement of Washington; also the report on the new plan of Chicago, and was for 10 years the chairman of the Detroit City Plan and Improvement Commission. On the resignation of Mr. French he was elected chairman of the commission and has been reelected to that position. His Washington work was recognized by his election to membership in the American Institute of Architects, the American Academy in Rome, and the National Institute of Arts and Letters.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I can not yield now.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I was very gracious to ask the extension of time for the gentleman.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I wish only that the gentleman wait until I have finished reading this statement, and then I will answer all questions.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Who is the author of the manuscript which you are reading?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I telephoned to Col. Sherrill, secretary and executive officer of the commission, and suggested that a statement of the facts should be prepared, and he replied that one ought to be made. I verified the facts which it sets forth.

Mr. Caemmerer brought it to me, and I am confident that there is not a statement of anything but the truth in it:

Mr. H. P. Caemmerer, assistant to the secretary of the Commission of Fine Arts, was private stenographer to the Postmaster General at the time of his transfer as clerk to the commission at $1,800 a year, on July 1, 1919. He is a member of the National Shorthand Reporters' Association. He applied for the position, which was to become vacant at the time, because of his educational qualifications, and his application was accepted by the commission among 15 names that were considered. Under the law he was required to serve a whole year at the same salary at which he transferred. On June 4, 1920, at a regular meeting of the commission, Col. C. S. Ridley, then secretary and executive officer, personally recommended him for promotion as assistant to the secretary, with a salary of $2,500 a year, which the commission had been paying.

The secretary and executive officer of the commission is ex officio the officer in charge of public buildings and grounds. The assistant to the secretary on whom devolves the conduct of the office, the keeping of the minutes and the files, all the arrangements for meetings, and the correspondence, has to be a man capable of meeting and dealing with the people who come to the office to consult the commission and must have a natural aptitude for a class of work entirely outside that done by the ordinary Government clerk. The hours are long, the work is arduous, the training required is technical.

Mr. Caemmerer has an A. M. university degree. He has had a classical high-school training, and his college course covered thorough courses required for the degree of master of arts. He took complete courses in Egyptian, Assyrian, Greek, and Roman art and archæology; in medieval art, with a study of the life and work of the great painters, and in modern art; and is a life member of the Archæological Institute of America. He has also completed two years of law.

During the past three years the work of the commission has been constantly on the increase, and the submissions have numbered many hundreds. Some of these have been very difficult to handle, yet among them all not one of the artists, and they include the greatest in this country, or other person who has come before the commission, has charged him with an error in handling a submission.

This concerning Mr. Caemmerer is, I believe, not all in the record, but it is what he told me and there is no question but that it is true.

The members of the Commission of Fine Arts are required to visit other cities when it comes to inspecting the full sized model or a finished statue. This has been necessary in the case of the statue of Abraham Lincoln, by Daniel C. French, sculptor, now in the Lincoln Memorial; the mural paintings by Jules Guerin, in New York City, for the Lincoln Memorial.

The model for the statue of Gen. Meade at Gloucester, Mass., by Charles Grafly, sculptor.

The final inspection of the statue of Gen. Grant for the Grant Memorial, in the Roman Bronze Works, in Brooklyn, N. Y.

The Macdonough Memorial at Plattsburg, N. Y.;

The statue of Francis Scott Key, cast at Providence, R. I., and to be placed in Fort McHenry Park in Baltimore; and

The full-sized model for the Francis Asbury statue, by Augustus Lukeman, sculptor, of New York City.

Competitions for coins and medals have required meetings, usually held in New York City, to inspect the models and make the award.

Since the establishment of the commission, advice has been called for from the Commission of Fine Arts from many parts of the country.

Since the close of the World War the commission has rendered this country great service in the matter of war memorials.

The ninth report of the commission recently issued discloses the work of the Commission of Fine Arts during the past two years. It is a beautiful report, but there is more to it than the appearance. It is the thought in the printed pages, which the careful reader can not fail to note. The work of the commission in behalf of the plans for the development of Washington and in maintaining high standards in the fine arts in the United States is deserving of the approval of Congress.

The commission respectfully requests that the House restore and approve its appropriation of $10,000, that being a minimum amount with which the commission can properly do its work without restrictions, the same as last year.

Mr. Chairman, as showing the attitude of the gentleman from Indiana toward the commission, I direct attention to some statements made by him about the commission during the hearings (p. 228). Mr. Moore had interrupted, and so had Mr. Caemmerer, to say that these distinguished architects and painters and sculptors on the commission were not charging anything for their services, but were glad to give them to the Government to help make Washington what it ought to be. Whereupon ensued the following dialogue. Referring to the other members of the commission, Mr. Moore said:

Mr. MOORE. * * * Every other person is actively engaged in the practice of his profession. Every hour he gives up every time he comes down here—he often spends two days—he is giving up so much. If he were charging his client for that, he would charge him $100 a day.

Mr. WOOD. I will tell you, Mr. Moore, people become intoxicated with these positions and they would give almost anything to have them by reason of the entrées it gives them, by reason of the prestige, and some men have considerable vanity, and they like to be in positions of coxcomb and prestige. It appeals to them.

Mr. MOORE. Do you think any of these individuals get anything out of this thing?

Mr. WOOD. I am not saying that they get anything dishonestly.

Mr. MOORE. No; but even honestly?

Mr. WOOD. Why, yes. There is not a fete, there is not a public reception or anything but what the Fine Arts Commissioners are invited. I am not speaking of that by way of criticism, but to impress what I say. Men become intoxicated with the desire to hold these high positions because of the social position it gives them and it is laudably so, the recognition that is given to them. It might be helpful to these other gentlemen if they are in the business of designing or any particular art or trade.

Mr. STEPHENS rose.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I can not be interrupted in this. It is too important. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I ask the gentleman from Indiana for an additional seven minutes. The gentleman spoke for three hours the other day, and I wish for seven minutes.

Mr. WASON. Mr. Chairman, I want to suggest to the gentleman from Wisconsin that the chairman of this committee had the entire bill to discuss, while the gentleman from Wisconsin is directing attention only to a $6,000 item, and he has had 35 minutes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I ask for only seven minutes.

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, if it is impossible to have a question answered I object to any further extension of time.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I did answer the question asked by the gentleman about the Lincoln statue.

Mr. STEPHENS. You refused to answer me a moment ago.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

Mr. STEPHENS. I will withdraw my objection if the gentleman will answer my question.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have five minutes more. We must quit this some time.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Make it seven minutes.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I will give the gentleman seven.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Wisconsin may have seven minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Please let me finish this quotation from the hearings, and then I will answer the question. After the gentleman from Indiana——

Mr. STEPHENS. Am I not going to get a chance to ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Wait a moment. After the gentleman from Indiana had said that the members of the commission were willing to serve because of the great "social prestige they enjoy in Washington" in consequence of their service and because they were "invited to fetes and parties" in this city, Mr. Moore replied by telling about his own experience in Washington society.

Mr. MOORE. I know; but these people all had their reputations before they became members of the Commission of Fine Arts.

Mr. WOOD. I hope this has not detracted from it.

Mr. MOORE. I hope it has not. Let me tell you my experience: I have been a member of the commission since 1910, and I have never been invited to one solitary thing in the District of Columbia during that time with one exception, and that was to John Joy Edson's dinner, for which I paid $15.

Mr. WOOD. Well, you paid too much.

[Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE. I know it; but he was an old friend of mine and I could afford to spend $15 on him. That is the glory I get out of it.

Now, Mr. Moore, is the only member of the commission who lives in Washington, and he had been invited to only one social function in this city in 12 years. And yet the gentleman from Indiana thinks these men give their service for the social prestige it brings them and for the invitations they receive to fetes and public receptions. One in 12 years!

The report of those hearings clearly reveals the attitude of the gentleman from Indiana toward the commission.

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield now?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes; for a very short question, rapidly propounded. [Laughter.]

Mr. STEPHENS. You quoted Mr. WOOD as saying that this commission was "intoxicated." That is something I want to ask the gentleman about. Has that been within the last two years? [Laughter.]

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. No; I think not.

To further understand the attitude of the gentleman from Indiana, listen to this. In his speech on this floor he said:

In consequence of those Executive orders you can not build a pigpen in the city of Washington to-day without violating one of these Executive orders, unless you get the consent of Mr. Moore.

In that statement the gentleman from Indiana was utterly mistaken.

He made a similar statement during the hearings, page 232. I consider this of much importance.

Mr. WOOD. I could not build a private building without getting your advice.

Mr. MOORE. Oh, yes; you could if you would get the permission of the zoning commission.

Mr. WOOD. Oh, there could be a building built here of any kind that would not affect the general contour or surroundings of the Government.

Mr. MOORE. Built by the Government.

Mr. WOOD. I did not know that it was limited to the Government.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It is not.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. It is, as to buildings, absolutely limited to public buildings constructed by the Government or by the District of Columbia.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Just last week they called upon some gentlemen who were going to build a hotel to come before the commission. That was just last week.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Oh, that does not touch the point. A private person can build a hotel in the city of Washington on his own property and this commission has no authority whatever to interfere or to compel him to present his plans for advice. The order of the President provides in express terms that—plans for parks and all public buildings constructed by executive departments or the District of Columbia shall be submitted to the Commission of Fine Arts for advice as to the merits of such designs—

And so forth.

President Harding's order of July 28, 1921, is as follows:

It is hereby ordered that essential matters relating to the design of medals, insignia, and coins produced by the executive departments; also the designs of statues, fountains, and monuments, and all important plans for parks and all public buildings, constructed by executive departments or the District of Columbia, shall be submitted to the Commission of Fine Arts for advice as to the merits of such designs before the executtive officer having charge of the same shall approve thereof.

It will be seen that as to buildings the order, as I said, relates only to public buildings constructed by executive departments or the District of Columbia, so that again the gentleman from Indiana was utterly mistaken.

Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin. There is the Zoning Commission.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The Zoning Commission is an entirely different thing. This Commission of Fine Arts has nothing whatever to do with private buildings. The order explicitly says "public buildings erected by the Government or the District of Columbia."

Mr. ARENTZ. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I want to proceed.

Mr. ARENTZ. Just a brief question.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. ARENTZ. Does the gentleman from Indiana object to a commission, or is his objection centered on this commission?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Unquestionably the gentleman from Indiana is trying to destroy this commission. In my judgment, Mr. Moore, as the head of that commission, has done work of great value to the city of Washington, and therefore for the Government and the people. He is a man of rare culture, of energy, and of public spirit. Possessed of independent means, and because he is public spirited and because of the deep-seated respect he bears for the memory of Senator McMillan, who first proposed the creation of the commission, Mr. Moore wishes to continue as one of its members to aid in carrying out the plans of L'Enfant and Burnham and McKim and Olmstead and St. Gaudens and the other eminent architects, painters, and sculptors, for the appropriate and orderly development of this Capital City of the Nation.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Under the leave granted by the House I will extend my reply to the arguments presented in support of this bill.

The contention of the supporters of the bill is that payment of traveling expenses of the commission is limited by law to the expenses of Members going to and returning from Washington for meetings. But this is not the correct construction of the law. Such a construction would defeat the very purpose of the law.

The Commission of Fine Arts was created by act of May 17, 1910. The sundry civil bill approved June 25, 1910, appropriated $10,000 to meet the expenses of the commission. The first meeting of the commission was held in Washington July 8, 1910. On June 27, 1910, the secretary of the commission—Col. Spencer Cosby, United States Army, officer in charge of Public Buildings and Grounds—submitted to the Comptroller of the Treasury, through the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War, a series of five questions "in order that the commission may properly organize and be ready to do the work assigned it by law."

The fourth question was:

In case it is necessary for any members of the commission or any of its employees to perform other travel than to or from Washington, as, for instance, to advise upon the selection of a model which may be in some other city, can the necessary actual expenses of the journey be paid by the disbursing officer? In the case of the secretary, an Army officer should be paid mileage or actual expenses?

On July 6, 1910, the Comptroller of the Treasury wrote to the Secretary of War, answering each of the five questions. The answer to the fourth question was stated by Hon. R. J. Tracewell, Comptroller of the Treasury, as follows:

The commission and any of its employees traveling on the business of the commission and away from its place of meeting are entitled to their actual and necessary expenses of travel.

Thus it will be seen that even before organization the commission regularly sought and obtained an official interpretation of the statute for its guidance. For the 12 years of the life of the commission this interpretation has stood unchallenged. It has enabled the commission to perform a maximum of work at the least possible expense.

Models of statues intended for the city of Washington must be inspected in the studios of the artists during the various stages of the work. Statues are modeled first in clay. The small sketch can be submitted in Washington; but the one-third size, the full size, the plaster model, and the casting must be inspected in the studio or foundry. This work is done for the protection of both the Government and the artist.

The Lincoln statue for the Lincoln Memorial; the Key Memorial for Baltimore; the Grant, Meade, Asbury, Ericsson, Alexander Hamilton Memorials for Washington, are instances of repeated submissions and of conferences with the sculptors as their work progressed.

The mural decorations for the Lincoln Memorial are paintings over 60 feet long and 12 feet high. They had to be inspected in the studio built especially to accommodate this great work.

The production of 4,000,000 Victory medals required visits to the Mint and to the factory in order both to adapt the design to mechanical requirements and to insure the best possible quality of workmanship.

The change in the designs for the entire silver coinage of the Government; the centennial coins for Maine, Missouri, and Alabama; the medal given by Congress to the city of Verdun all required time and attention at the Mint as well as at formal meetings of the commission.

Congress by special legislation provided for a visit of the commission to the Panama Canal Zone—from February 4 to February 27, 1913.

A limitation of the work of the commission to formal meetings in Washington would defeat the prime object for which Congress established the commission, namely, to secure for the adornment of Washington works of enduring art, and to enable the Government to establish and maintain standards of excellence in all those works in which artistic element prevails.

AMOUNT OF APPROPRIATION.

Of an appropriation of $10,000 the percentages of expenses are—

	Per cent.
Travel of members	25
Payment of employees	45

If the members were reimbursed for their actual expenses of travel, the percentages of expenditure for travel would be much greater. The Government allowance of $5 a day no more than pays the cost of a room, and often does not cover that item. Subsistence and other expenses cause the members necessary expense which they must pay from their own pockets.

Members receive no salary. This provision is vital. Men of highest professional standing are willing to give their services to the Government, and they take pride in their work. To pay them at the rate of their professional incomes would require several times more than the entire appropriation. Their work is not confined to meetings in Washington, but is practically continuous throughout their terms of four years. Submissions are referred to the various members for study and report. Otherwise it would be impossible to deal with business that has increased from 41 submissions in 1911 to 437 submissions in 1921.

The printing of reports is paid from the annual appropriation. The majority of these reports go to Senators and Members, or to their constituents at their request. The funds available restrict the reports to one in two years.

The reports show to the people of the United States how Washington is being developed into as dignified, unified, and beautiful a capital city as any capital in the world.

The bill as debated by the House fixes the limit of pay of any employee of the commission at $1,800.

Now, the first question submitted to the comptroller was as follows:

Under the authority contained in the act for "such other assistance as the commission may authorize," can the commission employ such clerks, stenographers, messengers, draftsman, and other assistants within the limits of the appropriation as it may deem necessary, and fix their rates of pay? Must these employees be obtained through the Civil Service Commission or may they be appointed direct?

The comptroller's reply was—

I think the words "such other assistance as the commission may authorize," supra, empower the commission to employ and fix the rate of pay of clerks, stenographers, draftsman, and such other assistants as it may deem necessary and proper. The question of the appointment of clerical assistance is primarily one not involving a payment, and it appears that it involves such a question of law as would justify the submission thereof to the Attorney General for his determination.

The amount to be paid by the commission for services of the assistant to the secretary, who acts as chief clerk, keeper of minutes, records, and files, is a matter of business detail. The work requires special training and aptitude entirely different from what is demanded of the other Government employees. The first person thus employed left the service of the commission to accept the assistant directorship of the National Parks Service. His place was taken by a man who began at $1,800, and who was getting that amount when he came to the commission. When he became trained in the work he was promoted by the executive officer to $2,500 with the approval of the commission. The members of the commission having full knowledge of the amount and quality of the work done regarded the salary as reasonable. With the very limited appropriation available for its work, the commission is disposed to pay the smallest salaries consistent with getting work done properly. At the same time they must have a man who can devote his entire time and thought to the task and look after a multitude of varied affairs incident to a nonresident commission to whom on an average one and one-half matters are submitted every day in the year for examination and report.

TRIP TO THE YOSEMITE.

The visit to the Yosemite was made at the written request of the Director of the National Park Service. His primary purpose in arranging the trip was to see and to study the area which it was proposed to make a memorial for Theodore Roosevelt under the name of the Roosevelt-Sequoia National Park. At the same time the trip included a visit to the Yosemite National Park. For years the National Park Service had been bringing to the Commission of Fine Arts plans for various matters of construction in the park. These matters included the design and construction of bridges, general plans for village and hotel development, the location of camps, and other like matters. The expenses of travel after leaving the railroad were not charged to the Government in any way but were paid privately.

EXECUTIVE ORDERS.

The object of the Executive orders issued by the President is to call to the attention of the executive officers of the Government the requirements of the act of Congress establishing the Commission of Fine Arts. The Executive orders in no way enlarge the scope of the activities of the commission, because the commission was created largely in order that the President might have the advice of a body of experts when matters involving questions of art came before the executive departments. No executive officer was required to follow the advice of the commission. The number and variety of matters brought before the commission by the executive officers of the Government simply shows that such officers find the commission helpful in determining questions in regard to which they themselves have not expert knowledge.

The Commission of Fine Arts provides the only medium by which the artists of the United States come into relations with the Government. Before the creation of the commission orders for works of art usually went to artists who were primarily salesmen and who could by the exercise of salesmanship secure the interest of those in authority to push their projects.

Since the creation of the Commission of Fine Arts artists of the highest standing in their several professions have been selected, either by competition or directly, to design buildings, coins, medals, statues, and to lay out and plant parks. All of these activities are clearly expressed in the act creating the Commission of Fine Arts, which act was originally drawn up by Hon. S. W. McCall, chairman of the House Committee on the Library, and was reshaped and put into its final form by Senator Elihu Root. It received the approval of President Taft, who appointed the first commission, and whose active and sympathetic interest has continued to this day.

THE L'ENFANT PLAN.

The L'Enfant plan of Washington was prepared under the direction of George Washington and Thomas Jefferson and was adopted by Congress. The development of the city of Washington was slow and uncertain, but what development there was followed the lines of the L'Enfant plan, with the exception that here and there Congress authorized the sale of public reservations. The eastern front of the Capitol Grounds was completed about 1875. The western front, including the terrace, was completed about 1890. In 1901 a commission consisting of Daniel H. Burnham, architect; Charles F. McKim, architect; Frederick Law Olmsted, landscape architect; and Augustus Saint-Gaudens, sculptor, was appointed to consider the park system of the District of Columbia. This commission based their designs and report upon the L'Enfant plan, which they considered the greatest heritage a capital city ever had. The commission saw that there were two essential elements in the development of the L'Enfant plan.

The Burnham Commission persuaded the Pennsylvania Railroad to relinquish their rights in the Mall and to establish the station on their own property north of Massachusetts Avenue where the Union Station now stands. Secondly, the commission, realizing the deplorable, squalid conditions of Pennsylvania Avenue near the Capitol, saw at once that the key to the situation was opening of the area occupied by the Botanic Garden and the formation there of a great plaza, such as is marked on the L'Enfant map. This plaza the commission called Union Square and proposed that it be dedicated to Gens. Grant, Sherman, and Sheridan, three great military leaders in the war for the preservation of the Union.

The present greenhouses in the area are incapable of removal because of age, and under any circumstances new glass houses must shortly be built. The Commission of Fine Arts saw no reason why this rebuilding should not take place on land owned by the Government south of the land now occupied by the Botanic Garden. A real botanic garden and arboretum such as all of the other great nations of the world possess should include several hundred acres and be located outside of the well-populated area. It should also have both high ground and low ground. Therefore, while the commission thought that the present activities of the existing garden might be carried on without interruption by a simple shift of the location of some of the greenhouses, they also felt that the Nation should have a real botanical garden well located and developed under the control of either the Department of Agriculture or the Smithsonian Institution.

CERTIFICATE OF VOUCHERS.

The vouchers of the Commission of Fine Arts were verified under oath until December, 1915, when Secretary McAdoo waived this requirement for the members of the commission. This was done by him purely as a matter of courtesy to men who are serving without pay and whose standing in the community is such that any statement over their signature may be considered as equivalent to their statement under oath.

During the debate the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KING] said:

> Senator McMillan and others, who went abroad as an artistic aggregation on one of the finest junkets ever prepared and visited Paris and Florence and sampled all of the different kinds of fine arts.

Senator McMillan never went to Europe on a junket or at the expense of the Government. In 1901 he advanced the money—which was subsequently repaid him by the Treasury—for the commission, of which Mr. D. H. Burnham, of Chicago, was the head, to go to Europe and make a study of public buildings related to their landscape setting, and the result of these studies is embodied in Senate Report No. 166, Fifty-seventh Congress, first session, which report has been followed in the development of Washington for the past 20 years.

LOCATION OF THE BOTANIC GARDEN.

The House Committee on the Library having called on the Commission of Fine Arts for a report on the relocation of the Botanic Gardeu, the commission made an investigation of suitable sites in the District of Columbia for a Botanic Garden as extensive as those in New York, Boston, St. Louis, and other cities of this country and of foreign capitals as well. The experts of the Agricultural Department, after an examination of all the sites in the District of Columbia, recommended the taking of Mount Hamilton because of advantages set forth in the report of the commission to the House Committee on the Library. Since the charge of real estate speculation at Mount Hamilton has been made the commission has learned from a United States Senator having knowledge of the case that the ownership of Mount Hamilton has not been changed for at least 30 years and that no effort has been made by the owners to place the property on the market. The Government owns a small portion of the land for school purposes.

The Mount Hamilton site comprises about 400 acres, which adjoins the Anacostia Park project; and by purchasing the 400 acres the Government would have the advantage of about 600 additional acres in the Anacostia Park, which could be used for botanical purposes. The change in the plans of the Anacostia Park project would simplify the park project to such an extent as to pay for the Mount Hamilton site. At the same time, the greenhouses which form a part—and only a part—of the present Botanic Garden could be moved to Government-owned land adjoining the present lands of the garden; and thus the work done by the Botanic Garden could be continued.

LOCATION OF THE GRANT STATUE.

The Grant statue was located before the Commission of Fine Arts was created. The Commission of Fine Arts was created by act of Congress approved May 17, 1910. The Grant statue was located in the sundry civil bill approved June 30, 1906. The history of its location was developed on January 13, 1908, at a hearing of the House Committee on the Library. From a statement made at that hearing by Gen. Grenville M. Dodge, chairman of the Grant Memorial Commission, it appeared that the Society of the Army of the Tennessee, the Societies of the Armies of the Potomac and the Cumberland, Gen. Grant's family, the Illinois Commandery of the Loyal Legion, the New York Commandery of the Loyal Legion, of which Gen. Grant was a member, and others, favored the present location, and there was no opposition from any military organization or other person, so far as the Grant Memorial Commission knew.

Hon. William H. Taft, then Secretary of War, stated to the Committee on the Library that the site was selected by Gen. Dodge, Secretary Root, and the chairmen of the Senate and the House Committees on the Library. Secretary Taft said:

> This location was taken up and adopted—I am not quite sure as to what moved Gen. Dodge to do it, but I know what moved Secretary Root—because it fitted in so well with the proposed improvement of Washington. Now, I know I am stepping on dangerous ground in mentioning the Senate plan, but I have no hesitation in saying that so far as the War Department is concerned and so far as the head of that department is concerned the control that by law is given to the Secretary of War with reference to the public grounds—everything that the engineers do is done with reference to that plan. Therefore, when we came to determine on the details of the monument, after it had been changed from the White Lot to this place, the committee of architects which was appointed advised certain changes in the monument in order that it should not prove an obstacle to the vista between the Capitol and the Monument, in order that both sides should be adjusted to the position that it occupied with respect to the Monument.

At a continuation of the hearing, held January 15, 1908, Secretary of State. Hon. Elihu Root, testified that he was Secretary of War at the time the Grant memorial was located on its present site, and that we—> went all over Washington and looked at every place we could think of, and we discussed every place that we looked at, until finally we came to the conclusion that the monument, or the memorial, as I think the statute calls it, ought to have a definite relation to the public buildings of Washington, and we settled upon a site directly in front of the Capitol as being the best possible site.

Continuing, Mr. Root said:

> In selecting that site we had a good many things in view. We considered that the statute which made an appropriation of $250,000 for a memorial to Gen. Grant meant something more than the ordinary statue which, as Secretary of War, I have been engaged in putting up around the city as a member of similar commissions. We felt that it was the intention of Congress, plainly exhibited by the difference between that statute and the ordinary monument appropriations, to indicate a distinction, and that it was our duty to secure a design and to select a site that would be distinguished and which would put the memorial to Gen. Grant on a different footing from the memorials to many generals and public men of inferior place in history. We considered also the fact that indications were many that the region about the Capitol was about to receive attention and to be rescued from the somewhat unkempt and uncultivated condition in which it had remained for so many years. * * * The plan for the removal of the Pennsylvania Railroad from the Mall and the putting up of this great station immediately north of the Capitol has been far advanced, and it was quite evident that the movement of the improving tendency was toward this particular site, and that the neighborhood of the Capitol was, within a very short time, to be made worthy of the Capitol itself. So we considered that a great memorial to Gen. Grant would be a fitting part of the bringing up of the surroundings of the Capitol Building. We considered that that immediate prospect made it all the more appropriate that we should select that site.

We considered the plan, which had already been made public, of the so-called park commission, with regard to the beautification of Washington, and we considered what effect upon our judgment the doubts as to whether that plan would be followed or not ought to have. We came to the conclusion that while the site of the memorial which we determined upon fitted perfectly into the plan if carried out that, whether it was carried out or not, this was incomparably the best site there was in Washington for the memorial.

As the result of the hearings, Mr. Howard, from the House Committee on the Library, submitted an adverse report to accompany H. R. 10502 and H. J. Res. 117, both of which bills proposed a change in the location of the Grant Memorial. (See H. Rept. No. 1302, 60th Cong., 1st sess.) The report contains the statement of Secretary Taft and Secretary Root.

It thus appears that any action that the Commission of Fine Arts has taken relative to the Botanic Garden has been in strict accordance with the expressed will of Congress on the subject.

PUBLIC COMFORT STATION AT FIFTEENTH AND H STREETS NE.

This subject never came before the Commission of Fine Arts.

During the debate the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] said:

At that time, 1910, it was stated that this Mr. Burnham, who has been so praised by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER], was in the employ of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, and that when Senator McMillan and some others went upon junketing trips to Europe for the purpose of viewing parks there, this same Mr. Burnham followed them as far as London and urged them to recommend the establishment of the Plaza between the Union Station and the Capitol, it being currently stated at that time that he was in the employ of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad. Therefore we see the beginning and growth of the Fine Arts Commission. We see Mr. Burnham, representing the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, suggesting the park. Next we see Mr. Moore, now the principal man in the Fine Arts Commission, former secretary to Senator McMillan, urging it. When Senator McMillan retired from Congress Mr. Moore remained here without a job. He became interested in parks and everything that pertained to their purchase and sale, and he finally became the man who suggested the creation of the Commission of Fine Arts and became its principal member. The plan was deliberately started back in 1901 or 1902; the Fine Arts Commission was conceived, but kept behind the scenery until 1910, when the occasion was ripe for it, and then it was created.

Now, the gentleman from Kentucky was entirely mistaken. Mr. Burnham never was in the employ of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad. He was chairman of what has been known as the Senate Park Commission in 1901, and he went abroad as chairman of that commission. The Plaza in front of the Union Station was provided for in legislation initiated by Senator McMillan, but completed after his death in August, 1902. Mr. Burnham fortunately had been commissioned by the Pennsylvania Railroad to design its station, which had been relocated in the Mall by act of Congress. He persuaded the President of the Pennsylvania Railroad, Mr. Cassatt, to remove the station from the Mall to its present site on Massachusetts Avenue, thus permitting an uninterrupted park between the Capitol and the White House. On the death of Senator McMillan in 1902 Mr. Moore went into private business in Detroit, where he continued for 16 years, until 1918. When the Commission of Fine Arts was created, in 1910, he was appointed by President Taft a member of the commission and was reappointed twice by President Wilson. He was in Detroit, and declares that he had no knowledge that Congress contemplated establishing the Commission of Fine Arts until he read of his appointment in the newspapers. Mr. Burnham was the original chairman of the commission. On his death in 1912 he was succeeded by Daniel Chester French, sculptor, and on the resignation of Mr. French the commission elected Mr. Moore their chairman, in which position he has been continued. Congress did not give to the owners of the Union Station "in money and land $8,000,000 to help build a $2,000,000 or $3,000,000 station," as stated. Congress did give to each of the two railroads $1,500,000 toward building the tunnel under Capitol Hill and the relocation of their terminals, which terminals cost the railroads in the neighborhood of $14,000,000, as was stated at that time.

CONCERNING THE LINCOLN STATUE.

The Commission of Fine Arts was asked as to whether the Lincoln statue, if taken down, might be relocated at Fort Stevens, and the commission replied that in their judgment the statue might be so relocated. The Commission of Fine Arts did not, either directly or indirectly, advise taking down the statue.

In conclusion it is again respectfully suggested that the Commission of Fine Arts has no authority except simply to give advice when its advice is asked for by an officer of the Government or by a committee of Congress. If, therefore, the commission has become as powerful as some gentlemen say that it has its power has been obtained solely because its advice has been followed by the executive officers and by Congress. If the advice has been followed in the majority of cases, the advice must be considered good.

Mr. BECK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has a right to be recognized in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I desire at the proper time to offer an amendment to reduce still further the amount in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] has undertaken to go into the history of the Fine Arts Commission by referring to the Union Station and to some other projects in Washington. The act creating the Fine Arts Commission was passed in 1910. At the same time there was an act passed creating the Plaza, or establishing a park between the Capitol and the Union Station. Because these two things came about the same time, the history of one meshed with the other, and I hope I may be pardoned for following the suggestion made by the gentleman from Wisconsin in telling something of that history. At that time, 1910, it was stated that this Mr. Burnham, who has been so praised by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] was in the employ of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, and that when Senator McMillan and some others went upon junketing trips to Europe for the purpose of viewing parks there, this same Mr. Burnham followed them as far as London and urged them to recommend the establishment of the Plaza between the Union Station and the Capitol, it being currently stated at that time that he was in the employ of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad. Therefore we see the beginning and growth of the Fine Arts Commission. We see Mr. Burnham, representing the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, suggesting the park. Next we see Mr. Moore, now the principal man in the Fine Arts Commission, former secretary to Senator McMillan, urging it. When Senator McMillan retired from Congress Mr. Moore remained here without a job. He became interested in parks and everything that pertained to their purchase and sale, and he finally became the man who suggested the creation of the Commission of Fine Arts and became its principal member. The plan was deliberately started back in 1901 or 1902;, the Fine Arts Commission was conceived, but kept behind the scenery until 1910, when the occasion was ripe for it, and then it was created.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will be more generous than the gentleman was. I will yield.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. What does the gentleman mean by "kept behind the scenery from 1901 until 1910"?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. They did not let anybody know that finally they intended to create this Fine Arts Commission, and grab the parks and streets and everything else in Washington and put them under their control. That is what it meant. Gentlemen were talking about buildings only a few moments ago. Do you know that you can not build a street in the District of Columbia or a suburban road without consulting the Fine Arts Commission or without their butting in?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The gentleman says they kept it out of sight. Here is their voluminous report, filled with pictures.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. You are talking about the McMillan report of 1902?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes; the improvements of the park system of the District of Columbia—a voluminous report open to the world.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes; but that was Senator McMillan's. He has gone; but here is his successor, who was then his secretary, and he and Burnham, an employee of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, planned the very thing with the pictures in it that you are now exhibiting to this House.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit another question?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I hope the gentleman will permit me to continue, because he had 35 minutes and I have only 10. When the Baltimore & Ohio station was changed from down on Pennsylvania Avenue to its present location, Congress gave the owners of the Union Station in money and in land $8,000,000 to help build a $2,000,000 or $3,000,000 station.

When the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Co. came in and asked that a million and a half dollars be given them as a present, to help complete it, the other railroad partner came in and asked for a million and a half dollars, because the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad had been given a million and a half. The two railroads were given in land about $5,000,000, and in money $3,000,000. When the last railroad company came and asked for the last million and a half dollars the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] was then more prominent on the floor than now, because he was more active, and the question was asked of him: "Do you think the railroad will take that million dollars and a half?" His answer was, "Do you think a duck would swim?" [Laughter.]

This was their scheme. Mr. Burnham and Mr. Moore wanted all the railroad property between the Union Station and the Capitol taken as a park. They urged it. The Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, through its counsel, in a communication addressed to Mr. Tawney, then chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, said they would take original cost plus 6 per cent interest for their holdings between Union Station and the Capitol. But when the condemnation jury came along and awarded damages, they gave the Baltimore & Ohio Co. $565,000 more than they asked for their property. There came in the work of Mr. Moore and Mr. Burnham, who has just been praised so much by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

But there is another thing in this: We have the Botanical Garden down here near the Capitol, and these same men have made up their minds to destroy that. The Botanical Garden was placed convenient to the Capitol so that Members might easily get flowers and shrubs for their constituents. These same men have devised a scheme to buy Mount Hamilton, out yonder in the country, consisting of several hundred acres, and to get rid of the Botanical Gardens.

And in order to get rid of it they have placed the statues of Gen. Grant and Gen. Meade behind the magnificent trees down there in order that they may drive the garden out of existence and sell Mount Hamilton to the Government. They want several hundred acres, and during the last Congress Mr. Moore had a hearing before the Committee on the Library, of which I was then a member, and it was actually urged that this tract of land ought to be bought at the enormous price asked for it because it was poor enough to grow huckleberries. Now, that is not an exaggeration, not even a pious exaggeration; it is the actual truth. They wanted it also to grow trees and even agricultural products in duplication of the Agricultural Department. They made up their minds to destroy this Botanical Garden in order to have the Government buy the other tract at a heavy and unnecessary cost.

Mr. Moore is still endeavoring to force that purchase on Congress. The gentleman from Wisconsin has been praising some of the alleged art that has been stuck up here in Washington. You have all seen the equestrian statue of Sheridan at Sheridan Circle. I recall well that one day when the gentleman from Wisconsin was sitting just a little farther to the left than he is now, we spoke of that equestrian statue, and he said that the horse reminded him of a horse with an acute case of bots. [Laughter.] That is a piece of architecture that these men have been responsible for, and yet here comes the gentleman from Wisconsin and says they should be continued to do as they please on public matters here.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say something in regard to this proposition. I wish to say to the committee that in whatever I said in presenting this bill the other day, and whatever interrogatories I propounded to Mr. Moore were not prompted by any personal feeling against him whatever. I never met Mr. Moore but twice or three times in my life. But it was prompted by reason of the fact that we found evidence of fraud in this proposition, and if I can not convince you of it these recommendations should be set aside. I meant no attack and intended no attack on this commission as such. All the other men save Mr. Moore connected with the commission, I presume, are fine gentlemen. I know nothing to the contrary, and they are entitled to the benefit of that presumption. I do know that Mr. Moore has been practicing fraud on this Government, and I do not ask you to accept my assertion, for assertions are easily made. But I do ask you to accept the facts. In the first place, he gained the position he is now occupying, and performing little if any duty, for the purpose of carrying out his design so strongly intimated by the gentleman from Kentucky at the head of the fine arts institution. He has been around Washington from the time he ceased to be secretary to Mr. McMillan down to the hour he was appointed to this Fine Arts Commission, a creature of his own forming. He saw fit to charge his expenses to the Fine Arts Commission when he came down here to take the place that had been accorded him in the Library in order that he might have a place at the expense of the Government that might help him in the promulgation of this scheme he has been pestering Congress and everybody else with, although he does not spend one-tenth of the time in doing the duties that he is supposed to discharge in the Library position to which he was appointed.

I have before me concrete evidence from a gentleman who knows how the whole thing was brought about. Another is doing the duty and he is drawing the salary. He has violated every portion of the law creating this commission, of which he is the father. He has violated that law which says that the expense of employees of the Government shall not be more than $5, with an account rendered, in each individual trip that he has made over this country. He has gone galivanting over the country from one end to the other at the expense of this Fine Arts Commission. He has put in vouchers without certification time and without number, never one with a certification, and never has explained any of the items therein except to say that they were for personal expenses and official business. The question that we have before us is not the arraignment of this commission, not the arraignment, if you please, of the other members of this commission, but we would have been derelict in our duty had we not brought to your attention the peculations and the fraud committed by this man. If there is anyone who dare defend him, I would like to furnish him with the facts before any investigating committee. This man Moore spent some $289 in going to California, and the only excuse he gave was to look at the floor of the valley of the Yosemite that the God Almighty put there, and which he should never be permitted to desecrate.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. If the gentleman will be as generous with me as I was with him in regard to time, I shall yield.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The gentleman can have another three hours, so far as I am concerned, if he wishes. The gentleman says that Mr. Moore said the only thing he had to do was to look at the floor of the valley. Then, in the hearings the gentleman from Indiana is quoted as saying that that is a natural monument and that Mr. Moore had nothing to do with that; that it was designed by God Almighty long before he was permitted to see it.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Oh, if the gentleman wants to ask a question, let him ask it. I do not propose to have him read those hearings in my time.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Did not Mr. Moore say there was something else that he went to look at besides the floor of the valley?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes; and at the trees.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. He told the gentleman that he went out there to see about the bridges and also about the location of hotels, and he went on and told in detail why he went there, because the Government did not want that park desecrated.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Why, this man did not even want a hotel built in one of these parks without the consent and the assent of the Fine Arts Commission.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The point before us at this time is whether the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] should be adopted, which is to increase this appropriation from $6,000 to $10,000. We are opposing it for the reason that we know from the investigation that we have made that if this business is conducted as it is intended to be conducted, within the law, it can be conducted easily at $6,000 a year. We are attempting not only to save a little bit of money but we call to the attention of this committee an imposition which has been practiced on Congress for a great many years, and so far as I am concerned I do not propose that Congress shall be imposed upon again except with its consent, after full knowledge.

Mr. Moore has violated the law in this respect. The law provides that no clerks or no one occupying an official position shall be given an increased salary except by reason of a promotion to increased duties. Originally Congress created a secretary. The secretary is Col. Sherrill now, and the man who occupies this position is always the man who has charge of public buildings and grounds. However, he is simply a nominal secretary, and the real secretary is the man they selected. They started that official originally at $1,200 a year and kept raising his salary without his official duties having increased until it is now $2,500 a year. This is a man named Cammerer. I suppose he prepared this statement that the gentleman from Wisconsin has read, because he attempted to come down here and defend everybody before the committee. The language is such that I know Mr. Cammerer prepared the statement read by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER]. Not content with violating the law in going himself at the expense of the Government all over the country to attend these so-called meetings, Mr. Moore has taken this man Cammerer with him, paying his expenses, violating the law with reference to allowances. They are not content to ride on an ordinary passenger train. They take the Congressional Limited and pay $3.80 additional fare back and forth. They stop at the best hotels and stay as long as they please. The fact of the business is that this man Moore has given a great portion of his time to this institution, according to his own testimony, and yet is being paid $3,000 a year for his full time over here at the Congressional Library. If you gentlemen want to subscribe to that sort of business you may do it. I want to see somebody at the head of this institution that is honest with the Government and with himself. We have plenty of such people in this country.

I have no fight to make against any of these illustrious gentlemen whom the gentleman from Wisconsin took all of his time in extolling, but I do bring to you the knowledge that we have with reference to the man against whom we have made these charges. I have before me the photostatic copies of every item of expense drawn for the last three years, and in every one he has violated the law.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The gentleman said a moment ago that Mr. Moore, in reply to his question as to why he went to California, said he went there to look at the floor of the valley, and the gentleman from Indiana told him, and repeated it in his speech the other day, that God Almighty had put the floor there and that Mr. Moore had nothing to do with it. Will the gentleman permit me to read——

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No; I will not.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I want to say——

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I refuse to yield.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The gentleman misstated the testimony and I repeat it. The gentleman from Indiana misstated the testimony. These men listening to the gentleman have the right to know the facts. I have the record right here and propose to show that the gentleman from Indiana is misstating the facts. I do now challenge him to answer it. I say that it is a deliberate misstatement.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin is out of order.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I wish to compliment the gentleman upon the splendid defense that he is making in behalf of his client.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. As I have listened to the gentleman I am wondering what this item is in here at all for. Why give them anything?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Well, because there is some reason for this commission, and the purpose of your committee in reducing this is because of the fact if the limitation put on is adopted, and I trust it will be, and these gentlemen conduct their business for which they were created under the law, as they should conduct it, $6,000 is sufficient. But we felt it our duty to bring before this body the facts in the case, so that this petty graft could not go on any longer. Now, we had before us the assistant secretary. If any of you gentlemen would talk to him for 10 minutes, you would be well convinced of the fact that instead of $2,500, $1,800 would be a more fitting compensation for him.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Will the gentleman advise what is the real purpose of this commission? What real good does it do?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It is too long a question for me to discuss. There are all sorts and grades of opinion as to whether or not it is worth while, and, if not, there should be some affirmative action taken to abolish it. We have done enough, we think, when we have brought you the facts of the performance of this gentleman. And he is the commission. I know, and I am sure of my position, that he is responsible for every executive order that has been issued.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Who makes the appointments of these officers?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The President. I can not believe that President Taft or President Wilson or President Harding have ever had brought to their attention the manner in which business is conducted by this man. It is unbelievable that if all of these facts had been brought to their attention that they would have permitted him to remain long in office.

I want to say to you that whoever is responsible for getting this man in the Library and paying him $3,000 a year for services he does not render, has violated the law, and somebody is responsible for the vouchers he is signing over there.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Do the hearings disclose the fact that this man might be in Detroit or in Los Angeles, and call a meeting in New York, and that they can collect railway fare there?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes; and we put a provision in this bill for the purpose of calling attention to the law; that the only expense they can charge is going to and from meetings here. He says that he went from Detroit to New York to attend meetings that could not be authorized under this law, and he charged his expense up to the Government. And you will scarcely find a bill or voucher in all of this photostatic array in which he has not charged all the way from $2 to $10 taxi hire. When asked about that, he said that instead of one fare, it had been used for the commission, when the law says that each man shall certify his own account. So, gentlemen, we think we are entitled rather to the praise of this body than its criticism. It is small, I admit. But this practice may be going on in other departments, and, if so, this will act as a warning.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered.

Mr. KING. I rise to oppose the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER], and would like to be heard briefly.

I had not sought to make any statement with reference to this matter whatever, but on account of my good and artistic friend, the gentleman from Wisconsin, whom I like very well, falling into such egregious error, I think I ought to acquaint the Members with some of the facts in the case. I charge, in addition to the charges made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD], Charles Moore with desecrating the monument of Abraham Lincoln, that the people of Washington erected with their own money. The gentleman from Wisconsin says that I am a crank upon that subject. I am not. I am not going to talk at length upon that subject now. Charles Moore is the man who laid the plan for demolishing it. Just as Macbeth laid the plan for the murder of Banquo, so Moore schemed for the destruction of the monument. Now, all of a sudden, in the committee room of the committee reporting this bill, and here to-day on the floor of this House, this statue of Abraham Lincoln rises before him like Banquo's ghost, and he can not say "Shake not thy gory locks at me." Mr. Moore attempts to lay the blame of the act on Congress. That is his style of propaganda. It was his method of defense. He laid it to Congress. Poor old Congress! It must stand for everything. In support of this the gentleman from Wisconsin attempts to read a section of a bill that was passed in this House, but which was passed, as a matter of fact, when there were only 50 persons present, and the gentleman who prepared that bill struck out the word "Lincoln," so that no one had an idea it was Lincoln's statue. The bill simply referred to the removal of "the statue." If it had said "Lincoln statue" it would never have passed the House.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KING. Not until I have concluded.

The fact of the matter is, there is no reason in the world why the Fine Arts Commission should not be abolished. It has long since been sailing under false colors and has done many things under false pretenses.

The commission the gentleman spoke of here was the Parks commission. That was operating in 1901 or 1902, and it was not until 1910 that Mr. Charles Moore put forward this scheme of a Fine Arts Commission in the city of Washington, that would furnish him a living for some 20 years. He had been secretary of the District of Columbia Committee. Where did he ever study art? What entablatures of ancient Greece did he ever study? Did he ever go to Greece or Rome, except on one occasion?

This commission is engaged in a campaign to remove all the statues here in Washington. The Du Pont statue was taken down. This gentleman is a lover of the nude. The memorial in place of it consists, as you all know, of a fine marble fountain, with two naked figures, one upon one side and one upon the other; one is a female figure and the other is a male figure. They tell me, the police force tells me, that they have to keep a squad there at night to keep that male figure from coming to life. [Laughter.] I invite Members of Congress to make a little investigation down there.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, may I have five minutes more?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman from Illinois may proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for one question?

Mr. KING. Yes, sir.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] awhile ago said this Fine Arts Commission had saved to the District of Columbia and the city of Washington a great deal of money. Referring to the Dupont statue alone, I wish to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that as a consequence of the action taken with respect to that Dupont statue they have saddled on the District of Columbia an expense of $2,500 a year for all time.

Mr. KING. Yes. The next thing they took down was the Lincoln statue. And who was the iconoclast? Charles Moore. The next one that will come down is the statue of Admiral Farragut, made out of the propeller of his flagship in the Washington Navy Yard—an object of instruction and edification to everybody in Washington. But Admiral Farragut will come down next if Mr. Moore is permitted to go on with his plans. He has persistently conducted a slanderous movement against the Lincoln monument for the last four or five or six years, and finally was successful in his effort. The fact that Congress passed the provision to remove it is not to be blamed on Congress, but upon Mr. Moore. As I pointed out a moment ago, the name "Lincoln" was not used in the provision.

Where did he study art and architecture? How did he become an artist? How did he rise from the position of a mere committee clerk of the Committee on the District of Columbia to that high eminence that he now claims among the great artists of the world? The only thing that I can find in evidence is that, besides attending, perhaps, a night school, where he heard some lectures on art, he was on that commission that went to Europe under the name of a "park commission," back in 1901, and prepared and kept their vouchers for them. I wish you would examine some of the expenditures as set down in that report. Talk about the little junkets that some of the Members of this Congress have taken! In order to go from Paris down to Rome it cost that party from $1,400 to $1,600, just that one trip.

Mr. JONES of Texas. It must have been an artistic trip.

Mr. KING. It was an artistic trip. They passed through a very elegant part of France.

Mr. WINGO. Has the gentleman ever taken that trip?

Mr. KING. No; but I think the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO] has taken that trip. They seem to believe in fountains; fountains instead of statues is their demand. They traveled all the way from Paris to Rome, but they never determined to build fountains instead of statues in Washington until they saw that beautiful fountain in Brussels known as the Manikin.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there for a question?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. I know the gentleman wants to be fair about the artistic achievements of Mr. Moore, and he will concede that that gentleman designs beautiful comfort stations. [Laughter.]

Mr. KING. Yes. That was mentioned on the floor of the House the other day. That, of course, is a useful matter.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there for a question?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. That remark elicited applause and laughter the other day. I do not suppose that the gentleman knows that the testimony shows that the Fine Arts Commission knew nothing whatever about the location of that station that we referred to. They had nothing to do with it, and they knew nothing about it.

Mr. KING. No; the gentleman is mistaken. They were down there and drew the specifications for it, no doubt. But they were better qualified to attend to those matters than anyone that I know of.

Mr. WINGO. I can assure the gentleman from Wisconsin that if such stations were erected without their approval they would not stand very long; they would have to come down.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KING. Yes; and then I want to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska is recognized.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I want to call attention to one point made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD], namely, the drawing of a large amount of money by Mr. Moore from the appropriation set apart for the Library of Congress while absent from duties in the Library. There is a way to reach that point and test it thoroughly and call for a refund of excess drafts upon that fund. The Librarian of Congress, if he should see fit to proceed in proper order, can ask the Comptroller General to reopen the accounts relating to these payments through the disbursing officer for the Library of Congress. Then they can check up, from the time reports which ought to have been kept, the amount of time that Mr. Moore was absent from his duties. If he was absent for six months in any one year he can be called upon for a refund of the excessive salary drawn. He is allowed under the law 30 days of annual leave with pay; 30 days of extension for sick leave, in case the sick leave is granted, 60 days being the maximum for which any person in the Government service can draw pay while absent from duty. Now, let the accounts be reopened. Let them demand a showing from the time reports by the Librarian of Congress in regard to this matter, and then let the Comptroller General reopen those accounts, charge back to Mr. Moore all excess payments, and demand of him a return of that money to the Treasury of the United States. [Applause and cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. MANN rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves to strike out the last two words.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the Fine Arts Commission was created by an act of Congress passed in 1910. I think that any gentleman here who served in Congress prior to that time, who had had any experience at all with matters either legislative or administrative relating to art, appreciated the desirability if not the necessity of establishing a commission of this character. The first design was simply for a commission to pass upon questions relating to statues or other public matters of that character, but the commission as constituted in the first place was so efficient that the President almost at once issued an order directing public officers to consult with the commission in reference to the construction of buildings and other public enterprises. That direction, which was originally issued by President Taft, was followed by President Wilson and, I think, by President Harding, and it has saved the Government from a great many execrable buildings. Homely, useless attempts at adornment would have been put up in many places by the Government except for the advice of this commission.

The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] a while ago alluded to Daniel H. Burnham, one of the original members of the commission, as "an employee of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad." Daniel H. Burnham constructed the World's Fair at Chicago, the handsomest exhibition that has ever been given in the history of the world. [Applause.] He was the head of the largest firm of architects in Chicago and one of the largest in the United States. He was never an employee of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad. [Applause.] He was a man of wide discernment and great artistic temperament.

The appropriation for the Fine Arts Commission has always been $10,000. I have frequently wondered how in the world they were able to accomplish the great good they did for the small amount of money allowed them. There is no appropriation made by Congress which is better used in its total results than the appropriation for the Fine Arts Commission. [Applause.] I, for one, wish we had had a fine arts commission to pass upon the statues over here in Statuary Hall—homely——

Mr. BUTLER. Lonesome.

Mr. MANN. I can not describe adequately and it is beyond the power of words to describe the enormity of many of the statues in that Hall, while if they had been submitted to a fine arts commission there would have been sent here handsome, beautiful statues, of which everybody could be proud. I do not want to see the Government trying to build homely things when you can get handsome things at no greater expense, and one of the greatest mistakes the Government can make is to strike down the Fine Arts Commission. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out "$6,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky: On page 9, line 8, strike out "$6,000."

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I do not know that I can add anything to what has been said. The substance of it is that this fund is being misappropriated, and it occurs to me that if this appropriation is disallowed altogether for one year the rest of the commission and Congress will wake up to the fact that money has been misappropriated and cause one above suspicion to be put in his place, one who will not draw a salary in the Congressional Library while giving his attention the greater part of the time toward selling somebody's private property to the District of Columbia or to the United States Government. Strike this item out for one year and then let it be revived in other hands and no man will come quicker to its support than I will. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] said a few moments ago that Mr. Burnham was not an employee of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad. I accept his statement as correct, but at the same time I suspect that he was the servant of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad in some capacity. If he was not, then he was the servant of somebody else who had land to sell for the purpose of making parks at an exorbitant figure, because in 1910 it was undisputed that he followed the McMillan Commission to the city of London and there proposed the plan which afterwards was written into a report.

Mr. SPROUL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. SPROUL. Burnham & Co. were the architects for the Union Station here in Washington, and I figured on the plans.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. What?

Mr. SPROUL. They say he was not an employee of the Baltimore & Ohio. He was the architect of the Union Depot here—bearing out the gentleman's statement.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I was willing to accept the statement of the gentleman from Illinois that he was not their employee, but I am also willing to accept the gentleman's statement, because I have had no positive testimony. I was speaking from current rumor. I am glad the gentleman can remove the statement from rumor to one of fact; that he was an employee of the railroad.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, just one word on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON], to which I am opposed. An attempt was made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] to belittle the work of the Fine Arts Commission, and if the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] believed all these charges about the commission and about Mr. Moore, that fact would perhaps justify him in offering his amendment to strike out this amount. In this attempt to belittle Mr. Moore the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] said that he asked Mr. Moore why he went out to the Yosemite Valley, and that Mr. Moore replied that he went out to look at the floor of the valley. The gentleman from Indiana said the same thing in his speech here on last Thursday, and it elicited much laughter at Mr. Moore's expense. The gentleman from Indiana ridiculed what he said was Moore's answer. But what did Mr. Moore really say? What reason did he give for going to the Yosemite Valley? I will read from the hearings:

Mr. WOOD. That is a natural monument and Mr. Moore has had nothing to do with that design; God designed it long before he was ever dreamed of.

Mr. MOORE. The only thing I had to do with it was to keep men from spoiling it.

Mr. WOOD. I do not think you contributed anything to that.

Mr. MOORE. Well, a good deal.

Mr. WOOD. What did you contribute to it?

Mr. MOORE. I looked after the plans for the floor of the valley and the location of the hotels.

Mr. WOOD. The floor of the valley?

Mr. MOORE. Yes.

Mr. WOOD. That floor was there when you went and the same floor is there yet.

Mr. MOORE. But they are locating roads all over it and the new hotel was located there, and from the very beginning we have been consulted about the location of buildings, and the plans for bridges, and everything else for the national parks.

Now, neither to-day nor in his speech on Thursday last did the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] make even the slightest reference to plans for bridges, location of roads, and location of buildings in the Yosemite Valley, all of which were specifically mentioned by Mr. Moore. The gentleman from Indiana simply quoted a small part of an answer, and, omitting the rest of it, proceeded to hold up Mr. Moore to ridicule. He gave the House to understand that Mr. Moore said that he went out merely to look at the floor of the valley, although, as a matter of fact, that gentleman gave a very rational explanation for his visit to Yosemite. Not only that, but this report of the hearings shows that Stephen T. Mather, head of the park commission, asked that somebody go to the Yosemite and investigate and report what was being done in the valley. Our great national parks should not be desecrated. Human greed could and will, unless constantly watched, do a thousand things to destroy their sublimity. This commission does not wish, you do not wish, your constituents do not wish any defilement, any lessening of the grandeur of these wonder places.

Now, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KING] forgot one or two things he should have remembered. Is it possible that the gentleman from Illinois does not know of this testimony that James W. Good, chairman in the last House of the Committee on Appropriations, put that provision in the appropriation bill for moving the statue, and that he did not do it at the request of Mr. Moore, but at the request of Elliott Woods, Superintendent of this Capitol; not only the Superintendent of this Capitol but the man who was by act of Congress vested with the sole jurisdiction over the remodeling and rebuilding of the old courthouse in Judiciary Square.

Mr. KING. The gentleman from Wisconsin is asking me a question, I believe.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. No; it was a sort of hypothetical question. I said, "Is it possible." [Laughter.] Because I know that the gentleman knows it well, but he handily forgets when he sees an opportunity to attack this commission.

And gentlemen should know that all of the real estate speculators in this town are not among the speculators which my distinguished friend from Kentucky had in mind when he was so vociferously denouncing the commission and Mr. Moore. They should know, too, that when the Fine Arts Commission interfered with the land speculators and lobbyists who wanted to build a road from the end of Sixteenth Street to Gettysburg lined with road houses and filled with carousing night riders in automobiles as a memorial to Abraham Lincoln they made many enemies who have been fighting the commission ever since.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to address the committee for two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to address the committee for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Wisconsin made the statement that the gentleman from Illinois forgot to mention something that he should have said or intended to say. That is a very common habit among public men. I have known the gentleman from Wisconsin, who is one of the great men of Congress, to say some things he ought not to have said and to forget to say some things he intended to say. [Laughter.] He was so busy a while ago reading a dissertation, which I think was prepared by the president of the Fine Arts Commission, that he would not yield to me for a question although he had 20 minutes and I asked him to yield to me twice. I think he sought to leave with the committee the impression that the Fine Arts Commission was responsible for transferring the depot from Sixth and B Streets over to where it is now. It is the first time that I ever heard anybody claim that the Fine Arts Commission was entitled to the credit for that except the chairman of the Fine Arts Commission, who is really the whole commission. Congress did it, and did it for the purpose of consolidating the stations and building the magnificent building which we now have, and the Fine Arts Commission does not deserve the credit the gentleman from Wisconsin seeks to give it.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANGLEY. No; the gentleman would not yield to me although I sought twice to interrupt him with a modest question, and he had 20 minutes and I have only 2, and I can not yield to him. I am a human being, and I do unto others as others do unto me. [Laughter.] I do wish to say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that I agree with him that the great national parks ought not to be destroyed or desecrated, but I think, also, that we ought not to select a site for the Botanic Garden, a great Government institution on a hillside—Mount Hamilton—covered with rocks and barren soil, which, as the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] said the other day, is fit only for the habitation of gophers and groundhogs, which will enrich a local real-estate syndicate, costing the Government hundreds of thousands of dollars, when we have enough Government-owned land, beautifully located, on which to build five as fine botanic gardens as there are in the world. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, is not my amendment first in order? If my amendment is adopted, that disposes of the other. The gentleman from Wisconsin moves to strike out "$10,000" and insert "$6,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. MANN. Did not the gentleman from Kentucky move to amend the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment by the gentleman from Kentucky was to strike out $10,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. My amendment was to strike out $10,000 out of the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman did not make it in that way. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 9, line 8, strike out "$6,000" and insert "$10,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The question was taken, and on a division (demanded by Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin) there were—ayes 44, noes 52.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON].

The question was taken and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out the last proviso.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MANN: Page 9, line 11, after the semicolon, strike out "Provided further, That no part of this sum shall be expended for traveling expenses other than those incurred by members of the commission for actual travel only in going to and returning from Washington to attend the meetings of the commission."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I have no desire to defend the payment of any traveling allowances which ought not to have been allowed. There may have been some in this instance. We find that all through the Government. This Fine Arts Commission necessarily at times, either the commission itself or one of its members, must go to some point other than the city of Washington. Members of the Fine Arts Commission serve without pay. They are distinguished men, men who have earned their reputation by their actual works. I do not know how it will seem to the rest of you, but it seems to me that it will be mighty small for the Government of the United States to ask a great architect or a great painter or a great sculptor to go from New York to Philadelphia to serve the public without at least paying his traveling expenses. The rest of you may think it is a mighty fine thing for a great Government to do that, but I would not permit a man to do that for me personally, without at least offering to pay his expenses.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. LANGLEY. I want to suggest to him that these gentlemen do not have to serve in this capacity unless they wish to do so.

Mr. MANN. And neither does the gentleman from Kentucky, but we pay him four times his traveling expenses to come to Washington.

Mr. LANGLEY. Inasmuch as the gentleman has made that statement, I insist on stating that my mileage allowance is $235, and that I have spent out of my own salary on official business going to Kentucky and back nearly $1,000 in the past year. The gentleman, therefore, is mistaken and puts me in a false position.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman ought to have stayed in Washington.

Mr. LANGLEY. Oh, he might have stayed here and harangued the House every day, as some gentlemen do, but he did not see fit to do it, because he thought the trips were more in the interest of his constituents than interfering with other people's business, with which the people often had no concern. [Laughter.]

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Was this proviso ever carried in any of these appropriations before?

Mr. MANN. It never has been carried before. It is a new thing, and I do not say there ought not to be some kind of a proviso here. I think that Congress will write itself down as ineffably little if in creating and maintaining a great arts commission, composed of the greatest artists in the country, we say that we want them to do the work and go to these places, but that they will have to bear their own expenses unless they happen to come to Washington.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, evidently the gentleman from Illinois forgets his own participation in the creation of this board. The gentleman from Illinois evidently had some doubts about it at the time the thing was passed. I take it for granted that he was here, and that he must have known, because nothing ever escapes him. He must have been fully aware of the limitations placed in the law. We have embodied the substance of the law as this limitation in this bill, and I want to read it to the members of the committee. I am reading now from the organic act creating this Fine Arts Commission, which this man Moore forced on the Government:

Such commission shall have a secretary and such other assistants as the commission may authorize, and the members of the commission shall each be paid actual expenses in going to and returning from Washington to attend the meetings of said commission and while attending the same.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. If that is the law, why amplify it? Why not stand on the law? Why put any legislation whatever in the bill in addition to that?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The purpose in putting it in is, first, that we may call it to the attention of the gentleman who is responsible for this law, and also call his attention to the fact that he has been violating it ever since the Fine Arts Commission was created; second, it is to call the attention of the general accounting officer to the fact, so that in the future he would better not pass these things, and that he can not claim that he did so in ignorance of the law. We have put into this bill a limitation that the gentleman from Illinois himself helped put in, or consented to have put in. I say it is high time for Members of this Congress, instead of defending these petty peculators and small grafters, to bring to their attention the law, and notify them that if they wish to violate it they will do so on their own responsibility.

Mr. BUTLER. How did such a bill of expense as that get by the auditor?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It got by because of some hocus-pocus arrangement, where every one of these vouchers was passed without certification, without authorization——

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Is that by order of the President?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No; it was hot by order of the President.

Mr. MANN. How did they get by without it?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I do not know, unless by order of the Secretary.

Mr. MANN. Is it not by order of the President?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No; take every one of these vouchers, and we had them all before the committee, and the gentleman will see that there is written in typewriting across the bottom, on almost all of them, the words "to be paid without certification."

Mr. LANGLEY. Does it not occur to the gentleman that the overpowering and consuming love of art on the part of these gentlemen ought to make them willing to pay their own expenses?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Oh, I am willing to pay these men. I would ten times rather pay them a good salary than to have them practicing this kind of fraud on the Government, and then coming and asking us to condone it. I am putting into this bill the law, and if you gentlemen are opposed to it you can vote it down.

Mr. JONES of Texas. If I understand that proviso, it permits the payment for actual traveling expenses.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Certainly; that is all the law permits.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. By what disbursing officer were these vouchers paid?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. They were paid by the officers of the Treasury. They can not get through now, because the attention of the general accounting officer has been called to the fact that this outrage has been perpetrated.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. These vouchers there went to the Auditor for the State and Other Departments, but they were paid ordinarily through some disbursing officer. Who was it?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I do not know.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Do the vouchers show?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. They show that they were paid without certification. Who did it I do not know, unless, as I have said, by the secretary of the commission. The photostatic copy does not show. That is one of the peculiar features of each one of these vouchers. Each one shows on its face for personal or official service, without even suggesting the nature of it. We had the gentleman before us——

Mr. LANGLEY. What is the effect of that certification? Does that mean it has got to be paid?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. To be paid without question. But the present accounting officer tells me there will be no more paid like that.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WOOD of Indiana: Page 10, line 21, before the word "and," insert the figure "9."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I offer an additional amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana offers another amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WOOD of Indiana: Page 10, line 21, after the comma following the figure "11," insert the following: "accruing during the fiscal year 1923 or any prior fiscal years."

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to pay those items that have already been passed upon, but have not as yet been paid, or may be passed upon, or paid out of the appropriation.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I will.

Mr. WALSH. How does this appropriation compare with what has been carried heretofore?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It is more. It is $300,000 below the estimates, but a little bit more than the appropriation of 1920.

Mr. WALSH. Is the work of this commission increasing?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes. That is the trouble with it. They wanted $300,000 more than we gave them, and the hearings disclosed a number of claims were filed in the last year. They are on the increase, and have been on the increase for a certain length of time.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

FEDERAL POWER COMMISSION.

Not exceeding $4,000 of the appropriation contained in the Federal water power act may be used for necessary printing and binding, and not exceeding $500 for law books, books of reference, and periodicals, during the fiscal year 1923.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Will the chairman of the committee please explain the necessity for this commission?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Well, this commission was created by a law passed by this Congress a short time ago creating the Federal Power Commission, and an appropriation is fixed by that act. They are employed in various activities, and seem to be working and doing some business.

Mr. DOWELL. What are the functions of this commission?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Well, the Federal Power Commission has to do with all of the water powers of this country. It has supervision not only of the streams that are supposed to be navigable but also supervision over the streams that lead into these navigable streams, and it also has power to grant water powers on these lateral streams. In other words, they have supervision of the water-producing capacity of the United States, so far as the water is concerned.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. The Federal Power Commission consists of the Secretary of War, its chairman, the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of Agriculture, and then there is a paid secretary of the commission, and then there is an Army engineer, who is assigned, a colonel, to furnish engineering experience for the commission. It does not meet regularly. For instance, on last Monday they had a hearing as to the granting and licensing of water power on the high dam on the upper Mississippi between St. Paul and Minneapolis. And the three Cabinet officers who are on the commission draw no compensation, but the secretary does; and the engineer is paid, as I understand it, from the Army appropriation.

Mr. DOWELL. This commission has for its function the approval of these contracts and leases?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Exactly. I might mention that there is pending before the commission application on the part of any number of cities for the development of water power.

Mr. DOWELL. Is this commissioner that is appointed aside from the Cabinet officers essential to the approval of these leases?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. He is not a commissioner.

Mr. DOWELL. He is a $4,000 man?

Mr. MANN. This $4,000 does not relate to him.

Mr. DOWELL. There is a secretary that draws some salary. What does he draw?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Five thousand dollars a year.

Mr. DOWELL. It is more than this, then?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes. All the clerical force is drawn from the Interior Department and War Department and Agricultural Department. There is a force of 22 employees, and they have their offices in the Department of the Interior.

Mr. DOWELL. In this department?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes. And I think there are 10 from the War Department, and possibly 11 from the Agricultural Department, and 9 from the Department of the Interior.

Mr. DOWELL. My inquiry is to ascertain if this commission is really accomplishing any good, and if so, I have no objection to it.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I can assure the gentleman that it is still working.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOWELL. Certainly.

Mr. BARBOUR. Out in California there are a great many conflicting claims for power sites, and this commission passed upon these claims, to determine which one is entitled to a site.

Mr. DOWELL. I withdraw my objection.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska moves to strike out the last two words.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I want to call attention to some indorsements upon these photostat copies of vouchers. They show the indorsements on the back of the vouchers of the Fine Arts Commission. Payments were made by a disbursing officer. The person having a bill of expense made it out and presented it to the disbursing clerk, and he paid it and vouchered it in his account to the Auditor for the State and Other Departments who had jurisdiction of that business at that time. Col. C. S. Ridley was the disbursing officer. It will be found on the back of each voucher, and it shows that through the accounts of the disbursing officer these matters would be reported.

Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION.

For five commissioners, at $10,000 each; secretary, $5,000; in all, $55,000.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the sum of "$55,000."

The CHAIRMAN. In the first paragraph?

Mr. BLANTON. In the one that the Clerk just finished reading.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman offers an amendment to the first paragraph?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLANTON: Page 11, line 3, strike out the figures "$55,000."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I do this in order to call attention to the number of large salaries provided for in this bill. The paragraph just read provides for five commissioners of the Federal Trade Commission at $10,000 each per annum. On page 14 a paragraph provides for 11 commissioners of the Interstate Commerce Commission, at $12,000 each. On page 18, the first paragraph provides for 9 members of the Railroad Labor Board at $10,000 each.

May I ask the chairman of the subcommittee what salaries the members of the Tariff Commission will draw under this bill? It is not stipulated. There is just a lump-sum appropriation of $300,000. May I ask what salaries the members of the Tariff Commission will draw under this bill?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Seven thousand five hundred dollars.

Mr. BLANTON. Seven thousand five hundred dollars each?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. There are five now, I believe?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I think there are five of them.

Mr. BLANTON. There are five?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. And they will draw $7,500, as heretofore? There is no change?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes. We did not increase anybody's salary.

Mr. BLANTON. Why was their salaries not stated instead of putting in a lump-sum appropriation of $300,000?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The only way we have of appropriating is by a lump-sum until there is a classification, although we might have reduced them to the statutory roll.

Mr. BLANTON. On page 27 are seven commissioners of the United States Shipping Board at $12,000 each. Then on page 29, the second paragraph provides that not more than 13 officers or employees, including 7 attorneys, of the United States Shipping Board or the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation shall be paid an annual salary or compensation in excess of $11,000. It places no limitation whatever upon the maximum amount.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Oh, yes.

Mr. BLANTON. That is, with respect to 13 of them. It says not more than 13 of them shall be paid a salary of more than $11,000, but with regard to 13 of them there is no maximum whatever fixed. Is that the case?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No.

Mr. BLANTON. Then they can continue to pay $35,000 a year each to two attorneys, as they have been doing up to this time?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No; there is no attorney drawing $35,000 a year.

Mr. BLANTON. The report filed heretofore shows that it was paying $35,000 per year each to two employees.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The report does not show any attorney drawing $35,000.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. We have not reached the Shipping Board. I suggest that the gentleman is not talking to the section of the bill that is pending.

Mr. BLANTON. I am talking about a saving of $55,000 by moving to strike out that sum. Under that, I am discussing these large salaries. Whenever you provide in a bill that 13 men can draw a salary unlimited, any one of them—under the large sums we are furnishing to these boards—any one of them could draw a salary of $55,000, the exact amount that I moved to strike out. Does not the chairman think we ought to put in a limitation? Because one report that I have in my files shows that until recently, at least, two employees of the United States Shipping Board were drawing salaries of $35,000 a year each, and it had seventy-odd high-priced attorneys employed. There were four drawing salaries, I believe, up to $25,000 a year. A number of them were drawing salaries of $10,000 and $15,000 a year. When is that going to stop? Why not stop it in this bill by some kind of a limitation?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine moves to strike out the last three words.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Mr. Chairman, I hope I may be permitted to proceed out of order very briefly.

In the Appendix to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, on page 8880, there was published a list of alleged slackers, and in that list was included the name of James W. Lawrence, of Eastport, Me. The paper record which justified the inclusion of the boy's name is as follows:

On June 5, 1917, the boy was registered with the local board for Washington County, Me. On December 19 of the same year he was mailed a questionnaire, which he failed to return. On March following—that is, March, 1918—because of his failure to return the questionnaire he was certified to the adjutant general of our State as delinquent. The adjutant general of the State issued a delinquent order to him, ordering him to report for military duty on April 16, 1918, and on his failure to report for such military duty he was certified to the department as a deserter. On this record the department was justified in including him in this slacker list. But unfortunately this record did not tell the whole story.

It appears also as a matter of record that on August 7, 1917, the boy submitted himself to physical examination and was found physically disqualified for military service. At that time he was in the advanced stages of tuberculosis—consumption. Shortly after, in December, 1917, the boy was sent to a sanitarium, and in March, 1918, he returned home in extremis, to die, and in the following May the boy did die of tuberculosis. That was within 30 days of the time he was ordered to report for military service.

There is nothing in the case to show that the boy, while he was at the sanitarium, or after his return, received any of these notices, and it clearly appears from affidavits furnished that even had he received them, he was physically incapable of making any response to them. Evidence of these facts has been submitted to The Adjutant General's office of the War Department, and the boy's name has been stricken from the list of slackers.

It seems to me altogether proper, in justice to the boy's memory and to the sensibilities of his parents and relatives, that as full publicity should now be given to these facts and to the removal of his name from the slacker list as to his original inclusion in such list.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

A moment ago criticism was offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] in regard to salaries. His criticism assumed that the item in the first paragraph under the Federal Trade Commission, on page 11, was without limitation. The language stands as follows:

For five commissioners, at $10,000 each.

That shows that there can be no increase of the salaries of these commissioners beyond the figure indicated, and the $55,000 would not be subject to an abuse, as suggested in the remarks of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph.

We ought to stop this camouflaging, and we ought to stop making these smoke screens. I moved to strike out the amount of $55,000 merely to get the floor to call attention to all of these various large salaries provided for in this bill. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. ANDREWS] is a sensible, highly intelligent man, and he knows that I did it for that reason.

Mr. MADDEN. These positions are all created by law.

Mr. BLANTON. I know, but I was calling attention to the fact that an economical Congress, with a sense of what we owe to the people, and our duty to retrench expenses, are still carrying these big salaries for these boards and commissions. I called attention to the various ones. Let me repeat them for the benefit of the gentleman from Nebraska.

On page 11 we provide for five commissioners at $10,000 each.

On page 14 we provide for 11 commissioners at $12,000 each.

On page 18 we provide for nine members of a board at $10,000 each.

On page 26 we provide for five members of the Tariff Commission at $7,500 each.

On page 27 we provide for seven commissioners at $12,000 each.

On page 29 we provide that with respect to the Shipping Board and the United States Emergency Fleet Corporation there shall be paid to not more than 13 officers and employees salaries of more than $11,000 each.

In other words, with respect to 13 of them we place no limitation, except that after 13 of them get all the salaries they want, then with regard to the balance of them they shall not be paid salaries of more than $11,000 each, and we leave it to their discretion. In other words, as to the balance of their employees, as long as the money lasts of these millions of dollars that we furnish to them, if they want to they can pay as much as $11,000 to each one of them.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH. With reference to these various boards and commissions to which the gentleman referred, I presume that the gentleman recalls that under the rule of the House this Committee on Appropriations would have no jurisdiction to reduce those salaries.

Mr. BLANTON. The distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts is passing the buck. He does not usually indulge in camouflage, but I call the attention of this Congress——

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman is indulging in bunk, because he knows the Committee on Appropriations can not reduce salaries thus fixed.

Mr. BLANTON. This committee is not the only committee we have. We have legislative committees that can change the salary of every man who draws a salary under the provisions of this bill, and the gentleman knows it. If these legislative committees wanted to do that, what is to keep them from bringing in a proper bill here to change these salaries?

The trouble is they do not want to do it. They want the salaries to be drawn.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. BLANTON. I will.

Mr. WALSH. Has the gentleman introduced a bill reducing any of these salaries?

Mr. BLANTON. I have called attention to them every time they have been passed.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman is always calling attention and attracting attention.

Mr. BLANTON. That is the only way on God's earth to change matters and benefit the people of the country, to call attention to these extravagances. I am going to continue to call attention to them as long as I am in Congress.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman can call the spirits from the vasty deep. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. Sometimes you need them, sometimes they help out considerably. They might stop waste and effect economy. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the post office matter.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TOWNER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill, H. R. 9981, the independent offices appropriation bill and had come to no resolution thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 848. An act to amend section 22 of the interstate commerce act by permitting the issuance of interchangeable mileage tickets on railroads, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill H. R. 9724, the Treasury Department appropriation bill, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

TREASURY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 9724) making appropriations for the Treasury Department, disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 9724) making appropriation for the Treasury Department, disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a conference. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Speaker appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. MADDEN, Mr. MAGEE, and Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing the President's address to the agricultural conference this morning.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Idaho asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend and revise the remarks I have already made.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I think, in view of the statement this morning on the bulletin as to the order of business, it might be well for the gentleman to inform Members what the order of business will be to-morrow.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I understand we are to proceed with the bill H. R. 9981, the independent offices appropriation bill.

Mr. MADDEN. I understood the leader of the House to say that the antilynching bill would be taken up to-morrow and next day.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. When did the gentleman get that information?

Mr. MADDEN. This morning.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I do not want to assume authority to speak for the majority leader, but it is rather important to know. Does the gentleman from Indiana know that this bill is to be taken up to-morrow?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I took it for granted that it would.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I will say that within the last half hour that has been my understanding from the majority leader himself—that we would proceed with this bill to-morrow.

Mr. MADDEN. Very well; I have not had any conference with the majority leader since morning.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. RICKETTS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 7601. An act to amend an act incorporating Prospect Hill Cemetery, and for other purposes.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the appropriate committee as indicated below:

S. 848. An act to amend section 22 of the act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as amended; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. HILL, by unanimous consent, was given leave of absence for one week, on account of being in the Walter Reed Hospital.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 3 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, January 24, 1922, at 12 o'clock noon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi: Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. S. 1162. An act declaring Lake George, Yazoo County, Miss., to be a nonnavigable stream; with amendments (Rept. No. 587). Referred to the House Calendar.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, January 24, 1922.

The Chaplain, Rev. J. J. Muir, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father, the God of our fathers, we come into Thy presence this morning realizing that without Thy help life would be a blank indeed. We would serve Thee with the full purpose of conscience, of life itself, so that when the record is completed we shall have the satisfaction of knowing that everything was done for the highest intentions of government, for the welfare of mankind, and the glory of Thy great name. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9724) making appropriations for the Treasury Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, requested a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. MADDEN, Mr. MAGEE, and Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee managers of the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 9859) making appropriations for the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution, and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

S. 1099. An act to amend section 2372 of the Revised Statutes;

S. 2133. An act adding lands to the State of Texas and ceding jurisdiction to the State of Texas over certain lands or bancos heretofore or hereafter acquired by the United States of America from the United States of Mexico;

H. R. 7601. An act to amend an act incorporating Prospect Hill Cemetery, and for other purposes; and

S. J. Res. 124. Joint resolution to prohibit the exportation of arms or munitions of war from the United States to certain countries, and for other purposes.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. STERLING. I present a petition of sundry citizens of Columbia, S. Dak., urging a revival of the United States Grain Corporation. I ask that the petition may be printed in the RECORD without the names, and that it be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The body of the petition is as follows:

To THOMAS STERLING,
United States Congress, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We, the undersigned, request that you carefully consider the proposition which we propose below. We ask that you present our petition to Congress and the proper committees of Congress. We also ask that you, as our representative, assist us by introducing a bill to carry out the below proposal, or, if such a bill is introduced by anybody else, that you support it and do your best to have it passed.

We desire the revival of the Government Grain Corporation as soon as it can be brought about. We propose this as the only thing that will prevent another disastrous price year for grain farmers. Farmers are being foreclosed—going bankrupt—and many are leaving the farms. We see no hope of relief within a reasonable time unless the Government, through the grain corporation, undertakes to pool all the country's wheat and sell it as it did in the war. The grain corporation can and should fix a price on wheat that will assure cost of production to the farmers. A price to assure cost of production should be fixed at once on wheat now in the hands of the producer, his cooperative organizations, and country elevators. A price for the 1922 crop also should be fixed and guaranteed now by the grain corporation to cover cost of production and a living for the farmers who grow wheat in 1922.

The effect of this will be immediately to revive business and agriculture. The farmer then can get more credit at once to carry him over the winter and to pay his seed and help next spring. This would be brought about if it is known he will get a fair and adequate price for his products. The farmer can then buy what he needs and business will improve. The farmer is not buying anything now because he is broke and can not get credit, and does not know that he will be better off next year.

Wheat is the basic food. An adequate supply of it must always be assured, unless there is to be suffering. The price of corn and other grains follows that of wheat. A guaranteed, adequate price on wheat, that corn and other grains which follow wheat price will likewise be sold by the farmer at a price that will assure him a living. Or, if necessary, other grains may be included in the Federal pool.

As an emergency measure to assure the country its food supply, and to prevent further abandonment of the farms and suffering, in the interest of all the people, something must be done at once. We see no way out, and believe there is no way out except through the revival of the grain corporation and its management by officials not connected with grain exchanges, middlemen's interest, or millers. There are several cooperative pools started, but these are not cooperating with one another, and no one seriously claims they will be in a position to appreciably relieve the situation for several years, if at all.

We ask consideration of and action on this proposition immediately.

Mr. PAGE presented a telegram in the nature of a petition signed by 122 residents of Burlington, Vt., favoring the restoration of diplomatic relations between the United States and Greece, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. WARREN presented a resolution adopted by the Sheridan (Wyo.) Rotary Club, protesting against the enactment of legislation to transfer the Forest Service from the Department of Agriculture to the Interior Department, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. HARRIS presented a resolution adopted by the board of directors of the Georgia Agricultural Experiment Station, of Experiment, Ga., favoring increased appropriations for experiment stations in the several States, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. TOWNSEND presented a resolution adopted by the board of commerce of East Tawas, Mich., protesting against the enactment of legislation to transfer the Forest Service from the Department of Agriculture to the Interior Department, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Michigan State Farm Bureau, at Lansing, Mich., protesting against the enactment of legislation to transfer the Bureau of Markets from the Department of Agriculture to the Department of Commerce, and the Forest Service from the Department of Agriculture to the Interior Department, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a resolution signed by sundry members of the American Association of University Women, of Birmingham, Mich., favoring the enactment of legislation creating a department of education, and protesting against the inclusion of a bureau of education in the proposed department of public welfare, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

TARIFF ON WRAPPER AND FILLER TOBACCO.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, in the nature of a petition I present a letter in reference to the tobacco industry of North Carolina, Connecticut, Georgia, and Florida. I think the facts stated therein will be very interesting to the Senate, and I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let it be read.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Acting upon the suggestion of my friend the Senator from North Carolina, I ask unanimous consent that the letter may be read at the desk. The facts are very interesting, and I think the Senate will be glad to hear them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Secretary will read the letter.

The reading clerk read as follows:

EATONTON, GA., January 20, 1922.

Hon. THOMAS E. WATSON,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR WATSON: The cotton-mill industry of the South is intensely interested in the tariff proposed to be placed upon cigar-leaf wrapper tobacco, because of its effect upon the shade-cloth manufacture in this section, and it is extremely important to the cotton mills that Sumatra tobacco be kept out of this country as nearly as possible.

Fifteen years ago the Cannon Manufacturing Co., of North Carolina, furnished about 2,000,000 yards of shade cloth to Florida growers and about 5,000,000 yards to Connecticut farmers. During 1919 the same company shipped about 25,000,000 yards of this cloth, and last season 32,000,000 yards were shipped to Connecticut alone, besides several million yards shipped to Florida. This gives an idea of the growth of the industry and will explain the necessity of protection. Connecticut and Florida are the two States interested in the growth of the tobacco, but every State where cotton is grown is concerned with that phase of the matter. This shade cloth is made up in tents, requiring about 5,000 yards to the acre. It is estimated by competent authorities that about $2,000,000 worth of this cloth was sold by the mills in the South last year, and as the tents can be used only one year you can readily see what it means to us.

Two States where this tobacco can be grown can easily supply the entire cigar-leaf wrapper tobacco, if the industry is encouraged, and, of course, the cotton growers will be proportionately helped.

If you can see your way clear to indorse and support the emergency tariff on wrapper tobacco, which is $2.35 per pound on wrapper and 35 cents on fillers, we will appreciate it, and we believe it much to our interest that this emergency tariff stand. We understand the House committee has recommended $2.10 on wrapper and 45 cents on fillers; but we are sure, from a most diligent study of the question, that it would be best to allow the tariff to be as stated above—$2.35 and 35 cents.

It has been said, and we believe it to be true, that every bale of Sumatra tobacco that comes into this country makes unprofitable an acre of American tobacco, and as none of the Sumatra tobacco is re-exported, but all used in this country, we can see no reason why the American smoker should not help the American farmer.

Of course this Sumatra tobacco is produced by cheap labor under the lowest possible living conditions, and it should, we believe, be prevented from coming into this country and underselling our American product.

I am very much interested in this matter personally, and if you will discuss it with Senator HARRIS and Senators UNDERWOOD and HEFLIN, of Alabama, I will thank you so much.

I am writing these gentlemen and sending to the Alabama Senators copies of letter written by Mr. Charles A. Cannon, of the Cannon Manufacturing Co., of Kannapolis, N. C.

I thank you so much for your help in the premises, and with regards and good wishes, always, I am,

Sincerely, yours,

HIRAM L. GARDNER.

THE MOTION-PICTURE BUSINESS.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, there was a meeting in the city of Washington on January 12 of the members of the board of directors of the Motion Picture Theater Owners of America, representing some 15,000 motion-picture houses. They issued a statement which I desire to have incorporated in the RECORD. I shall not take the time of the Senate to read it.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 12, 1922.

Members of the board of directors of the Motion Picture Theater Owners of America met Thursday in Hotel Washington, this city, for the purpose of completing arrangements for their national convention, which will be held in May. This convention will bring to Washington thousands of theater owners from all parts of the United States.

During the session, attention was called to a copy of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of Saturday, January 7, 1922, containing a report of a speech by Senator HARRISON, of Mississippi, to the effect that arrangements were being made with Postmaster General Will H. Hays to "Be at the head of the whole motion-picture industry of the country, at a salary of $150,000 a year," and suggesting the possibility of the screen being used for political propaganda.

The motion-picture theater owner realizes that the success of our business enterprise and the progress of our industry is dependent upon the good will and support of all the people, comprising those of every shade of political opinion, and we desire to assure the motion-picture going public that our theaters will never be used for the advancement of partisan politics.

No political propaganda of any kind will be permitted on our screens, except where the welfare of the theater-going public and the progress of our industry is threatened.

For several weeks newspaper reports indicated that an arrangement was being effected between the producing or manufacturing branch of the industry and Postmaster General Hays, through which he was to succeed Mr. William A. Brady as president of their association.

As theater owners—organized nationally in the Motion Picture Theater Owners of America—and comprising a membership of 12,000, representing every State in the Union, we did not feel called upon to make any public comment upon this matter until the speech of Senator HARRISON was brought to our attention.

We have no connection as theater owners with the manufacturers of the pictures, being separate and distinct from them and controlling in every way our own division of the industry, and therefore were not concerned with Mr. Hays's accession to the head of the producing or manufacturing branch. The president of our organization receives no salary.

If the advent of Mr. Hays or any other capable man into the manufacturers' division will correct some of the unsatisfactory business relations now prevailing, it will meet with the approval of every theater owner and real friend of the industry.

Our only purpose in presenting this statement now is to correct the erroneous impression that the Motion Picture Theater Owners of America is in any sense a party to any arrangement now under way affecting Mr. Hays. This we state that it may serve to clear up any misunderstanding which may exist, and make it perfectly plain to every official and individual in this country that the owners of the motion-picture theaters are separate and distinct in their relation, have no affiliation with the manufacturer or producer of pictures, and therefore have in no sense been parties to the move under discussion.

The month of November is considered a banner month in the motion-picture business. Consequent to the efforts of the theater owners to bring this form of entertainment within the reach of all the people, box-office receipts were approximately $12,000,000 less in November, 1921, than in the same month in 1920, while motion-picture producers exacted from motion-picture theater owners nearly $4,000,000 more for their pictures in November, 1921, than in the same month of the previous year. This fact is clearly substantiated by Government reports.

As theater owners, we have the direct contact with the public. We meet and serve the people of the United States daily, and in this relation we established the public service department of our organization under the direction of Dr. Francis Holley, of this city, whose efforts along these lines amply prove his efficiency in promoting and extending this highly commendable work. We feel responsible to the American public to maintain the freedom of the screen in every way. We realize that the motion picture is a medium for a high order of public service, and it is our determination to keep the theater screens of this Nation so free from partisan and kindred influences as to render this wonderful visualizing force, the screen press of America, of supreme value to all the people of the country.

We also want to make the theater owner the sole judge, guided by the people of his community, of what shall appear on the screen of his theater, and we hope to be able at all times to guarantee this kind of service to the public. We, therefore, stand in an independent position and would be opposed to any moves, no matter how well intended, which militate against this generally accepted American attitude.

The executive officers present were:
National president, Sydney S. Cohen, New York.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. PAGE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 2674) to amend the act authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to settle claims for damages to private property arising from collisions with naval vessels, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 451) thereon.

Mr. CAMERON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 2179) for the relief of Richard Parke, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 452) thereon.

Mr. JOHNSON, from the Committee on Patents, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 7077) to increase the force and salaries in the Patent Office, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BALL:

A bill (S. 3060) authorizing the extension of the park system in the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. SPENCER:

A bill (S. 3061) conferring authority on the Secretary of the Interior to consent to or approve of the alienation of certain Indian allotments; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. PHIPPS (by request):

A bill (S. 3062) for the relief of N. Maxcy Tabor (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

By Mr. CURTIS:

A bill (S. 3063) granting a pension to Mary J. Henry (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 3064) granting a pension to Mary Miller (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 3065) granting a pension to Martha E. Ward (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 3066) granting a pension to Thomas Anderson (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WILLIS:

A bill (S. 3068) granting a pension to Barbara Farrar (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CALDER:

A bill (S. 3069) for the relief of Eric Larsson; to the Committee on Commerce.

COOPERATIVE MARKETING OF FARM PRODUCTS.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I introduce a bill to create a Federal cooperative marketing system and to provide for the organization of cooperative marketing associations, and for other purposes. Inasmuch as that proposition has to come before the Senate in a very short time and there is one bill upon the calendar dealing with the same subject, at the close of routine morning business to-day I am going to ask the consent of the Senate that I may make a few remarks upon the bill. I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The bill (S. 3067) to create a Federal cooperative marketing board, to provide for the organization of cooperative marketing associations, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. KELLOGG. Has the bill introduced by the Senator from North Dakota been referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has been so referred.

Mr. KELLOGG. I do not know whether that is the proper place to have it referred. I should like to say that a cooperative marketing bill passed the House of Representatives two years ago. It came from the Judiciary Committee there. It went to the Judiciary Committee of the Senate and was reported back to the Senate and amended by the Senate and passed. It then went to conference, and I believe was in conference a good many months. The conferees could not agree. The Congress expired.

Another bill was introduced in the House at the last session, passed the House, came to the Senate, was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and that committee, after considering it for several months, reported a substitute. Those two bills, or rather the original bill and the substitute, are now on the calendar.

All these bills have come from the Judiciary Committee. I have no objection to the bill going to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, but I give notice to the Senator from North Dakota that I am going to call up the bill and see whether the contest between the Senate and the House can not be ended within the next year.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, it seems to me that a bill providing for a cooperative system of marketing farm products ought to have gone to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. It is purely an agricultural proposition. It ought to have the cooperation and advice of the Secretary of Agriculture and those who are connected with that great department. That is the reason why it seemed to me that we ought to take no action on a bill from another committee until the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry could at least pass judgment upon a matter which is assumed to be wholly or practically for the benefit of agriculture.

I would be perfectly willing that the Committee on the Judiciary should consider the same proposition, but it would seem to me that those whose whole training has been along the line of agricultural questions would be the proper persons to consider any matter relating to the cooperative distribution of farm products.

I do not desire to have any conflict, and I assure the Senator of that, but what I want to get is the very best possible bill, from whatever committee it may come, and have it become the law.

Mr. KELLOGG. I have not the slightest objection to the bill introduced to-day going to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. I had nothing to do with sending the other bill to the Judiciary Committee. These bills have resulted in a contest as to whether there should be any modification of the Sherman Antitrust Act. I am certainly opposed to going all over the subject in both Houses on a new bill. If the Senator wants to offer his bill as an amendment on the floor of the Senate, that is all right, but so far as I am concerned I shall insist that the bill on the calendar shall be taken up at the earliest possible date and be put through if possible.

Mr. McCUMBER. Of course, we will consider that matter when we come to the other bill. I do not know that the two bills have any close relation to each other, but if the bill on the calendar is a cooperative marketing bill it is a matter that ought to be considered by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, the suggestion made by the Senator from North Dakota that a bill of this character ought to go to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry appears on its face to be altogether reasonable, but when considered in connection with the history of the legislation it would seem to be altogether inappropriate.

I shall make no objection to the bill going to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry if the Senator from North Dakota desires to have that disposition made of it, but this is the situation: Those who are earnestly in favor of national legislation in regard to cooperative marketing believe that the Sherman antitrust law is something of an obstacle to the organization of cooperative associations that are dealing in interstate commerce. The bill which came from the House Judiciary Committee went to the Senate Judiciary Committee because those committees dealt with the Sherman antitrust law, and that law originated in bills which were dealt with by those committees. The Judiciary Committee has accordingly given very serious consideration to the various bills dealing with the subject which have come before the Senate now in several successive sessions.

The bill now pending on the calendar passed the House, went to the Committee on the Judiciary, as indicated by the Senator from Minnesota, and a report was made upon it. Unfortunately, the friends of legislation dealing with the subject have disagreed in relation to the form the legislation should take. An effort is now being made among them to endeavor to agree upon some substitute for the House bill. These negotiations are progressing, and I hope within a day or two we shall be able to agree upon some measure that will have the hearty support of all the friends of the legislation in this body.

In that situation of affairs, if the Senator from North Dakota desires to throw into the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry a bill the purpose of which is to relieve farm marketing associations from the operation of the Sherman Act, involving, as a matter of course, a consideration of the history of that legislation and of the intricate adjudications which have been made under it and how, if at all, that legislation will be affected by the farm marketing legislation, and to have the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry take up that question again, I have no objection to it. But it does seem to me, Mr. President, that as a matter of deference, to say the least, to some of us who have been giving the subject our very earnest consideration and who desire to work out some solution which will be satisfactory to all, the bill might naturally go to the Judiciary Committee. I am sure that committee in dealing with the matter will be very glad to have the views of the Senator from North Dakota as expressed in the bill which he now tenders or in any other measure.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I think what both the Senator from Montana and I desire to secure is some comprehensive cooperative scheme of distribution for farm products. The Senator, of course, can not speak with much knowledge of a bill which I have just introduced, and which, of course, he has not read, and which, with the assistance of an expert from the Agricultural Department, I have carefully drafted. As drafted, I have not the slightest idea that the bill will in any way conflict with the Sherman antitrust law; but until I can finish my address on the subject, and in the hope that the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] and the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] will do me the honor to listen to the statement I shall make, and to read the bill, so that it may then be determined whether it ought to be submitted as a substitute or otherwise or should go to the committee, I shall ask at the present time that the bill simply be printed and lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order referring the bill will be rescinded and the bill will lie on the table.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Without reference?

Mr. McCUMBER. Without reference to-day. I shall have the bill referred at some other time after it shall have been discussed.

ADJUSTMENT OF FOREIGN LOANS.

Mr. SIMMONS, Mr. McKELLAR, and Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them to the bill (H. R. 8762) to create a commission authorized under certain conditions to refund or convert obligations of foreign Governments owing to the United States of America, and for other purposes, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

AMENDMENT OF POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ASHURST submitted an amendment proposing to permit the use in the Phoenix (Ariz.) post office of special canceling stamps bearing the words and figures "Visit Phoenix, Ariz., April 24-29, U. S. Good Roads Week," intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 9859) making appropriations for the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and ordered to be printed.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

On motion of Mr. CURTIS, it was Ordered, That the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PEPPER] be assigned to service on the Committee on Military Affairs, and that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CROW] be assigned to service on the Committee on Naval Affairs.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 9859) making appropriations for the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, was read twice by title and referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9724) making appropriations for the Treasury Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. WARREN. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and agree to the conference asked by the House, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to, and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. WARREN, Mr. CURTIS, and Mr. HARRIS conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I have so many duties to perform that I ask unanimous consent to be excused from service on the committee of conference, and that the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], who is a member of the subcommittee, be substituted in my place.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas asks unanimous consent to be excused from service upon the committee of conference. Without objection, he is excused, and the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] is appointed in his place.

AMENDMENT OF THE RULES—APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, the Committee on Rules is considering a proposal which was submitted the other day by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], with a view to having all appropriation bills go to one committee. If that should be done, in my judgment, additional changes should be made in Rule XVI. Under that rule now an item of appropriation if recommended by the committee is in order, whether or not there is any existing law authorizing it. Such an item is also in order if an estimate comes down from the executive department, whether there is an existing law for it or not. If the appropriation bills are all to go to one committee, I myself think that the power to which I have referred should be taken away from the committee, and that the legislative power should rest in the committee now having control of the subjects to which the appropriations relate.

With a view of having that suggestion considered, I propose an amendment to Rule XVI, and ask that it may be read and referred to the Committee on Rules.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution submitted by the Senator from Washington proposing to amend the rules will be read.

The reading clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 225), as follows:

Resolved, That Rule XVI of the standing rules of the Senate be, and the same is hereby, amended as follows:

After the words "treaty stipulation," in paragraph 1 of said rule, change the comma to a period and strike out the remainder of the paragraph.

Strike out all of paragraph 2 of said rule.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I desire to say in this connection that I think we ought to go very cautiously and slowly in the direction of changing the rules in reference to appropriations. I, for one, should very much regret to see the Senate get into the position in which another branch of Congress is at the present time with reference to appropriations. I am not willing to agree that all appropriation bills must be referred to one committee in the Senate. The rules as they stand, giving authority to various committees to provide for appropriations, such as those for the Army, the Navy, for the Department of Agriculture, and for rivers and harbors, are very safe and very sound rules, and I should not like to see those committees surrender that power and that authority and have the question of appropriations centered exclusively in one committee. If we shall do that, we shall have to enlarge or ought to enlarge the committee very materially. Of course, I do not know how far the Committee on Rules has gone in this direction, but it is a matter of very great consequence, and I hope the committee is proceeding very carefully in its consideration. However, I do not wish by silence to appear to acquiesce in the plan which seems now to be in contemplation here.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to suggest to the Senator from Florida that the Committee on Rules has the question to which he refers now under consideration, and intends to consider it very carefully.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution submitted by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] will be referred to the Committee on Rules.

THE SHANTUNG QUESTION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further concurrent or other resolutions, the Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The reading clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 221) submitted by Mr. WALSH of Montana on the 20th instant, as follows:

Whereas in an ultimatum dispatched by the Emperor of Japan to the Imperial German Government on August 15, 1914, which marks the entrance of the eastern empire in the World War, it is stated: "We consider it highly important and necessary in the present situation to take measures to remove the causes of all disturbance of the peace in the Far East. The Imperial Japanese Government sincerely believes it to be its duty to give advice to the Imperial German Government to carry out the following two propositions: First, to withdraw immediately from Japanese and Chinese waters the German men-of-war and armed vessels of all kinds; second, to deliver on a date not later than September 15 to the Imperial Japanese authorities, without condition or compensation, the entire leased territory of Kiaochow, with a view to the eventual restoration of the same to China"; and

Whereas on May 6, 1915, after the conquest of Shantung had been consummated by an Anglo-Japanese expeditionary force and the Japanese Army was in possession of Shantung districts greatly exceeding in extent the leased territory referred to in the ultimatum, the Secretary of State of the United States addressed to the Governments of Japan and China the following identic notes: "In view of the circumstances of the negotiations which have taken place or which are now pending between the Governments of China and Japan and the agreements which have been reached as a result thereof, the Government of the United States has the honor to notify the Government of the Chinese Republic that it can not recognize any agreement or undertaking which has been entered into between the Governments of China and Japan impairing the treaty rights of the United States and its citizens in China, the political or territorial integrity of the Republic of China, or the international policy commonly known as the open-door policy"; an identical note being at the same time handed to the Japanese Government by the American Embassy in Tokyo; and

Whereas on August 24, 1915, Count Okuma, prime minister of Japan, cabled the American press the following message: "As premier of Japan I have stated, and I now again state to the people of America and of the world, that Japan has no desire to secure more territory, no thought of depriving China or any other peoples of anything which they now possess"; and

Whereas in October, 1919, the majority party of the United States Senate recorded its disapproval of the Shantung award and adopted the following reservation to the treaty of Versailles known as the Lodge amendment, from the fact that it was drawn up and presented by the Hon. HENRY CABOT LODGE, chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, one of the Members of this body now serving with the American delegation to the conference, which reads: "The United States withholds its assent to articles 156, 157, 158, and reserves full liberty of action with respect to any controversy which may arise under said articles between the Republic of China and the Empire of Japan"; and

Whereas in the course of the same debate the minority party of the Senate voted for a reservation to the treaty whose ratification they advocated which, offered by the Hon. KEY PITTMAN, a member of the Committee on Foreign Relations, provided "That in advising and consenting to the ratification of said treaty the United States understands that the German rights and interests renounced by Germany in favor of Japan under the provisions of articles 156, 157, and 158 of said treaty are to be returned by Japan to China at the termination of the present war by the adoption of this treaty, as provided in the exchanged notes between the Japanese and Chinese Governments under date of May 25, 1915"; and

Whereas on July 1, 1921, the Hon. Charles Evans Hughes, Secretary of State, addressed a note to the Hon. Alfred Sze, Chinese minister to the United States, in which he stated the position of the American Government in the following terms: "The Government of the United States never has associated itself with any arrangement which sought to establish any special rights in China which would abridge the rights of the subjects or citizens of other friendly States; and I am happy to assure you that it is the purpose of this Government neither to participate in nor to acquiesce in any arrangement which might purport to establish in favor of foreign interests a superiority of rights with respect to commercial and economic development in designated regions of the territories of China"; and

Whereas the text of the invitation sent to the Government of China by the President of the United States under date of August 11, 1921, reads: "It is quite clear that there can be no final assurance of the peace of the world in the absence of the desire for peace, and the prospect of reduced armament is not a hopeful one unless this desire finds expression in a practical effort to remove causes of misunderstanding and to seek ground for agreement as to principles and their application. It is the earnest wish of this Government that through an interchange of views with the facilities afforded by a conference it may be possible to find a solution of Pacific and Far Eastern problems of unquestioned importance at this time"; and

Whereas the Hon. Charles Evans Hughes, Secretary of State, has in the course of his correspondence with Japan and the other powers signatories of the treaty of Versailles declared "There would be no valid or effective disposition of the overseas possessions of Germany now under consideration without the assent of the United States"; and

Whereas the Arms Conference, at which Far Eastern problems were to be discussed, has been assembled in the city of Washington since November 12 of last year, and although no plenary public sessions of the conference have been held since December 10, 1921, it is officially communicated that the Shantung retrocession has not been officially discussed, although informal conversations have from time to time been pursued by the Chinese and the Japanese plenipotentiaries, hitherto without result, as to the manner of restoring the occupied territory to its rightful owners in accordance with the terms of the Japanese declaration of war upon Germany; and

Whereas it is contemplated in the so-called four-power pact about to be submitted for ratification that controversies likely to give rise to war affecting the insular possessions or dominions of the powers signatory thereto in the Pacific shall be composed, if possible, by conferences between them; and

Whereas the said powers are all now represented at the said Arms Conference in session in the city of Washington: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to communicate to the United States Senate, if it is not incompatible with the public interest, what steps, if any, have been taken to give effect in substance as well as in form to the foregoing declarations and policies.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, as I indicated a few days ago, I hope this resolution will receive the unanimous approval of the Senate, without any discussion, as being the expression of the undivided opinion of the country.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I have had a talk with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, and as a result of that interview I desire to say if this resolution may be acted on without debate he has no objection to action upon it this morning. If, however, the resolution is to be debated, he desires to be heard when the debate occurs. So I hope there may be no objection to the consideration of the resolution, and that it may be acted on without debate.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I am not going to object to the passage of this resolution. I am willing in a matter of this importance to accept the judgment of Senators who, I think, are better able to pass upon it than am I; but I do wish simply to express my own opinion, without arguing the matter or without questioning anybody else's judgment, that it is very inopportune and very unwise for the Senate to pass this resolution, and that instead of aiding in the accomplishment it will tend more to prevent the accomplishment of the great object that all of us would like to see accomplished by the Limitation of Armament Conference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was rejected.

INTERNATIONAL HARVESTER CO.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a preceding day, which will be read.

The reading clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 223), submitted by Mr. NORRIS on the 22d instant, as follows:

Whereas in a suit instituted April 30, 1912, by the United States the International Harvester Co. was adjudged by the court on August 12, 1914, a combination repugnant to the antitrust laws; and

Whereas negotiations pending prior to the institution of said suit for suitable settlement and decree in the public interest were terminated and suit commenced because of the refusal of the Attorney General to accept any settlement and decree which did not provide for the complete separation of the McCormick and Deering plants and lines and their control, inasmuch as said plants and lines constituted the predominant elements of the combination; and

Whereas on November 2, 1918, a consent decree was agreed to by the then Attorney General and entered in said cause, then pending on appeal, by which consent decree it was provided that the International Harvester Co. should divest itself merely of certain minor and comparatively unimportant and unprofitable properties; and

Whereas said consent decree left the International Harvester Co. in possession of those predominant elements, the ownership of which had been the prime reason for the commencement of the action, to wit, the McCormick and Deering plants and lines, and thus surrendered the substantial results obtained, and for which the suit had been instituted; and

Whereas a report to the Senate dated May 4, 1920, entitled "Report of the Federal Trade Commission on the causes of the high prices of farm implements," and the entire record in the case, both show that the property to be disposed of in conformance to said consent decree would only divest the International Harvester Co. of certain minor and unprofitable portions of its business, and would leave the combination still in possession of the major and dominant elements thereof, to wit, the McCormick and Deering plants and brands; and

Whereas it is evident that under said decree effective conditions in substantial harmony with the law, including effective competition and reduced prices of farm implements to the farmers, can not result or be obtained while the International Harvester Co. is permitted to retain its said dominant elements; and

Whereas it is necessary and urgent in the public interest, without further and unnecessary delay, to procure complete separation of ownership and control, direct or indirect, of said McCormick and Deering plants and brands, together with such other division of the business of the International Harvester Co. as may be necessary effectively to restore competitive conditions in real harmony with the law: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Attorney General be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate what action, if any, is contemplated by the Department of Justice to bring about a modification of said decree, in order that the same may comply with the real judgment rendered by the court in said case; or, if such course be not practical, whether the Department of Justice contemplates any other separate and independent action against said International Harvester Co., for the purpose of effectively restoring competitive conditions between the various corporations composing and comprising said International Harvester Co.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, the resolution submitted by the Senator from Nebraska was read at length yesterday. At that time I asked the Senator from Nebraska to give an opportunity for examination of the preamble, for, as I heard it read, the adoption of the preamble would at least give the impression that the Senate had accepted all the conclusions set forth therein. The Senator from Nebraska and I have discussed the preamble since that time, and I desire to offer three amendments to the preamble which I understand will not be objectionable to the Senator from Nebraska.

In the fifth paragraph of the preamble, being the second paragraph on page 2, in line 4, I move to strike out the words "both show" and insert the word "contend," so as to read:

Whereas a report to the Senate dated May 4, 1920, entitled "Report of the Federal Trade Commission on the causes of the high prices of farm implements," and the entire record in the case contend—

And so forth.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. In the next paragraph, in the first line thereof, I move to strike out the words "it is evident" and to insert the words "said report contends," so that it will read:

Whereas said report contends that under said decree effective conditions—

And so forth.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. In the next paragraph, in the first line thereof, after the word "Whereas," I move to insert the words "said report contends that," so that it will read:

Whereas said report contends that it is necessary and urgent, in the public interest—

And so forth.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

THE GENOA CONFERENCE.

Mr. McCUMBER obtained the floor.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment in order that I may propound an inquiry to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE]?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. I observe in this morning's Washington Herald the following statement:

Yesterday it was learned that a series of conferences, the first of which was held January 8 and attended by President Harding, Secretary Hughes, Secretary Hoover, Senator LODGE, and Senator BRANDEGEE, resulted in a decision that will in all probability exclude America from Genoa.

That is, from the Genoa conference, which will soon convene.

According to information at the Capitol, the conference grew out of a visit to the White House by Senator BRANDEGEE, who is known to be irreconcilably opposed to America's participation in any European economic affairs.

President Harding is said to have expressed a desire to consult Secretary Hughes and Senator Root, and this being highly satisfactory to Senator BRANDEGEE, a conference was called.

I do not want to be impertinent or too inquisitive, but I should like to ask the Senator from Connecticut if the statement which I have read is accurate, because it seems to me that, in view of the importance of the Genoa conference not only to Europe but to the United States and the world, that it would be rather unwise at this early juncture for our Government to determine not to enter that important conference. While I concede the constitutional rights of the President, it would seem that the Senate and the House of Representatives ought to have some voice upon a matter which so vitally affects us now and may affect this Nation in the future. May I inquire of the Senator from Connecticut whether it has been determined by the Republican Party that the United States will not participate in the Genoa conference?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I regret that I am not the depositary of the information which the Senator would like to have at his disposal. I do not speak for the Republican Party, nor for the President, nor for the Secretary of State, and I do not know whether any determination has been arrived at by anybody in that important matter.

Mr. KING. This report seems to indicate that the Senator from Connecticut has taken the lead in this movement with a view to preventing our participation in the Genoa conference, and, of course, knowing the great interest which the Senator has in our financial welfare, I can not conceive that he would at this early date attempt to establish a policy, or have the administration formulate a policy, that would preclude the United States from participation in the Genoa conference.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Well, if the Senator can not conceive that I would do it, I leave him to his conception.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator enlighten us as to whether or not he has attempted to do that, and whether his attempts have been powerful enough with the administration that it has been influenced thereby so that we are not to be in the Genoa conference. If that is what the administration has decided, we should be advised at once.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not know what the administration has decided or whether the administration—if the Senator means by that the President—has decided anything about it. I do not know what is going on in his mind, I am quite sure.

I will say, however, to be perfectly frank with the Senator and with any one else who may be interested in the subject, that I have discussed the matter with the President and have given him my views. I do not flatter myself that he has made my view his view; but he had the temerity to ask me what I thought about it, and I had the audacity to reply in good faith. I regret that all my private conversations with the President and other friends are not subject to extraction on the floor of the Senate "in invitum" so far as I am concerned.

Mr. KING. Of course, we admit the modesty of the Senator, but we congratulate the Republican Party upon having a man with such an astute mind—and I say that in all good faith—as the Senator from Connecticut. I would not have challenged the attention of the Senator to this matter except for the fact that it has become public property, and I presumed that, perhaps, the Senator had given the statement to the press, and, if he had given it to the press, I saw no reason why he should not make a statement concerning it to his colleagues.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. No; I do not spend my time issuing bulletins to the press or in getting my name in the headlines. I have occupied more time in denying the statements that have appeared on this subject than I have in admitting them.

Mr. KING. Then, as I understand the Senator, so far as he knows, the administration has not determined that our Government shall not participate in the Genoa conference.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. So far as I know they have not determined that we will and they have not determined that we will not. Inasmuch as I understand from the press that the President has received an official invitation to attend the Genoa conference from the Government of Italy, I assume that he is trying to acquaint himself with the views of public men, including Members of Congress and others, whose judgment he would like to have upon the question. He did ask what I thought about it, and I have views about it which, if it becomes necessary to state to an expectant world, in my own time and in my own way I shall take the liberty of stating. It may be an unwarranted assumption, but I assume that this country can not without the consent of Congress take part in a conference by the results of which it will be bound. As I have said on several occasions heretofore, I do not consider that the Government of the United States of America is the President or his Secretary of State, or the President and the other members of his Cabinet, or all three of them together; but when it comes to making contracts with foreign nations my idea is that the Government of the United States is not bound without the consent of Congress, unless it be by a treaty, in which case the Government is not bound without the concurring views of the President and two-thirds of the Senate. I know there are others who think that because the contract may commit the country to a foreign policy the President himself is supreme and can commit this country to foreign policies without the consent either of the Senate or of Congress. I never have entertained that view and I do not entertain that view. In my view the President is the executive branch of the Government and his business is to enforce the foreign policies which are determined upon by the constitutional authorities which can represent the Government, and he has no right to do what was once described by ex-President Wilson, as I remember before he was President, in his book, to wit, for the President to so maneuver things and manipulate things as to get the Government into a position where it could not extricate itself honorably without Congress agreeing to whatever position the Executive might have taken, is a gross abuse of power.

Whether ex-President Wilson featured that possibility of executive action in commendatory or condemnatory terms I do not know; but it makes no difference with my view upon the subject which view he took. I agree with him that it is possible for the President as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the country so to manipulate the military arm of the Government as to create conditions from which the country can not extricate itself as a free agent, perhaps; and if it is so the powers of the President, not only as to the direction of the Army and Navy but as to his instructions to all ambassadors and ministers and diplomatic officials of the country, ought to be exercised with the greatest care.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Certainly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. McCUMBER. I think under the circumstances I should, Mr. President.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. I desire to ask the Senator from Connecticut whether or not he wants us to infer, from the language he has been using, that the President has no authority to appoint a representative of this Government to the Genoa conference, or any other international monetary conference, without first consulting the Senate?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I would not want to answer "yes" or "no" as the Senator states the question, but I will explain my position. The Senator asks as to the power of the President to appoint a "representative of this Government" to an international conference.

I admit the right of the President to send as many personal emissaries all over the world as he has the authority to pay for and pay the expenses of. In my view, they are his personal agents, but I do not think the views or the acts of one of those paramount officials—as they were designated when President Cleveland sent Mr. Blount to Hawaii as a sort of a paramount official—bind the country at all. If it comes to participating in a conference with other sovereigns, the results of which conference may be an agreement or a proposed agreement or an understanding between the representative sent by the President and the country to which he is sent or the body to which he is sent, I do not consider that such an agreement binds the United States of America without the consent of Congress, or, if the agreement be reduced to the form of a treaty, without the constitutional majority of the Senate required to ratify a treaty.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator for just a minute?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I have some fear that whenever we get into the discussion of a constitutional question——

Mr. KING. I shall not discuss a constitutional question.

Mr. McCUMBER (continuing). The spirit of unrest in the bosom of a great many Senators will find some kind of expression, and so I wish that the Senator would bring the colloquy to an end. I think the Senator's curiosity is now satisfied.

Mr. KING. It is not curiosity; it is a desire for information.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator from Utah understands the position of the Senator from Connecticut as well as he did before he asked the question, and I should like now to go on.

Mr. KING. Of course, I shall have to submit to the Senator as he holds the floor——

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield a little further.

Mr. KING. I want to congratulate the Senator from Connecticut upon the ability which he has displayed in discussing constitutional questions, and upon his adroitness in avoiding a direct reply to the interrogatory which was propounded; but let me say to him that some of us have felt an interest in this important question. We are not in the administration's secrets; and, the Senator having taken so conspicuous a part, we felt—at least, speaking for myself, I felt—that the Senator might enlighten us upon a matter which is profoundly important to the American people at the present time.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Dakota further yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield to the Senator to answer the Senator from Utah.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not want the Senator to place me, or attempt to place me, in a position which I do not think I have taken. In what respect have I failed to answer the direct inquiry of the Senator?

Mr. KING. I do not think the Senator has quite enlightened us as to the policy of the administration, or as to what the purpose of the administration is, whether we are to participate in the Genoa conference, whether it is a matter that the administration is holding in abeyance to determine at a future time, or whether it is a matter that will be brought to the attention of Congress, with a view to securing the approval or the disapproval of this body and the other body upon a matter so momentous and far-reaching in its consequences.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. If that is what the Senator means, I have no objection to his understanding, because I do not claim to have enlightened him. I can not let my light so shine before men as to satisfy the Senator unless I have some luminosity myself inside of me, which I have not on this subject; and I can not give him the determination of the administration, if, indeed, it has come to any determination in the premises, and I do not know whether it has or not. I simply objected to the Senator's saying that I had adroitly evaded his inquiry. I have tried not to do so, but to meet it with a frontal, a direct, and an acquiescing attitude.

COOPERATIVE MARKETING OF FARM PRODUCTS.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, this morning I introduced a bill which is a great advance step, I admit, in the matter of a most comprehensive system of cooperative selling and distribution of all farm products. I feel that I am forced to speak on it this morning, if at all, that it may have its proper consideration, before the bill on the same subject now on the calendar is brought up. I wish my remarks to be compact, and to express succinctly my reasons, as well as the provisions of the bill; and therefore I shall ask not to be interrupted until I have finished the statement.

Mr. President, the growing depression in the price of agricultural products for the last decade has constantly challenged the attention of Congress and of the country. Many propositions have been advanced to alleviate the distress of the American farmer, who received less for his labor during the war and suffered more from the reaction which followed than any other class. Congress has promptly responded to his call of distress. It has provided every possible means to decrease the rate of interest on obligations which he has been compelled to incur. It has advanced money for seed grain. It has loaned hundreds of millions of dollars to the rural-credits banks. It has given renewed life to the War Finance Board to stimulate foreign markets for his products. But notwithstanding all of these efforts, which are more or less sporadic, the business of agriculture has gradually become more and more depressed. Our efforts have been helpful, but they have not reached the seat of the difficulty. Is there anything else that we can do? Let us diagnose the situation and see.

There are three main causes which are to-day responsible for the suffering of our agricultural class:

First. The general depression throughout the whole country and the whole world. Every industry and all our people have suffered from this cause, but not in the same degree.

Second. The overproduction of farm products, which forces us to dispose of our surplus in foreign countries whose financial stress and general poverty render it impossible for them to purchase those products at reasonable prices.

Third. The wide disparity, which has steadily been growing greater for half a century, between the earnings of the trades and business in our large cities, and the standard of living therein, as compared with the earnings and standard of living of the farmer and his family.

Forty years ago farm labor, which included the farmer's son and daughter, earned about as much as labor of like kind and skill received in other employments, taking into consideration cost of living on the farm. Through the gradual advance of the wage scale in our cities, carrying with it a like advance of spending capacity, increased extravagances, and a demand for higher profits on capital, the whole standard of living of our urban population has been steadily soaring skyward, until we have two classes of our American population—one living on a high wage scale, high profits, and consequently with greater extravagance; the other on a very much lower wage scale, with enforced frugality and economy.

This disparity in wage has brought forth a further evil. It has vastly increased the cost of everything the farmer must purchase, while the price of the product of his labor, which he must trade in the marts of the country for those things which he must buy, has remained at the old low level.

In the meetings before the Finance Committee during the last two or three months the question has often been asked the cloth maker, "What do you pay a weaver in your establishment?" The answer has been, "Anywhere from $8 to $10 per day." It may be said that, taking the industries as a whole, the wage of semiskilled labor will run from $40 to $50 per week, or from $160 to $200 per month. I believe, therefore, I am more than conservative when I say that one day of honest farm labor will not now purchase one hour of like labor in our cities. This disparity has continued so long that our urban populations would consider themselves robbed if they were compelled to pay the farmer for their food and for the cotton which clothes them a price that would give to the producers of that food and that cotton a remuneration equal to their own.

Mr. President, I think it can be easily demonstrated that a high wage scale, with a consequent high cost of living, is better for a country than a low wage scale with a low cost of living. I shall not take time now to demonstrate that truth; but this must always be predicated on the assumption that all the people have the benefits of the same high wage and standard of living. It is not only an evil but a rank injustice if half or two-thirds of the people have a per capita earning five times as great as the other half or other one-third.

Admitting, as we must admit, that such discrepancy in the matter of income does exist between the urban and the rural populations of the United States, taken as a whole, you will also agree that everything which law or national policy can do to equalize the conditions of these two classes ought to be done; and you will further agree, if possible, it ought to be done not by pulling the one class down but by lifting the other up.

What, then, can be done in a practical and permanent way toward this end?

Of course, this general world depression can not be remedied by any character of legislation. The flame of war has scourged the Old World, destroyed the accumulated wealth of centuries of labor, and left a mighty indebtedness which will require other centuries of labor to liquidate. Time alone can bring back a war-sick and a war-wounded world into normal and healthful activity. Time alone can bring that increased consumption and increased production which are the only foundation of all prosperity and all wealth. But, Mr. President, we can greatly assist in accelerating our speed toward that prosperity in this country. While it is often declared on this floor that the prosperity of this country is bottomed on the prosperity of the farmer, it is declaring but half of the truth. You can no more have a one-sided prosperity in a country than you can grow fat on one side and lean on the other at the same time.

Let us look the present situation fairly in the face. The price of farm products and of all cereals in my State is, on the average, considerably below prewar prices. We reached the peak of high prices of things which the farmer must purchase in 1920, and I think that increase averaged 250 per cent above prewar prices. I am speaking of retail prices, and, as you know, the farmer must purchase at retail. The manufacturer's price has been cut, say, one-third since then and the retailer's price, say, a quarter. Even admitting that these reductions, considering the wage scale in the factories, are as low as they can now be made, they are still at least 75 per cent higher than prewar prices, and raw material is about the same. Admitting, if you will, that the retailer's vastly increased overhead charges will not yet allow him to return to prewar prices, we still have the unsolved situation before us that the farmers in this country and the hundreds and hundreds of thousands of clerks and other breadwinners, whose earnings have not gone up in proportion to those in our factories, can not afford to purchase the products of those factories in such quantities as will keep them in operation. The result is stagnation and millions of men out of employment. And, Mr. President, that unemployment will continue until we increase the earning capacity of our agricultural populations to an extent that will enable them to consume, as they ought to consume, the usual quantity of the product of the factories.

What more can we do than we have already done to bring greater prosperity to that class most seriously in need of it?

The first step, Mr. President, is to assure the American farmer the American market. That he is entitled to, and to the exclusion of the farmers of any other country, so long as he can supply our market at a reasonable price for his products.

What do I mean by a reasonable price? I mean such price as will enable him to pay himself and his children who perform labor on the farm a wage that will secure for them the same comforts and enjoyments of life as laborers of like intelligence and skill in our cities. If a merchant operating a store employs his son and his daughter as clerks he pays them the same salary that he pays other clerks. Would it not be a grand thing for this country if every farmer could do the same with his son and daughter?

Would not that keep them at home, and would not it set the wheels of industry whirling throughout the land? It requires as much skill to perform farm work properly as it does to lay bricks, saw boards, or hang paper on the walls. I mean not only an earning capacity that will enable the farmer to pay a living wage to the adult and working members of his family but one that will bring in a reasonable return upon his capital invested in farm and equipment.

There is no danger in the world that the price of farm products at any time in the near future will reach an undue height. Even in these days of depression we are raising a surplus. Anything that will raise that price to a profitable basis will stimulate and increase the production and hold to normal requirements.

So, the first needful step is protection against foreign imports. When we are producing a heavy surplus of any agricultural commodity which must compete in the world's market the price of that particular product does not respond to the full protection given. But we always receive some benefit even in times of surplus production. If a small surplus reduces the price, a greater surplus from imports must necessarily accentuate that depression. And by excluding further importation we thereby prevent that further depression.

But when the crops are light and the production just about equalizes home demand, or in any section is slightly below it, then the full benefit of the tariff protection comes into existence, and it is at that time, when our crops are light, that we are most in need of the higher price secured through protection.

The next step for the upbuilding of our agricultural interests is reduction in freight rates. Through Government operation and Government control of railways the cost of operation was so enormously increased that it not only practically bankrupted every railway in the United States but so increased the cost of transportation that the freight charges alone on farm products were in many instances far greater than what could be received as a net price for such products. The railways are doing what they can to help out the agricultural interests by decreasing the freights on all agricultural products, but these freights are still inordinately excessive and we must find means to secure a reduction.

I come now to the important feature of this discussion and the purpose for which I have taken the floor, namely, a nation-wide, comprehensive, and cooperative distribution of all farm products.

The world's business to-day is done through organization. Industrial organization dominates the production and marketing of all the products of our factories. Organized capital has been met by organized labor, each advancing its own interest. The unorganized farming industry, unable to fix the supply to meet the demand, unable to control the flow of what it has to sell into markets of the country, must suffer the consequences of this inherent weakness just so long as that weakness continues. I am seeking in the bill which I have introduced to bring about this very organization which I believe to be so necessary and to supplement this organization by a general and comprehensive system of marketing all farm products and bringing those products as closely as possible to the door of the consumer, steadying the flow of such products to prevent the flooding of the markets with its well-known disaster, stabilizing the prices of those products, in the producing of which one-third of our population must exist and on which all must live.

The cooperative system of marketing has been growing throughout our agricultural sections. But it has been sporadic only. There is no cohesion, no general assistance and mutual cooperation between the divers cooperative organizations. While such organizations eliminate some of the expenses of marketing, they have not as yet opened up and developed a system where the farmer's product may be brought into as direct contact with the consumer of that product as possible. Outside of the marketing of citrus fruits, they have done little toward stabilizing the price of their products by insuring a steady flow into the markets of the country in such quantities as will not glut that market and destroy the value of the products.

Some two or three years ago I visited the then Secretary of Agriculture and submitted to him the question of formulating and putting into operation a general plan of cooperative marketing of farm products which would be sufficiently comprehensive to cover the whole field, which would secure uniformity of organization and cooperative assistance, and which, as most farm products enter into interstate commerce, would be under the general supervision of the Federal Government. I did not consider myself sufficiently informed or conversant with the complexities of marketing of agricultural products, cooperative or otherwise, to draft the necessary legislation. I therefore asked the assistance of the Secretary of Agriculture, calling his attention to the fact that the many cooperative systems already in existence, and with which the Agricultural Department was familiar, might be called into consultation by that department for the purpose of drafting a general cooperative marketing bill. The Secretary assured me that he would take the matter up and would lend assistance.

I called him up periodically and was put off from time to time for about a year, when he informed me in substance that the matter was beyond him, and that he could not see any way to bring it about.

I then introduced and had referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry of the Senate a resolution the substance of which was that the President of the United States, by and with the consent of the Senate, should appoint a commission consisting of three persons, one versed in the cooperative marketing of cereal products, one versed in the cooperative marketing of fruit products, and one in the cooperative marketing of dairy products, and that these three commissioners, representing the several systems of cooperative marketing, should formulate a general plan of cooperative marketing of all farm products. The principles which were sought to be obtained by such system were set forth in the resolution, and I will ask that the Secretary read the portion which I have not stricken out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of Washington in the chair). The Secretary will read as requested.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

That it shall be the duty of said commission to investigate and report a plan or bill for a comprehensive system of cooperative marketing of all, or the principal, farm products, including grain, dairy, and horticultural products, raised or produced in the United States, and which, either in their original or raw state or in their manufactured or partly manufactured state, enter into interstate commerce.

That it shall be the duty of said commission to consider and, if practicable, to devise a plan or form of local organization of producers and of marketing agencies for each line of the above-mentioned products, including articles of incorporation and by-laws of such organizations and agencies.

That it shall be the further duty of said commission to provide in such report or bill a system for terminal marketing places and for the conduct of the same in the larger cities of the United States, having in view the purpose of bringing the producer of said products and the ultimate consumer thereof into as nearly direct relation and communication as possible and eliminating the now heavy prevailing expenses and charges due to intermediate handlings and profits which are borne by both the said producer and consumer; all of the said organizations and agencies, marketing and places of marketing to be under the supervision of the Government of the United States, such supervision to be exercised through and under rules and regulations to be adopted by the Secretary of Agriculture.

That the said commission shall carefully investigate the present systems of existing cooperative marketing organizations of the aforesaid products, with a view of adopting any portion of such systems or combining all into one general system.

That said commission shall, if possible, make its report to the two Houses of Congress at the next general or special session thereof.

Said report or bill shall be accompanied by full and comprehensive explanations which have governed the commission in its recommendations or which are necessary to a full understanding of the subject matter.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, this matter has been for more than a year before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. I am not complaining of the delay, because I know that that committee has been considering the general subject of cooperative marketing. The bill which I now introduce, in the preparation of which I have called upon those connected with the Department of Agriculture, is a comprehensive system of marketing of all farm products. While the system is more simple than that of the farm-loan associations, it is modeled somewhat upon that system. It provides:

For associations of farmers in each and every State in the Union for cooperative selling of all farm products. These associations are to be organized under a general plan, but the bill permits any organization already in existence to become a member. The several State organizations are to elect or appoint not less than one nor more than three agents, whose duty it is to represent, advise, and assist the State associations in the marketing of their products, whether within their own States or at any place of consumption, the expenses of these agents to be borne and paid as a part of the expenses of all cooperative associations in the State.

Mr. President, before the manufacturers of articles of general consumption begin the production of those commodities for the ensuing season, they carefully measure the field of consumption, the markets that may be secured, and they conform their production as nearly as they can estimate to the probable consumptive demand, to the end that they may not glut the market and have a heavy surplus on hand.

But the American farmer has nothing but his individual guess to guide him. He has a given number of tillable acres. He must plant every acre to something to meet his debts and give him a living. He does not even know what acreage his neighbor is going to plant, let alone what other countries or States have done or are doing. His work is mere chance; he merely gambles with fate.

Now, suppose that under a nation-wide cooperative system of marketing the agent of North Dakota meets with the agent of Oklahoma, of South Dakota, Minnesota, and every other wheat-producing State in the Union, and after a full investigation of world conditions, and especially of conditions in this country, they determine that the consumptive demand for wheat in this country will be a given number of bushels; that with the world crop conditions that production should not be increased. They could advise a reduction of wheat acreage and an increased acreage of some other crop. Would not this advice, if followed, be of immense value to the American wheat raiser? Would not it be a matter of great value to him to receive advice that the warehouses at the terminals were being overstocked and to withhold shipping until they were more nearly empty?

My colleague, Senator LADD, testifying before the Finance Committee the other day, said that with the proper protection on flax the North Dakota farmer could increase his flax acreage to two or three million acres, which he is now planting to wheat and other cereals. If he could do this he could reduce the surplus of No. 1 northern hard spring wheat to an amount that would more nearly meet the consumptive demand and thereby increase its price. Would it not be of great interest to the North Dakota farmer, the wheat and flax grower, to have this proper protection on his flax and then conform his acreage of each kind of crop to the probable demand of the country? Would it not be of inestimable value to him to have expert advice on that subject, followed by cooperative assent and action throughout the country? We need this farm organization and cooperation to put farming where it ought to be placed, on a plane of profit comparable with other lines of business.

All these associations and their agents will be brought under the general direction of a board consisting of five members, appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, all to be experts in cooperative marketing of farm products, their expenses to be borne by the Federal Government. Their duties will cover the whole field of marketing within and without the United States—to give advice to agents and associations; to arrange for great marketing centers, as much as possible within the great consuming cities; to render advice at all times concerning the state of the market; to seek new markets; to secure the steady flow of farm products into those consuming centers; to prevent glutting the market at any time; to stabilize prices; and to perform such other duties as may be imposed upon them for the purpose of assisting in the distribution of food products, to the end that the producer may receive a living price for his product and the consumer may obtain food for himself and family at reasonable prices.

While the system that I have outlined will not change the great law of supply and demand in the determination of price fixing, it will, without question, assist the farmer in securing the full price to which he would be entitled under that law of supply and demand.

As soon as the organization becomes fully operative it will tend to conform the supply to the demand. It will prevent the recurrence of conditions which we have lately witnessed, where sheep raised in Wyoming, with good wool, hide, and everything, gave the farmer 32 cents per head at Chicago over cost of freight and marketing, while at the same time the Chicago housewife was compelled to pay as high as 40 cents for a single lamb chop. It would prevent the recurrence of a condition in which carloads of peaches were shoveled into the river because there was no market for them, while the people were paying exorbitant prices for peaches. It would obviate or eliminate a condition existing, and which has been existing in this very District and in the States of Maryland and Virginia, where fine apples were allowed to rot on the ground because the cost of marketing was more than the owner would receive for his product, while at the same time the consuming public in this city were being charged from 10 to 20 cents for a single apple.

I admit that it is a great advance step, but these are days of organization and organized endeavors. City organizations of employers, capitalists, and laborers have so advanced the price of all manufactured products that they are getting beyond the reach of the great food producing portion of the United States who are unable, through lack of organization, to determine even in the slightest degree the price for which they should sell their products.

We hear persons constantly bemoaning the fact that our population is drifting to the cities. To what part of our domain would they have this population migrate? If the depression of the prices of our farm products is due to a considerable extent to the fact that we produce more than we consume in this country, does any one expect to remedy that by increasing the number of producers and to that extent diminishing consumption?

Mr. President, the hope of the American farmer to-day lies in the ever-increasing numbers of the consumers of his products right here in the United States, right here at home. We have nearly reached the limit of our tillable acres, but the birth rate will continue. Population has no limit. In the light of this assurance let the American farmer take heart. The time is not far off when by reason of increased consumption in the United States, demanding every bushel of his grain, every pound of poultry and dairy products, every pound of beef and pork and mutton, the farmer can and will receive the full benefit of this protection which has made prosperous and built up our great city populations, a policy which since the Civil War has converted a population which at that time was two-thirds food producers into a population which is now more than two-thirds food consumers. Let the farmer not try to drive this great consuming population back into the field of food production.

Talk as he will, the United States which consumes 90 per cent of the farmers's products is his best customer, more so to-day than ever, due to the poverty of the old European consumers. Let the farmer help by his staying arm to maintain the prosperity of the consuming class right here at home, to give employment to every laborer in the United States at living wages so that he and his family may buy greater quantities of the farmer's products.

Let the American manufacturer and factory laborer remember that the principle of protection is mutual. Let them remember that their prosperity depends in like measure upon the prosperity of the farming class. I ask them, "Why are not your mills operating to-day and why are millions of workers idle"? If you do not realize it, let me tell you frankly the cause: Your cost of production and cost of distribution are so high that the great agricultural class, the prices of whose main products are far below prewar prices, can not purchase those products. Millions of bread winners can not purchase them. So just eliminate all selfishness from your hearts. Be willing, yes anxious, to pay for your food products a price that will result in prosperity to your best customer, the American farmer. Give him every possible protection. Help him in every possible way, except by charity. He does not want charity. He wants opportunity.

Population will always drift to the field of greatest remuneration for labor or for business. None of it will ever drift back to the farm so long as the earnings in the cities are from five to ten times as great as in the country. Most people who have had experience in living on the farm and in the city would by far prefer the rural occupation if it could be made as remunerative.

The whole effort of nations from a national standpoint should be to assist, so far as legislation can assist, in bringing about higher compensation for the producers of farm products. This can be done—

First, by holding the American market for the American farmer so far as he is able to supply that market for a reasonable compensation.

Second, by assisting in every possible way in the distribution of farm products, to the end that the farmer shall receive a living price for the things which he produces. This latter result can be obtained only through the methods of cooperative marketing, under general supervision, which I have indicated.

I shall therefore submit this bill to the committee with the earnest hope that it shall receive that consideration which its great purpose entitles it to receive. It may not be perfect. I submit it for such amendments as those who understand the agricultural situation in this country shall deem advisable. I am willing to place it side by side with any other scheme which has ever been proposed and allow it to stand upon its comparative merits.

President Harding, in his address before the two Houses of Congress at the opening of this session, declared:

> Something more than tariff protection is required by American agriculture. To the farmer has come the earlier and heavier burdens of readjustment. There is actual depression in our agricultural industry, while agricultural prosperity is absolutely essential to the general prosperity of the country.
> Congress has sought very earnestly to provide relief. It has promptly given such temporary relief as has been possible, but the call is insistent for the permanent solution. It is inevitable that large crops lower the prices and short crops advance them. No legislation can cure that fundamental law. But there must be some economic solution for the excessive variation in returns for agricultural production.
> It is rather shocking to be told, and to have the statement strongly supported, that 9,000,000 bales of cotton raised on American plantations in a given year will actually be worth more to the producers than 13,000,000 bales would have been. Equally shocking is the statement that 700,000,000 bushels of wheat raised by American farmers would bring them more money than a billion bushels. Yet these are not exaggerated statements. In a world where there are tens of millions who need food and clothing, which they can not get, such a condition is sure to indict the social system which makes it possible.
> In the main the remedy lies in distribution and marketing. Every proper encouragement should be given to the cooperative marketing programs. These have proven very helpful to the cooperating communities in Europe. In Russia the cooperative community has been the recognized bulwark of law and order and saved individualism from engulfment in social paralysis. Ultimately they will be accredited with the salvation of the Russian State.

There is the appeal for this experiment. Why not try it?

The time is propitious, the psychology of the country is en rapport with the idea of cooperative marketing, and that on a great scale. The farmers of the country are asking, not charity, but the best conditions which the laws of this country will give them to allow them to maintain their business outside the realms of charity. If they can secure an honest price for their crops when they do raise them, they will not be asking the Nation for appropriations for seed grain to meet the years of failure. Insure the agricultural population of this country a fair market price for its products and the money received therefrom will set in motion every wheel of industry in the United States.

Mr. President, I ask that the bill which I have introduced relative to cooperative marketing may be printed as an appendix to the statements which I have just made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

APPENDIX.

The bill (S. 3067) to create a Federal cooperative marketing board, to provide for the organization of cooperative marketing associations, and for other purposes, introduced by Mr. McCUMBER January 24, 1922, is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby established a board to be known as the Federal cooperative marketing board (hereinafter in this act referred to as the board), and to be composed of five members having special and expert knowledge and experience, as follows: One in the cooperative handling and marketing of grain; one in the cooperative handling and marketing of fruit; one in the cooperative handling and marketing of cotton; one in the cooperative handling and marketing of dairy products; and one in the cooperative handling and marketing of live stock.

Such members shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, for terms of five years, except that of such members first appointed, one shall be appointed for a term of one year; one for a term of two years; one for a term of three years; one for a term of four years; and one for a term of five years. Each member of the board shall receive a salary of $6,000 per annum. Any vacancies in the board shall not impair the powers nor affect the duties of the remaining members. A vacancy in the board shall be filled in the same manner as the original appointment, and any person appointed to fill a vacancy shall be appointed only for the unexpired term of the member whom he succeeds.

The board may make such expenditures for stationery, printing, telegrams, telephones, books, periodicals, postage, and other supplies and expenses, and may appoint and remove and fix the compensation of such officers, employees, and agents as they may deem necessary in order to carry out the provisions of this act. The Secretary of Agriculture shall furnish the board with quarters, furniture, and office equipment in the District of Columbia, and shall cooperate with the board in every manner possible in carrying out the provisions of this act. The expenditures of the board shall be allowed and paid upon the presentation of itemized vouchers therefor, approved by the board and signed by the chairman thereof.

SEC. 2. That it shall be the duty of the board—

(a) Immediately upon the appointment and qualification of the members, and annually thereafter, to organize by selecting from its number a chairman and a treasurer. The treasurer shall furnish a bond in such amount and upon such terms as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe.

(b) To promulgate rules and regulations for carrying out the provisions of this act.

(c) To prescribe and from time to time to amend by-laws, not inconsistent with the provisions of this act, for the governing of the associations hereinafter provided for.

(d) To gather, compile, and disseminate such information, statistics, and other data as may be useful in the cooperative handling and marketing of grain, fruit, dairy products, cotton, live stock, and of such other agricultural products as it may deem advisable.

(e) To study, investigate, and devise plans for a comprehensive system of cooperating handling and marketing and for the formation, control, and maintenance of terminal market places for the products of the members of the associations, in order to bring the producer and the ultimate consumer into as nearly direct relation and communication as possible, and to eliminate the existing heavy expenses and charges borne by the producer and the consumer resulting from intermediate handlings and profits.

(f) In order to secure uniformity, as nearly as may be possible, in the organizations becoming members of an association, to recommend articles of incorporation, articles of association, and by-laws, giving due consideration to varying conditions and needs; but failure to adopt any such recommendations shall not affect the eligibility of any member.

(g) To cooperate with the Secretary of Agriculture and with the agricultural departments or agencies of the States.

SEC. 3. (a) That there shall be in every State, if the board deems it advisable, a State cooperative agency (hereinafter in this act referred to as the agency), to be composed of not more than five members. The members of any such agency shall be appointed by the associations within the State for a term of office not exceeding three years. Each of such members shall receive a salary of not more than $4,500 per annum, to be prescribed by the association.

(b) It shall be the duty of every such agency—

(1) To organize, subject to the approval of the board, associations for the cooperative handling and marketing of grain, fruit, dairy products, cotton, live stock, or other agricultural products.

(2) To advise every such association, and the members thereof, upon the best disposition of their products, including advice upon financial methods, storage facilities, general market conditions, the most favorable market, the transportation situation, and upon such other matters as they may deem of assistance or upon which the association requests advice or assistance.

(3) To assist any association, upon request therefor, by acting as its agent or by appointing or recommending persons to act as its agents, in providing or arranging for financial assistance, storage facilities, transportation, or in marketing its products, or otherwise.

(4) To cooperate, with the approval or upon the direction of the board, with any other agency.

(5) To perform such other duties as the board or the associations may direct.

(c) Until such time as there are a sufficient number of members so that the associations within a State are self-supporting, the board may appoint an officer to perform the duties imposed by this act upon the agency for such State.

SEC. 4. (a) That any group of persons eligible for membership may petition the agency for the creation of a Federal cooperative marketing association (hereinafter in the act referred to as an association). Such petition shall contain the names, addresses, and occupations of the petitioners, a copy of the provisions, if any, proposed to be incorporated in the by-laws, a statement that each petitioner voluntarily adopts and agrees to be bound by the by-laws of the association, and such further facts or statements as the agency or the board may require. The agency shall transmit such petition, with its recommendations, to the board. Upon approval by the board the agency shall take such steps as may be necessary to create such association.

(b) Any individual, partnership, association, corporation, or other group or organization, eligible to become members, may petition the agency for membership in an association. Such petition shall contain the names, addresses, and occupations of the petitioners, the association in which membership is petitioned for, a statement that the petitioners know the by-laws of such association, and that they agree to be bound thereby, such facts as may be necessary to establish their eligibility to membership, and such further facts or statements as the agency or the board may require. If the agency approves such petition, in whole or in part, it shall notify each petitioner of its action. The petitioners to whom the agency has granted membership shall become members of the association as of the date of the mailing of such notification. In the event that the agency has denied membership to any petitioner, it shall transmit to the board the petition, its action thereon, and any statement such petitioner may file in relation thereto. If the board disapproves of the action of the agency, it shall direct the action to be taken by the agency. Every petition shall be transmitted by the agency to the board, and if the board disapproves the granting of membership to any petitioner, it shall order the agency to revoke the membership of such petitioner, and in such case a proportionate amount of the dues and fees paid by such member shall be refunded.

SEC. 5. That the board shall upon request therefor by an agency or a member of an association, and may upon request therefor by any interested party or upon its own initiative investigate the conduct of any member of an association. If the board finds that such member has violated any provision of this act or any by-law of such association, it may revoke the membership of such member, or it may take such other action as it deems advisable.

SEC. 6. (a) That an individual shall not be eligible to membership in an association unless—

(1) He is actively engaged in raising or producing the particular product for the cooperative handling and marketing of which the association was formed. An individual may be eligible to membership in more than one association.

(b) No partnership, association, or other group or organization shall be eligible to membership as such in an association unless each individual thereof is eligible, and no corporation shall be eligible to membership in an association unless it would be eligible as an individual.

(c) Each association shall be composed only of members raising or producing one of the following: Grain, cotton, fruit, live-stock or dairy products, or such other agricultural products as the board may authorize.

SEC. 7. That the by-laws of any association formed under the provisions of this act shall contain—

(a) The name of the association.

(b) Provisions for the creation of a State agency and the appointment of the members thereof.

(c) A provision that the purpose of the association is to secure more efficient and more profitable methods of handling and marketing the products of its members.

(d) A provision that every member shall use every effort to prevent a person who is not eligible to membership from becoming or continuing to be a member.

(e) A provision that only a member shall be entitled to the privileges and benefits of the provisions of this act, and that each member agrees not to extend any such privileges or benefits to other than a member.

(f) A provision for the payment of the expenses of the association and the share of the association of the expenses of the agency. Such provision may include membership fees of not more than $5 for each individual member and not more than $25 for each partnership, association, corporation, or other group or organization, and annual dues of not more than $5 for each individual member and not more than $25 for each partnership, association, corporation, or other group or organization, and shall include authority to raise the remainder of the amount to be paid by the association by levying a percentage assessment on the amount received by each member from the sale of his products through the association, but in no case shall such assessment exceed 1 per centum of such amount.

(g) Such other provisions not inconsistent with the provisions of this act as the board may prescribe for the association or which the association, with the approval of the board, may adopt.

SEC. 8. (a) That the expenses of the board shall be paid by the United States. The expenses of each association shall be paid by the association, and the expenses of the agency, including the salaries of the members, shall be paid by the associations in the State.

(b) There is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the payment of the expenses of the board, including the payment of the salaries of the members and the officers, employees, and agents of the board, and the travel, subsistence, and other necessary expenses of such members, officers, employees, and agents incurred in the performance of the duties vested in the board in other places than the District of Columbia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota desire to have the bill referred to the committee?

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask that the bill may be printed and lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the bill will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. I did not know but that the Senator from North Dakota had finished.

Mr. McCUMBER. I had concluded my speech and was going to suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. FLETCHER. I trust the Senator will defer that for just a moment.

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I am merely going to say in connection with the Senator's remarks that I am glad to see that he has taken this step toward securing cooperative marketing or cooperative efforts in the distribution of farm products. It is a matter in which I have for a great many years felt a very deep interest, and I have endeavored heretofore to promote that object. One plan in which I had a little success was the extension of the parcel-post system so as to bring about to a larger extent direct dealings between the producers and the consumers. I think that has helped some, both in the matter of getting better prices for the producer and in getting supplies at a lower price by the consumer, but that, of course, was a comparatively limited factor. We need some system that will enable us to solve the problem of economical distribution; that is the great problem. We have done a great deal toward increasing production. The Agricultural Department has been most helpful to the people of the country; Congress has been very liberal in providing appropriations designed to assist in increasing production; but the problem of distribution has, up to this time, remained almost wholly unsolved. The result of the lack of system is something which should make us feel that somewhere and somehow we have been neglectful and derelict in that great field.

However, outside of that question and leaving that for the moment—for the Senator from North Dakota has very ably covered the matter this morning in his discussion, so far as his bill is concerned—I desire to say that there is no doubt, as the President stated yesterday, and as we all concede, that agriculture in this country is languishing and the situation ought to be taken hold of along various lines.

In 1916 we established what is known as the farm loan system. That system was intended to meet the financial needs of agriculture; it was established primarily in the interest of agriculture. The system has been operating splendidly; it has demonstrated its feasibility, workableness, and usefulness to the farmers of the country. Of course, we know that there were some 15 months during which the system was not functioning because of the litigation which had been instituted attacking the constitutionality of the law; but up to November 30, 1921, according to the fifth annual report of the Farm Loan Board, which I have before me, Federal land bank bonds of that system had been authorized and issued to the amount of $432,761,315.

Loans have been made through the 12 Federal land banks to November 30, 1921, to the amount of $415,173,150.81 and by the joint stock land banks to the amount of $81,734,869.48. The rate of interest the borrower pays is not exceeding 6 per cent, or not exceeding one-half of 1 per cent more than the bonds bear. The borrowers have obtained these loans at 5 per cent arising under the first issues of bonds and 5½ per cent under the later issues.

The funds which are loaned to farmers under that system are derived from the sale of the bonds. Those bonds can not be sold unless they are issued, and they are not issued except as authorized by the Farm Loan Board. Of course, if they are not issued there are not funds to meet the requirements and to accommodate the necessities of the farmers. We then come back to the proposition that, in order to supply the funds for which the farmers of the country apply and which they desire to obtain in taking advantage of the facilities of that system, the Farm Loan Board must offer for sale the bonds which are based upon collective mortgages, as the law provides. When those bonds are sold to the public, then the banks will have the proceeds with which to respond to the applications for loans which the farmers who are eligible under the act may make.

The farmers of the country never needed the assistance of that system so badly as they have needed it in recent years, say, since the close of the World War. When the constitutionality of the act was passed upon by the Supreme Court and it was declared to be constitutional on the 28th of February last, applications had accumulated in every Federal land bank throughout the country and demands for loans under that system have been most urgent and pressing upon the banks. In many instances farmers have lost their homes, have lost their hope, and are in despair because they have been unable to get the loans to which they were entitled under that system. One reason has been that there has been an insufficient supply of money. The only reason for that insufficient supply is that the Farm Loan Board has not offered to the public for sale the bonds out of which these funds could have been realized. Last May they offered an issue of $40,000,000.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator just at this point? When the bill went over to the House the Farm Loan Board really used their influence to defeat the appropriation of $200,000,000 which the Senate made to buy these bonds on the ground that they did not need the money.

Mr. FLETCHER. They said they did not need the money, because, they said, "We can sell the bonds now"; and they could have sold the bonds, but they did not offer the bonds for sale in sufficient quantity. They offered $40,000,000 on last May 1. For some unaccountable reason, although the act was declared constitutional on the 28th of February, 1921, and although every bank was in existence, fully officered, and although the Farm Loan Board here was drawing pay and had been doing so steadily all the time, they never got functioning again until the 1st of June. Now, think of that! Here were the farmers of this country appealing for the opportunity to avail themselves of that system, which was established for their benefit, and the officials were not able to begin functioning again for all this time. To be sure, they suspended operations for a time by reason of the litigation which had been pending; but I do not entirely forgive them about that, because I have always contended that they need not have stopped functioning all that time. There never was any injunction against the Farm Loan Board. There never was an order or a decree of any court that prohibited them from proceeding with their work.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I ask the Senator from Florida if he is sure he is right as to the date of the decision?

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator will find that set out in the Fifth Annual Report of the Federal Farm Loan Board, page 1, wherein they say:

> On February 28 of the present year the litigation was finally disposed of by a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States confirming in all particulars the constitutionality of the farm loan act.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I will ask him for the privilege of saying, as an evidence of the eagerness with which these loans have been sought since May 1, 1921, that down to December 31, 1921, they loaned to North Carolina $2,332,000, to South Carolina over $4,000,000, to Georgia over $3,000,000, and to Florida $671,000, leaving off the odd figures, making in all $10,867,000 in these few months.

Mr. FLETCHER. Since the 1st of June. This report further shows that it was not until the 1st of May that the banks were ready to deliver their bonds. Then they say further that they then made a combined offering of $40,000,000 of 5 per cent bonds, with the proceeds of which their loaning activities were resumed by the 1st of June.

What I am getting to is this: There is a great agency which we have set up and have given authority and power to serve the farmers of this country in the matter of their long-term credits and their capital requirements. It has demonstrated fully that it can do what Congress intended that it should do. It can meet largely, if not entirely and fully, the demands of the farmers of this country in respect to long-term loans. It does not do it. From one end of the country to the other I am getting appeals from those who wish to borrow under that law and are entitled to borrow—cultivators, producers, farmers actually operating their farms—and the complaint is that they are receiving notices from the secretaries of the National Farm Loan Associations, by direction of the Federal land banks, to send in no more applications; that the applications on hand can not be considered for months and months; that they have not sufficient funds on hand to comply with the requests and demands that are already made; and therefore these farmers are not being served as they ought to be served under that system.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

Mr. FLETCHER. The only thing to do is for the Farm Loan Board to offer these bonds. The public are ready to take them. It is simply a question in that respect of administration. I yield to the Senator if he wishes to ask a question; but they say in their report on page 4:

> In estimating the probable volume of business through the Federal land banks for a given period, two major questions must of necessity be considered—the supply of funds and physical capacity. Neither of these questions has been tested to such a finality as to admit of a definite estimate.

In the name of Heaven, when are they going to test them? There never was such call, such demand, such need for the full operation of this system as to-day. They have had the time before and since the 28th of February, 1921, to test the questions as to how many bonds the public will take and to test the question of their physical capacity to do the business. When are they going to test it? It is not a question of the Government giving them a dollar. It is not a question of the Government doing anything except to see that the officers of this Government, in charge of a great agency of the Government, shall do their duty; that is all.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FLETCHER. They do not have to ask the Government for a cent, and they are not asking the Government for a cent—not a penny. The farmers of this country are not calling upon this Government to-day for any kind of favor of any sort—not a thing but that the officers of this Government who are sworn to do this duty shall do it; that is all.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield; yes.

Mr. SMOOT. I simply wanted to say to the Senator that I am quite sure that $75,000,000 worth of these bonds will be offered within a very few days.

Mr. FLETCHER. I hope so. There has been insistence enough. It is time they were being offered. They ought to have been offered before.

Mr. SMOOT. That is a question of judgment.

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not want to be diverted. That is very good information; but why have they hesitated all this time? Why is it that from one end of this country to the other these applications have been resting there for weeks and weeks and weeks, and farmers are losing their homes and abandoning their farms because they have been unable to get the accommodation they were entitled to have? After this $40,000,000 was issued in April or May, there was $60,000,000 issued later on, in November.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me now for a question, as I yielded to him?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes; very cheerfully.

Mr. McCUMBER. Just for one question, right along the line that the Senator is now discussing.

I thought this system of getting money to the farmers was not the best system in the world, involving as it did the creation of a lot of banks with overhead expenses, and then having those banks issue bonds, and then selling the bonds and taking the money to loan to the farmers. I always considered that we might just as well do directly what we were attempting to do indirectly, and have a bureau in the Treasury Department that would make the loans, sell the bonds themselves, and take the money that they got and go on and make the next loan, and continue that. That proposal passed the Senate at one time, but we wanted to establish this great banking system. It has done good; I will admit that; but I do not think more than 1 per cent of the mortgages in my State during this whole time have been taken up and made through this system.

What is the merit of the system, and how can we get the money? Only by issuing tax-free bonds. That is correct, is it not? Assuming, then, that those bonds that are to be issued to obtain the money to make the loans upon the farms are tax free, and that that is the thing which will make them salable at par at the present time, the whole country is being honeycombed to-day to find tax-free securities. Men are sent out from Chicago by different firms to see little communities to get them to fix up their streets for pavements, and so forth, to the end that they may issue bonds, and then they assure them that they can find a market for the bonds. If that is to be done, tell me why you can not accomplish the same thing by saying to the widow who has a thousand dollars that she wants to loan to a farmer: "Loan him that thousand dollars and the interest upon it will be tax free." You can meet the need just as well by making the securities obtained on the loans upon farms tax free as you can by making the bonds which are to secure the money tax free.

I will say to the Senator that I am going to introduce a bill for that very purpose, and put it before the Agricultural Committee to see if it is not better, after all, to allow the mortgages directly to be tax free, and thereby get a lower rate, than it is to go around through this system of bonds; provided, of course, that the interest upon these mortgages shall not be above 5 or 6 per cent.

Mr. FLETCHER. Of course when we get to that question about tax-free securities, I shall be very glad to take it up with the Senator. I do not want to take the time to go into that now.

Mr. McCUMBER. We have five minutes now before the funding bill is called up.

Mr. FLETCHER. What does the Senator want done?

Mr. McCUMBER. I am ready to go on with that bill any time; but if the Senator wants to go on until 2 o'clock——

Mr. FLETCHER. I should like to proceed until 2 o'clock, and then I can proceed afterwards, if I like, without anybody's permission.

Mr. McCUMBER. Very well, Mr. President.

Mr. FLETCHER. I will say, with reference to the Senator's suggestion about this system, that it is operating admirably. There are no excessive overhead charges. There is nothing cumbersome about it. There is no objection anywhere being raised to it so far as the plan, the purposes of Congress, as expressed in the act, are concerned. It is a splendid, efficacious system.

As to what is being done in North Dakota under it, the report shows that there are 6,771 borrowers in North Dakota; that they applied for $24,349,930 and they got $21,741,750.

The total number of acres mortgaged in North Dakota was 1,508,905. I think they are doing quite a little business under that system in North Dakota, and I venture to say that the farmers in North Dakota do not want to see that system crippled. There is not any question but that it is a beneficent system of the greatest possible value to the farmers of this country; and as to the feature of exempting the bonds from taxation, that, of course, is for the benefit of the borrower. If they are not exempt from taxation, they will have to bear a higher rate of interest; and the law provides that the borrower shall not pay more than one-half of 1 per cent above what the bonds sell for, and the rate of interest is limited to 6 per cent. Never before in the history of this country were the farmers able to obtain their accommodations at 5½ per cent interest, and they are able to do so under this system and are doing so. Four hundred and odd million dollars have been loaned through these Federal land banks, and nearly a hundred million dollars through the joint stock land banks, a total of $500,000,000 to farmers in this country under this system at 5 and 5½ per cent, and that never was heard of before in the history of this country. You are not going to cripple that system.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Nor, Mr. President, have they ever had so long a time for repayment.

Mr. FLETCHER. Why, they get the accommodation practically on their own terms. They can pay 1 per cent per annum toward the principal and have the loan run for 35 years if they want to, or they have the right to pay it off at any time after five years if they desire to do so. There are other favorable provisions which I assume are well understood.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield. I have only a minute left.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. If it will not divert the Senator, what is his explanation of the fact that the State of North Dakota can get twice as much money under that system as the four States of Florida, Georgia, North Carolina, and South Carolina?

Mr. FLETCHER. This is a very interesting report, and I should like to examine it in some detail, but I presume it is because they have been more active and more insistent and more energetic out there, perhaps, than they have been elsewhere.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I can assure the Senator that that would not explain it, because I know they have been extremely insistent in my State, and my understanding is that the same thing is true of these other States.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think that is quite true, Mr. President. The plan that the Federal Farm Loan Board has adopted has been to parcel out the funds, distribute them so much to each Federal land bank. There are 12 Federal land banks in the country. In the Senator's district—North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, and Florida—the land bank is located at Columbia, S. C. That bank out of, we will say, the $40,000,000, is assigned so many millions, probably three millions and something. Of course, that is all they have to loan. For some reason or other the Farm Loan Board has assigned something more than that to North Dakota. Then in November they had another issue of $60,000,000, and those bonds were sold readily. The board apportioned the proceeds as they considered advisable to the different banks. There can not be any question about the public taking these bonds, because those bonds that were sold in November, now held by private parties, can not be bought for less than 103 or 104, and I was told by a bond house just the other day that if they had farm loan bonds they could sell at least $1,000,000 that day. There is not any valid reason why there should not be another issue of these bonds promptly. There ought to be at once. There ought to have been before this if they are short of funds, and they evidently are, or the people would not have been getting notices to cease filing applications and notices that there would necessarily be these interminable delays in dealing with their applications.

The trouble, in my judgment, is not with the banks. The trouble is not with the farm loan associations. The trouble is with the Farm Loan Board. There is no escape from that, because no bonds can issue until they authorize the issuance of the bonds. The Farm Loan Board has been extremely cautious, conservative, if you please, careful about issuing the bonds. In one statement which they made they seemed to indicate that the Treasury Department held them back and preferred that they should not issue the bonds.

As I said, there is no reason why they should not offer the bonds, and there is practically no limit, as far as we know now, as to the extent to which the bonds would be taken by the public; not by the Treasury at all, because we do not want the Government to have anything to do with it, except to offer the bonds to the public. The public will take them and the money will be there to be distributed to the Federal land banks and loaned by them to the actual farmers of the country who need the funds now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will suspend. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The READING CLERK. A bill (H. R. 8762) to create a commission authorized under certain conditions to refund or convert obligations of foreign Governments owing to the United States of America, and for other purposes.

Mr. FLETCHER. If the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], who is entitled to the floor on the unfinished business, will permit me, I should like a little more time to go into this and to discuss the report a little further, but perhaps it is unnecessary to dwell longer upon it, since the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] has advised that within a short time there is going to be an issue of some $75,000,000 of bonds. That is what I am after, and if that is going to be done it will help the situation.

We may talk all we please about cooperative marketing and about other things that we want to provide for the farmer, but we have already provided a great system for the farmers of the country that is worth more to them than all the other things we have done or than there is in the air or in our minds, and yet the law is not being executed as it should be and the system is not allowed to function with that freedom and fullness of which it is capable. The officers in charge of it do not seem to realize the situation. They are not putting it into operation and having it function as it should function. The possibilities are there, the facilities are all provided, and there is no reason in the world why the farmers of the country should not be supplied with the money they need under that system.

To show the safety of it, the report of the Farm Loan Board shows that while it has been in operation ever since 1916, and $500,000,000 has been loaned to the farmers at 5½ per cent, the earlier loans at 5 per cent and the later loans at 5½ per cent, they have lost but $200 on one little loan on the entire business up to this time. The foreclosures are listed in the report. Some foreclosures have taken place and the property has sold in every instance at more than twice the amount of the loan held by the Federal land bank.

The system is there, the facilities are already provided, and all the people in charge of it have to do is to administer the law. The public is ready to take the bonds and let the money go to the people who are waiting for it, who are asking for it, who are pleading for it and have been for months, but who can not get action. That sort of thing should not be. Let us take up the slack; let us put into operation with real energy, as can readily and easily be done, the system which we have already provided and which has demonstrated absolutely its efficiency. Much has been already accomplished, and no serious obstacle in the original law or the plan stands in the way of most gratifying success.

ADJUSTMENT OF FOREIGN LOANS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8762) to create a commission authorized under certain conditions to refund or convert obligations of foreign Governments owing to the United States of America, and for other purposes.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I make the point of no quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hale	Moses	Smoot
Ball	Harreld	Nelson	Stanfield
Borah	Harris	Nicholson	Sterling
Brandegee	Harrison	Norris	Sutherland
Broussard	Heflin	Oddie	Swanson
Bursum	Johnson	Overman	Townsend
Calder	Jones, N. Mex.	Page	Trammell
Cameron	Jones, Wash.	Pepper	Wadsworth
Capper	Kenyon	Phipps	Walsh, Mass.
Caraway	Ladd	Pittman	Walsh, Mont.
Culberson	La Follette	Poindexter	Warren
Curtis	Lenroot	Pomerene	Watson, Ga.
Dial	McCumber	Ransdell	Watson, Ind.
Edge	McKellar	Robinson	Willis
Fletcher	McKinley	Sheppard
Glass	McLean	Simmons
Gooding	McNary	Smith

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-five Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The Senator from North Carolina will proceed.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I wish to address myself briefly to the unfinished business now before the Senate.

On the 23d day of June, 1920, seven months ago, Senator Penrose introduced in the Senate a bill providing for the refunding of our foreign loans. That bill was drafted in the Treasury Department. It was transmitted by the Secretary of the Treasury to the President and by the President to the chairman of the Committee on Finance, then Mr. Penrose, with a letter approving the bill and urging prompt action upon it.

I wish to read to the Senate that bill, and Senators who honor me with their attention will discover later why I read the first bill upon this subject introduced in the Congress. I shall not read the whole of the bill, but only the part which relates to the powers conferred. It is as follows:

> That the Secretary of the Treasury, with the approval of the President, * * * is hereby authorized from time to time to refund or convert, and to extend the time of payment of the principal or the interest, or both, of any obligation of any foreign Government now owing to the United States of America, or any obligation of any foreign Government hereafter received by the United States of America (including obligations held by the United States Grain Corporation), arising out of the European war, into bonds or other obligations of such, or of any other, foreign Government, and from time to time to receive bonds and obligations of any foreign Government in substitution for those now or hereafter held by the United States of America, in such form and on such terms, conditions, date or dates of maturity, and rate or rates of interest, and with such security, if any, as shall be deemed for the best interests of the United States of America, and to adjust and settle any and all claims not now represented by bonds or obligations, which the United States of America now has or hereafter may have against any foreign Government and to accept securities therefor.

That bill lodged these broad, sweeping, unlimited powers in the Secretary of the Treasury.

It will be noted first, Mr. President, that these powers are not confined to obligations now due the United States by foreign Governments in whatever form those obligations may be attested, but it extends to any obligation or indebtedness which may hereafter accrue to the United States from any foreign Government.

There has been much controversy in the Senate since this matter was first brought to its attention with reference to the exchange of the obligations due the United States by one Government for the obligations of another Government. That matter was much discussed after this bill, embracing that broad power, was introduced, the very suggestion of which seemed to shock the country. The right of cancellation of these obligations was very much discussed before the matter was brought to the attention of the Congress and while the bill was still pending before the Finance Committee. It was shown that various suggestions, some of them emanating from foreign Governments, had been made of a cancellation of the indebtedness of our allies to us.

The question of the rate of interest and the extension of the time of payment of interest was much discussed in the country and in this body while the Finance Committee were investigating the bill which conferred upon the Secretary of the Treasury this unlimited and untrammeled authority. The question was discussed of whether this authority to the Secretary of the Treasury should be extended to other obligations that might in the future arise in favor of this Government from a foreign country.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Carolina yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. EDGE in the chair). Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. SIMMONS. I yield.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Does the Senator from North Carolina dispute that under the existing law the Secretary of the Treasury has a right to fund this debt?

Mr. SIMMONS. I am not talking about that now. I shall discuss that question later.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. But I thought the Senator from North Carolina was talking about the broad powers proposed to be conferred.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am discussing the bill to which I have referred. I am talking about the discussion which took place in the Senate and in the country concerning the provisions of that bill while it was pending before the Committee on Finance. That is what I am talking about.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Yes; but I understood the Senator to inveigh against the broad powers that it was proposed should be granted to the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am not inveighing at all; I am simply stating facts at this time.

Mr. President, while these discussions were going on in the Chamber and while they were going on in the press of the country the Secretary of the Treasury and his assistant Mr. Wadsworth, were called before the committee. There were various hearings, not all immediately following each other, but from time to time they were held before there was action upon the bill by the committee. The first hearing, I believe, was on July 14, 1921; another was held on July 15, another on July 18, another on July 20, and another on July 21. In those investigations the very questions to which I have referred, namely, the substitution of bonds of one debtor country for those of another, the question of the extension of the time for the payment of the interest, the question of the interest rate, and the question of the power of the Secretary to cancel or remit any part of these obligations, were considered. There did not seem to be in this Chamber, there did not seem to be in the country, any sentiment in favor of granting the broad powers for which the Secretary was asking, and upon which he insisted. On the other hand there was opposition, and very serious and pronounced opposition, to the grant of these broad powers, greater powers than any official in our whole political life had ever asked; so great, in fact, that they would not in the past have received serious consideration from the Congress even if they had been asked.

Yet, Mr. President, notwithstanding the efforts of some members of the Finance Committee to impose reasonable limitations and restrictions upon these unbridled powers which the Secretary of the Treasury was asking for himself, the Finance Committee of the Senate, with a Republican majority strongly in favor of the administration, ignored all protests from the outside and from the inside of the committee, and incontinently voted down a proposition which was submitted by the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], who is a member of the committee, providing in effect that whatever the Secretary of the Treasury might do under the powers conferred upon him should be subject to the approval of Congress.

I myself did not offer any amendments in the committee, because it became apparent to the minority Senators that no amendment would prevail or would be seriously considered by the majority. So I refrained from offering any amendment until the bill was ordered reported out. I have portrayed, Mr. President, the attitude of the majority of the committee at that time. They voted down all proposed amendments and even refused to give serious consideration to any suggestion looking to a limitation of the powers to be conferred upon the Secretary of the Treasury. So the bill was reported out by the committee just as it had been introduced by Senator Penrose, the chairman of the committee; just as it had been drafted by the Secretary of the Treasury, without change, except the addition at the close of a provision that the powers proposed to be conferred should not extend beyond five years from the date of the approval of the act.

Mr. President, when the report of the committee was made and before any action was taken, I presented in the Senate an amendment, a portion of which I desire to put into the RECORD, vesting the power in the President instead of in the Secretary of the Treasury, and providing at the end of the grant of powers, as follows:

> That nothing herein contained shall be construed as authorizing or empowering the President to cancel or remit any part of the principal or interest of any obligation due the United States by any foreign Government, or to change the rate of interest of such obligations as prescribed in existing law: Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be construed as authorizing or empowering the President to agree to the substitution for the obligations of any foreign debtor Government the bonds of any other foreign Government, or to postpone the payment of any interest accruing on any of such obligations after July 1, 1922.

That amendment was referred to the Committee on Finance, and to this good day it has not been taken up except in connection with the bill which came over from the other House.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. SIMMONS. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. As a matter of fact, did not the Finance Committee at one time adopt the Senator's amendment, and then subsequently reverse its decision?

Mr. SIMMONS. I said the amendment was not considered except in connection with the pending House bill. The Senate bill, however, remained before the Senate after it was reported—and it was reported on the 19th day of August—and slept on the calendar for two months without being called up, without any effort to secure consideration for it at all, notwithstanding the fact that at the time the committee was considering the measure, as is well known to the country, promptness and expedition were being urged as essential, and it was declared that the proposed act was in the nature of emergency legislation. At the end of two months it was supplanted by the House bill now under consideration.

Mr. President, when that bill—I mean the Senate bill—was reported to the Senate the minority members of the committee filed their views in a minority report, in which attention was called to the sweeping powers granted by the bill, to the refusal by the committee to allow any restrictions whatsoever to be placed upon those powers, and to the fact that this course of action was pursued on account of the unrelenting insistence of the Secretary of the Treasury, even after it had been brought to his attention that certain of the powers proposed to be granted to him were such that it was certain that the Congress of the United States would desire to be consulted with reference to whatever action might be taken under them.

Mr. President, I have read this bill and have commented upon it in this way for two purposes: First, I wanted to call the attention of the Congress and of the country to the willingness of the majority party in this Chamber to confer upon the Secretary of the Treasury a power never before asked and never before granted, a power to act with reference to a matter involving $11,000,000,000, a sum more than twenty times as much as the Panama Canal cost the people of the United States. The majority party were willing to put that great interest of the Government in the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury to settle in any way that he might see proper, with power to substitute the bonds of one debtor for another without regard to difference in financial solvency or conditions; to cancel the debt to such extent as he saw fit; to fix the rate of interest, for, Mr. President, it was almost certain that the broad powers with reference to fixing a rate contained in the Senate bill would repeal the provisions of the second Liberty bond loan act with reference to interest and would put that question at large so as to make it absolutely within the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury not only to remit the principal and the interest but absolutely to extend the time for the payment of interest at his own sweet will. The Finance Committee were willing to do that, Mr. President; they were willing to grant to the present Secretary of the Treasury broad and unlimited powers with reference to this matter, in the face of the fact that in time of war, when we were less concerned about the grant of power and were willing to give almost any power that seemed to be necessary in order to obtain quick and efficient action, we refused to give to the Secretary of the Treasury the very identical powers with reference to the creation of this debt with respect to the Liberty bonds without specific limitation upon such powers.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. SIMMONS. I will yield to the Senator.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I wish to ask the Senator from North Carolina if his position is not clearly exemplified by the fact that when the Secretary of the Treasury appeared before the committee and was questioned as to his intention to substitute the bonds of Germany for the bonds of our other debtors he said that he had no such intention?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes; he said that.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I then asked the question if he would be willing to have written into the law that such a thing should not be done, and his answer was that he did not want to be hampered by any restriction whatsoever. I call attention further to the fact that the majority of the committee adopted his view of the matter at the time and wanted to give him complete authority without any restriction whatsoever.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is absolutely true. They not only refused to impose limitations with reference to powers that the Secretary insisted that he should have and intended to exercise, but they would not impose limitations as to powers which the present Secretary of the Treasury distinctly said he did not intend to exercise.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. SIMMONS. I do.

Mr. NORRIS. I want to ask the Senator if the bill gave to the Secretary of the Treasury authority to cancel the debt, or any part of it?

Mr. SIMMONS. I think that would be embraced within the powers that that bill conferred; yes. At least I insisted upon putting a limitation as to that in the amendment that I have suggested. The amendment was before the committee, and if the committee had wanted to restrict the Secretary about the matter of cancellation they could have adopted that provision in my amendment.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. SIMMONS. I do.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. If the Senator from North Carolina will permit me, it seems to me that the question addressed to him by the Senator from Nebraska is answered by the very language of the bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is what I said, I think.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator read it? I do not want to have any doubt about it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The language is this: Power is given to this commission to adjust and settle——

Mr. NORRIS. It was the Secretary, was it not? It was not a commission at that time.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes; but I am speaking about the bill that is before us.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am talking about the Senate bill. The Senate bill, to which I was addressing myself then, has the same provision, and I think in a little broader language. I did not want to stop to read it, but I will.

Mr. NORRIS. I had reference to the bill that the Senator was discussing, which I supposed was the other bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. The present bill is almost a copy of it, so far as powers are concerned.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator will notice that the power given in the first place is to refund, to convert, and to extend. That language, of course, would not accord the right to forgive any portion of the indebtedness due; but the power is not limited there, because on page 2, after reciting these things—that is, the case of obligations that have taken the form of bonds—in the case of obligations that have not taken the form of bonds we have this language:

> And to adjust and settle any and all claims not now represented by bonds or obligations.

It will be perceived that few of the obligations are represented by bonds; and, of course, when the words "adjust" and "settle" are used, that, of course, means an abatement of the principal of the claim.

Mr. NORRIS. It might mean a compromise. I should hardly think it would mean a cancellation of the debt; but if there was a dispute about it, that language would give him complete discretion to make any settlement, of course.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes; but, Mr. President, one can very readily understand how a dispute might arise about many of these matters. Take the loans to Russia, for instance. The present government of Russia, as we understand—if we may speak of it as a government—repudiates that obligation entirely.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Suppose that after a time that government should be recognized by our Government and we should make a demand for bonds for the entire amount of the obligations. They say: "We do not owe it at all." Of course, the Secretary is given power to adjust and settle it and take a less amount beyond question.

Mr. SIMMONS. Of the advances to foreign Governments not covered by the bonds that were issued on account of advances made under the Liberty loan acts I think the aggregate amount is something over $700,000,000; but I want to say to the Senator that to make assurance doubly sure the amendment which I offered to the Senate bill, and which was not accepted at that time, not even considered, expressly provided that nothing contained in the bill should be construed as authorizing or empowering the President to cancel or remit any part of the principal or interest upon any obligation due the United States by any foreign Government.

Mr. President, as I stated, that bill was introduced in the Senate and was before the committee from early in June of 1921 until October of the same year. No action was taken about it. Why, in these conditions which were described as emergency conditions, that bill was allowed to sleep as it did I never have been able to understand; but it remained here in the pigeonhole of the document room all that time. On October 20 the House sent over to the Senate a bill providing for the refunding of the debt. That bill, so far as its grant of power is concerned, is almost in the identical language of the Senate bill.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. I do not desire to interrupt the thread of the Senator's argument.

Mr. SIMMONS. I yield.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. The Senator says that he does not understand why that bill was not acted on during that period of some four months. In the first place the Senator will recall that we had many hearings on the question.

Mr. SIMMONS. Those hearings were closed.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Yes, they were closed; but the Senator will further remember that it was not deemed desirable—and I think he shared in the opinion—to have a debate on the floor of the Senate of the United States in regard to the funding of these debts, knowing what might be said with reference to certain of our allies while the present Conference on the Limitation of Armaments was being held and while the representatives of the very Governments about which discussion must of necessity be had were within our gates as our guests.

Mr. SIMMONS. Are they not here now?

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Yes; but the conference is about to close, and the truth about the matter is that we had information that the conference would be closed by this time. Therefore the matter drifted along and was permitted to drift along.

Not only that, but the Senator will recall that in order to avoid unseemly debate on this question—that is, unseemly under the conditions—we tried to get an arrangement by which both parties would agree upon the provisions of a bill, and that in the committee I myself made a motion that the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER], the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], and the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] should get together for the purpose of determining, if possible, on the provisions of a bill composing their differences and arriving at a fixed conclusion with reference to the formulation of a measure that would adequately express the opinion of the committee, and that they did get together for that purpose.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator is anticipating matters of which I intended to speak.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. But the Senator said he did not understand why this delay occurred, and I have explained the reason.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator has undertaken to explain why the delay took place, but I ask him the question why, if that was the reason, we are going on here now when the conference is still in session? There does not seem to have been any greater reason then why we should not launch this matter on the floor of the Senate and bring about the discussion of these questions—inevitable, inescapable questions—than that we should enter upon it now while the conference is still in session, if that, as the Senator alleges, was the reason and the only reason why the majority did not act upon it earlier.

Mr. President, as I have heretofore stated, the House bill, the one which we are now considering, is substantially the Senate bill upon which I have animadverted. The only differences are the following:

First, the House bill substitutes for the Secretary of the Treasury a commission, composed of the Secretary of the Treasury and four other members to be appointed by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate. I heartily approve that.

Second, the House bill changes the life of this authority conferred upon the commission from five years, as fixed in the Senate bill, to three years—a wholly immaterial change.

Third, the right of cancellation is denied, and the right to exchange the bonds of one Government for those of another is denied, in the House bill.

Those are the only differences between the House bill and the Senate bill that I have just been discussing. So far as the material question here is concerned, then, it may be said that the only difference between the Senate bill and the House bill, so far as it affects the powers of the Secretary of the Treasury or the commission—and that is where the controversy arises, with respect to these powers—is that the House bill which has been agreed upon and presented to the Senate prohibits the Secretary of the Treasury from canceling any part of the debt, and prohibits him from substituting the bonds of one Government for those of another. Those are the two things which the Secretary of the Treasury himself said, in his examination before the Finance Committee in the hearings upon the Senate bill, he did not expect to do; but the things which the Secretary of the Treasury in those hearings said he would not agree not to do are not limited in the House bill as they are not limited in the Senate bill. Those two things relate to the matter of the rate of interest and the extension of time for the payment of interest. That is the ground of controversy here. That was the ground of controversy before the Senate committee.

We tried, as the Senator from Indiana has said, to adjust these differences in the committee meeting held about the 12th of August, I believe, when we took up the House bill and dropped the Senate bill. When we went into that meeting then the atmosphere had changed. When we were considering the Senate bill, the minority were given no consideration at all. Every proposition they made was ignored. When we took up the House bill on or about the 12th of August—I am not certain of the exact date, but it was about that time—to consider what action we should take with reference to the Senate bill as a substitute for it, the Senators representing the majority said that they would be glad if we could arrange a bill that would be satisfactory to both sides of the Chamber and which would not provoke any serious debate.

Senators were good enough to ask me what suggestions I had to make along that line, and I then stated to the committee that so far as I was personally concerned—and I thought the other members of the minority on the committee would agree with me—it could be settled upon substantially the basis of the provisions contained in the amendment which I had offered to the Senate bill and heretofore read by me.

Some additional suggestions were made which were entirely satisfactory all around and a proviso was drafted. That proviso was drafted by the Senator from North Dakota and myself, collaborating. It contained all of the provisions of my original amendment and some minor provisions in addition thereto. I want to read that proviso to the Senate. I want to show how far that proviso has now been disregarded. This provision follows immediately after the grant of power in the House bill:

Provided, That nothing contained in this act shall be construed to authorize or empower the commission to extend the time of maturity of any bonds or obligations due to the United States from any foreign Government beyond June 15, 1947, or to fix the rate of interest at less than 5 per cent per annum, payable semiannually, or to cancel or remit any part of the principal or interest of such bonds or obligations, except through payment. Nothing in this act shall be construed to authorize or empower the commission to exchange or agree to the substitution of the bonds or obligations of any foreign Government for those of any other foreign Government, State, municipality, corporation, or obligor; but such bonds or other obligations may be received and held as collateral security for any debt due from such foreign Government to the United States.

That was the basis upon which it was suggested that we might reach an agreement. Upon that basis we did reach an agreement in the committee, and the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER], then acting chairman of that committee, was directed by the unanimous vote of the committee to report the House bill to the Senate with that proviso.

I wish to make it plain, Mr. President, that that agreement was reached after the Secretary of the Treasury and his assistant had been before the committee on the 12th day of November, earnestly, vigorously, persistently, and immovably insisting that we should not lay our hands upon his authority—his arbitrary, his uncontrolled, his unlimited authority—to extend the interest as he might see fit after he had investigated the situation with respect to the various countries. In the face of that we entered upon the agreement I have stated. The only controversy then, as now, revolved around the question of the rate of interest, the Secretary's control over that rate, and the unlimited right to extend the time of payment of interest.

Having overruled the Secretary and come to this agreement, as I said, the acting chairman of the committee was authorized to report the bill as expressing the unanimous views of the committee. He did stand on the floor of the Senate the next day, I think, after this agreement was reached and this proviso was written into the bill, and announced that he was ready to make the report of the committee that day, but that for some reason which he assigned he would not make it just at that moment but would make it later in the day.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

Mr. SIMMONS. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. The Senator suggested a moment ago that it was understood that a bill would be drawn fixing the interest at 5 per cent.

Mr. SIMMONS. At not less than 5 per cent.

Mr. KING. The question I have in mind is this: Did the committee discuss the proposition of the possibility, indeed the probability, of interest rates being materially reduced after the world returns to normal conditions, so that the bonds of the United States might be refunded at perhaps 2 or 3 per cent interest?

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not think there was any discussion of that matter.

Mr. KING. Did the committee consider the fact that there would be any reduction in the interest to be paid by foreign Governments under this refunding process in the event that world interest rates decline?

Mr. SIMMONS. No; I do not think so.

Mr. KING. There was to be no flexibility and no authority under the bill which was agreed upon, as I understood the Senator, by which there might be a reduction of interest as world interest rates were reduced?

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not think there was any discussion of that feature.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. SIMMONS. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. I am interested to know, and have been all the time since I have known in a general way of this rate of interest being fixed at 5 per cent, how it was that the committee reached the conclusion that 5 per cent is a proper rate. I think it must be admitted that it would be unfair for our Government, without the consent of the other Governments, to change the contract under which the money was borrowed, and that is specifically provided, as I understand it. That is one reason why it always seemed to me that this legislation is unnecessary, providing that the Secretary of the Treasury should change the form of the indebtedness and loan the money to these Governments practically on the same terms that he was borrowing money from our own people and that the rate of interest should be the same and the time of payment of principal and interest should be the same. As I understand it, while we have paid 5 per cent and perhaps more for some short-time certificates, the maximum interest on our bonds has been 4¼ per cent.

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator will permit me to discuss that a little later, I shall come to it then.

Mr. NORRIS. Very well.

Mr. SIMMONS. The committee never reported that bill as it had been agreed upon. I have been told, though I do not know whether it is true or not, that after the announcement of the acting chairman that he would make the report during the day the Secretary of the Treasury renewed his efforts and was influential to the extent of getting the bill back into the committee. It went back into the committee, anyhow, and another meeting was called some time later. In that meeting, in disregard of this consent arrangement, against the protest of the minority, following finally the request and the demand of the Secretary of the Treasury—for that was the only insistence that he had made, the only real insistence that he had made at any time—the committee struck out of the proviso all that part which related to the rate of interest and the extension of the time of the payment of the interest.

I wish to be entirely fair about this matter. I have no feeling about it one way or the other, either personal or partisan. I do not think it is a partisan question at all. I have no prejudice whatever against any of the Governments of the Old World who were our allies. I want this Government of ours to treat them with the utmost fairness and justice, taking into consideration all the circumstances of the several debtor Governments.

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] on yesterday talked about what he conjured up in his mind that I desired as expressed in my opposition to his bill with reference to France and thought that I was without sympathy for that noble Government and people, and that I was willing to treat them with harshness and injustice. No, Mr. President, no man has a higher appreciation of the French people than I. No man would go further to aid them in their difficulties and in their distress than I. But I believe that France is able to pay this interest and ultimately the principal.

I select France because the Senator from North Dakota selected France as an example. The French people to-day are the most prosperous people upon the continent of Europe. While France suffered incalculable losses in men and in treasure during the war, she was the one country into which was poured practically all the money that was expended in Europe by the Allies in the actual prosecution of hostilities. To-day France is the only country in Europe in which there are no unemployed. France is the only country in Europe whose factories are running full time. France is the only country in Europe which to-day, compared with every other country in Europe, is said to be in a prosperous condition. She is able to maintain an army almost probably as great as the greatest army which the world had known before the World War. She is able to enter upon a broad program of naval expansion.

I do not believe that France is in a condition under which she is unable to pay this interest. The Secretary of the Treasury admitted that Great Britain can pay the interest. There is no trouble about Great Britain. I think he cautiously expressed the opinion that both France and Italy would be able to pay the interest.

But that is not the question here. The Secretary of the Treasury and his commission under the bill are not authorized and directed or appointed for the purpose of collecting this debt. The debt is due the United States from those nations. The law creating that debt has defined the amount of interest that should be paid and fixed the time of the maturity of the obligations. The only purpose and function of the commission is to obtain from the debtor countries duly authenticated, authorized and certified, in proper legal form, evidence of the amount of the indebtedness which is already known, and a promise of the interest payment, the amount of which can be calculated. The Secretary of the Treasury has nothing to do with the collection of this money.

That is not what we are seeking to do. We are seeking only to do what every creditor has the right to do, to have his debt put in proper legal form. That is all. When it is put in proper legal form, then the question may arise as to what the people of the United States desire to do with respect to the enforcement of the payment of either the interest or the principal.

But the Secretary said, "No; I want authority now to determine for the people of the United States, in advance of any obligations being given, what is to be done with respect to the payment of the obligations after they have been duly authenticated." I say that is not a part of the duties for which the commission is to be created, and before I get through I shall argue that if that is a part of the duties that are to be conferred upon the commission, if the duties are those of the negotiation of delicate questions, questions which both collaterally and directly may touch vital and delicate international questions and relations, then Congress has no power to create it. Under the Constitution that is a power vested exclusively in the executive branch of the Government, to be exercised through the Department of State or by the President direct.

But I say that, in my judgment, the bill does not do that. It is not intended to do that and will not if properly drafted; but when we leave out this provision and when we authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to negotiate with these foreign Governments as to the rate of interest and the extension of interest payments, and all those things, then that proposition is injected and this in my judgment may become an unconstitutional measure. A little later I shall discuss that probably more at length.

Mr. President, the controversy here is twofold. First it is as to the rate of interest. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] asked why the rate had been fixed at 5 per cent in the proviso which I offered. I desire to say to the Senator that it was fixed at that rate because that was the rate which had been practically agreed upon by this Government and the Government of Great Britain in an understanding which did not eventuate in a positive and final agreement because the negotiations were suddenly broken off, but which did go far enough to evidence the assent of Great Britain to that as a proper rate.

I will say to the Senator, further, that in his testimony before his committee the Secretary of the Treasury said that was the proper rate if we were to give effect to the declared will of the people at the time we issued bonds to borrow money to lend to the foreign Governments.

The Senator said that some of the bonds bear a less rate of interest than that. True; but all of those bonds, under the law of their creation, were entitled to be converted into bonds bearing a higher rate if a higher rate were afterwards established. All of them practically are convertible into bonds bearing 4¼ per cent, but that was the minimum rate prescribed in the law for Liberty bonds. We declared that it should not be less than that.

Why did we put it in that form? It was because it was known that the Government would have to expend a large amount of money in the floating of its own bonds, and it did have to do so. I do not now recall which issue it was, but I think it was the second Liberty bond issue, for which we appropriated $4,000,000 to pay the expenses of flotation, and my recollection is that we subsequently had to supplement that appropriation. That did not cover all the expenses which the Government incurred in connection with the issuance of those bonds.

I take it that it is agreed by all of us that in fixing the interest rate it is perfectly legitimate to consider that circumstance. The Secretary of the Treasury himself expressed the opinion that 5 per cent was the correct rate. I could show the Senator, if he wishes to pursue the matter and if he can get hold of a document which is called "The Loan of Foreign Obligations," a very lengthy correspondence carried on between Mr. Rathbone, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, appointed by the Treasurer to go to Europe and negotiate the settlement of this indebtedness with Great Britain, through Mr. Blackett, the immediate representative of the English premier, Lloyd-George, in which it appeared that the negotiations proceeded to the point of agreement as to many things, and one of those things was as to the rate of interest, which was fixed at 5 per cent.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator now?

Mr. SIMMONS. Certainly; though I have not answered all of the Senator's question.

Mr. NORRIS. I will interrupt the Senator later if he would prefer.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am glad to yield to the Senator now.

Mr. NORRIS. I have always been one who objected very strenuously to anything that would forgive and cancel any of the debts or interest of these foreign Governments. At the same time, I believe I have been just as anxious to preserve unsullied the honor of my own country in the collection of the debts.

These debts were contracted and this money was loaned by the Government of the United States to these other Governments under an act of Congress that had in it certain provisions, among which was a provision that the borrowing country should pay a rate of interest the same as we had to pay, and that if we had to borrow money later and issue more bonds with a higher rate they should pay that higher rate. They accepted the money and we loaned it to them under that kind of a law. That, as I understand, became a contract between us and the foreign Governments. They have no right, in honor and morals, to ask us to accept anything less, and we have no right in honor or in morality to ask them to pay any more.

It is true we did pay and are now paying on certain certificates of indebtedness as high a rate of interest as 5 per cent, and I think in some cases higher than 5 per cent on some of the issues. We also issued what we called a Victory loan, on which we paid as high a rate of interest as 4¾ per cent, that loan running for five years, but the Government of the United States has contended that the loans so made were not the loans that were referred to in the Liberty loan acts, though the acts authorizing them contained the same provision concerning the money being borrowed of our own people, to wit, that if the Government had to borrow money later at a higher rate the holders could refund the bonds and get new bonds bearing the higher rate.

The Government has successfully contended, and nobody that I know of has controverted it, that the Victory loan, which runs for five years, and the obligations, evidences of which are called Victory notes, as distinguished from bonds, was not and could not be a loan at a higher rate, because it was temporary only, and the holders of Liberty bonds in this country have never been permitted to surrender their 4¼ per cent bonds and to get 4¾ per cent bonds on the strength of the Victory loan.

Therefore it has seemed to me that in all honor we are bound to treat our foreign debtors the same as we treat our own people. It is probable, as the Senator says, that some of the higher rates are caused by reason of the expense to which we were put in floating the loans, and that expense ought to appear as a part of the debt; there is nothing unreasonable in that; but that was not stated in the law unless it be said that the words "not less" would mean that. I take that language, however, to have been put into the act for the purpose of meeting a condition that actually happened; that we would have to pay a higher rate for another subsequent loan than we were paying at the time we loaned our European debtors some of this money. We borrowed some of the money from our own people at 3½ per cent, some at 4 per cent, and some at 4¼ per cent; but we can not change that contract without the consent of the other parties to it. The fact that Great Britain has agreed to a different stipulation would make a new contract, it is true, but that would not bind France, that would not bind Cuba, that would not bind Liberia, nor Italy, nor any of the other Governments. So it has seemed to me that if we want to be perfectly square with our European allies we ought never to state in a law now that we were going to charge them 5 per cent for the money which we had loaned them. I think the rate ought to be 4¼ per cent, unless they agreed to a higher rate, and that we can not honorably ask them for any higher rate.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am not going to quarrel with the Senator about the point at which we shall fix the minimum rate of interest. I do, however, believe that we ought to fix it, because we promised the people of this country by our act of Congress, when we were asking them to subscribe to the Liberty bonds and were selling those bonds to them, that the foreign Governments should be required to pay in the form of interest not less than the highest rate which would be fixed on their bonds.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator would not contend that that language would entitle us to charge any rate we saw fit, would he?

Mr. SIMMONS. No; but we should keep our contract with the people, because the people have got to pay the taxes and to meet the interest upon the bonds. They bought the bonds, now they must pay the taxes in order to meet the interest upon them, and we should keep faith with the people in accordance with our promise to them that the foreign Governments should pay at least as high a rate of interest as they would get. We impliedly promised them that if there was any other burden that they had to assume in connection with the issuance and flotation of the Liberty bonds, which had to come out of the pockets of the taxpayers of the country, when we went to fix the rate of interest we might consider that element. Therefore the act stipulated not less than a certain rate of interest. However, I will not haggle about that. So far as I am concerned I would be entirely satisfied to fix the minimum rate at 4¼ per cent, but when we come to take the permanent evidences of this indebtedness I want to keep faith with the people, and I believe the people of this country will demand that those obligations be settled upon terms that will meet our promises and assurances given to them when our bonds were purchased.

Mr. NORRIS. I agree with the Senator from North Carolina as to that.

Mr. SIMMONS. Our taxpayers, as the Senator knows, rely very largely upon the interest received from the foreign Governments on this indebtedness to cut down the enormous taxes that they are now having to pay largely as the result of the creation of this monumental war indebtedness which now confronts and oppresses them.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. SIMMONS. I wish the Senator would let me finish just one thought which is in my mind, and then I will yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Very well.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, the rate of interest is a pertinent question in this controversy, because the Secretary of the Treasury, at least impliedly, if not expressly, advises us that he may desire to accomplish some scheme of finance that has found lodgment in his fertile mind to enlarge the rate of interest. If he has a scheme by which he proposes to fix a rate of interest of 6 or 7 per cent, he may have in his mind in the case of some other nation a scheme to fix a rate below 4¼ per cent. He says that he desires authority to enable him to investigate the condition of every one of these foreign nations; to probe into their financial and economic and industrial situation; to find out to what extent they are solvent or insolvent; to what extent, in his judgment, they ought to be made to act promptly in the discharge of their obligations; to what extent, in his judgment, they are not able to meet them to-day or to-morrow or if ever; and when he goes over to Europe making that searching inquiry under the authority of Congress, a body denied by the Constitution the right to inaugurate negotiations with foreign countries or to carry them on, either directly or indirectly—when he goes over there to do that he may be persuaded, in connection with some of the smaller nations which owe rather small sums compared with others—the Secretary's mind deals with large figures and large things—he may be so influenced by his sympathies that he may let them off with much less than a 4¼ per cent rate.

I do not say that it would not be an exercise of a humanitarian impulse to do it. It may be that at some future time we may find that the promptings of the American heart may say to us, "Remit this debt to Czechoslovakia; remit this debt to Poland; remit this debt, or a part of it, to Jugoslavia"; and we may assent to the suggestion; but that time has not come; that is not what we are dealing with now. "Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof." I am not willing, however, to give the Secretary that broad power; I would not embarrass and burden him to that extent; and, moreover, if we should undertake to give him that broad power for him to use in the way he says he will use it, we would probably render this bill obnoxious and subject to a very fundamental objection. In addition, I unhesitatingly assert that, even putting aside the question of constitutional authority, it would be improper and highly dishonorable for this Government to undertake to charge different rates of interest on loans to different nations, all made under and by virtue of the same acts of Congress, or to discriminate in that way against nations that may, because of particular circumstances and conditions, be more amenable to our demands than certain other nations.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield now?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBINSON in the chair). Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. SIMMONS. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I wish to call the Senator's attention to the fact that the money which foreign nations now owe to us was loaned to them under two acts of Congress, and that the interest rate was clearly fixed in those acts. The money was loaned with the statement that the rate of interest to be paid by our allies, or quasi allies, and other terms and conditions of the loan were to be exactly the same as those on which we borrowed it from our own people. If at this time we change those terms and stipulate a higher rate of interest, we violate the agreement and the contract made with those nations when we loaned the money. On the other hand, if we vary the contract and stipulate a lower rate of interest, then we violate our faith with our own people, from whom we borrowed the money. So, the conclusion seems to me to be inevitable that the only honest and the only straightforward thing for us to do is to charge by way of interest precisely what we told our own people at the time and exactly what we told the nations to whom we loaned the money we were going to charge. Any other arrangement will be dishonest to one side or to the other, and we ought not to enter into such an arrangement.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, that is the identical thought that I had and the idea that I was attempting to convey.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, that is the idea that I tried to convey; it is the idea I had in mind yesterday when I presented an amendment, which has since been printed and is now on the desks of the Senators, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert a provision instructing the Secretary of the Treasury to take the bonds of foreign Governments in accordance with the laws that were in force at the time we loaned the money. It seems to me that is all we ought to do.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is the only honest thing to do.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I will not pursue that subject any further.

I come now to the extension of the time of the payment of interest. That is the power which the Secretary above all things insists upon, and he is not willing to have it circumscribed in any way.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. I desire merely to make an observation with reference to the statement made by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR], and to what I am about to say I direct his attention and also the attention of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS]. The first Liberty loan act, approved April 24, 1917, recites:

> That for the purpose of more effectually providing for the national security * * * the Secretary of the Treasury, with the approval of the President, is hereby authorized, on behalf of the United States, to purchase, at par, from such foreign Governments then engaged in war with the enemies of the United States their obligations hereafter issued—> bearing the same rate of interest and containing in their essentials the same terms and conditions as those of the United States issued under authority of this act.

I call particular attention to the following language—

That was the provision of the first Liberty loan act.

Mr. McKELLAR. That was the provision of the first act, and the second act was substantially the same.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. No; the second act modified the first act. The second act was the act approved September 24, 1917, six months after the first act, and it provides:

> But the rate or rates of interest borne by any such obligations—

The foreign obligations issued to us—

> But the rate or rates of interest borne by any such obligations shall not be less than the highest rate borne by any bonds of the United States which, at the time of the acquisition thereof, shall have been issued under the authority of said act approved April 24, 1917, or of this act.

That is to say, the first act provided that the bonds that we were to receive from foreign debtor nations should bear the same rate of interest as that borne by the bonds which we issued in order to obtain the money to loan to them; but the second act modified that provision by stipulating that the foreign obligations which we may acquire shall not bear less than the highest rate of interest paid by us for the money.

Mr. McKELLAR. That would be all right as applied to the money loaned under that act, for that was the contract we made with them.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. If the Senator will allow me to proceed for a moment, that means literally that 4¼ per cent shall be the highest rate; but by reason of the fact that our bonds are tax exempt, by reason of the cost of making the loans throughout the country in order to obtain the money which we loaned to the foreign Governments, it may be calculated that 5 per cent is a reasonable rate. Now, suppose that in the course of 15 years from now we refund our bonds, and suppose that we can then borrow all the money we want at 3 per cent, where would we stand with reference to these acts if we had an inflexible rate of 5 per cent written in the bond and are bound to charge the debtor nations that rate for the money loaned to them? Are we not within not only the spirit, but the letter, of the acts if we charge them a fair rate of interest?

Mr. McKELLAR. Not at all; we must settle with them on the basis of the two contracts we made with them. That portion of the loans which was issued under the act of April 24, 1917, should be dealt with, so far as interest rates are concerned and in every other way, precisely in accordance with the terms of that act, because that was our contract.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. I understand——

Mr. McKELLAR. That was our contract, not only with our own people but with them. Then, when it comes to the additional money loaned under the second act, why, we should carry out the provisions of that act to the letter, because that was our contract.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I really do not desire to yield any further.

Mr. McKELLAR. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. I should like to follow this up for just a minute, if the Senator will permit me. I do not desire to break into the thread of the argument of the Senator, of course, or the trend of his discussion.

Mr. SIMMONS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. The Senator has made that observation, and I wanted to get from him his opinion as to how our course would be consistent if we wrote into this bill a fixed and inflexible rate of 5 per cent, and then afterwards renegotiated our own bonds at a lower rate.

Mr. SIMMONS. Let me ask the Senator a question. Is it the Senator's idea that in settling with Great Britain—a country that we all admit is able to pay its obligations—we should make a contract with it that left the rate of interest unfixed?

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. No; not at all. My idea is that we should follow out just what the negotiations called for originally, and provide for a rate of 5 per cent.

Mr. SIMMONS. Then, would the Senator write in the bond a provision that if the United States hereafter should be able to borrow money at less than 5 per cent, this rate shall be reduced to that point?

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. No; not at all.

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not understand the Senator, then.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. The object in having a commission is that they may adjust these differences and agree in the beginning upon the rate of interest, but that when the commission does agree with our debtors that the rate of interest at this time shall be 5 per cent the bonds shall be squarely on that basis, so denominated in the bond, or, if you please, written in the law, and that they are obligated to pay us that rate of interest because we are literally paying that rate of interest for the money we got from our people to loan to them, with the further understanding that as we do refund our bonds at a lower rate of interest they shall enjoy that same rate of interest.

Mr. SIMMONS. Now I get the Senator's idea. The Senator's idea is that we will settle with them upon the rate of interest that the highest Liberty bonds carry?

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. And that we shall agree with them that if at some time in the future the United States shall fund those Liberty bonds at a less rate, then we are to reduce the rate of those bonds?

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Precisely.

Mr. SIMMONS. And that possibly is one of the schemes that the Secretary of the Treasury has in mind when he wants unlimited power to fix the rate?

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. I think so.

Mr. SIMMONS. If the people of the United States are willing to enter into that sort of an arrangement, I myself should have no objection to it; but I will say to the Senator frankly that I do not believe that the people of the United States are willing to do that. I think that the people of the United States, who have already paid their money, and who for three or four years have been getting only 4 per cent on that money, want Great Britain and the other allies and countries of Europe to which we have furnished money to agree now to the rate of interest which they shall pay; not to agree to a flexible rate, one that to-morrow may be changed and made less than it is to-day. What would those bonds be worth to this Government if we wanted to use them for the purpose that I understood was agreed to, probably, by the White House and some of the President's advisers—that we are now proposing to take $4,000,000,000 of the bonds of Great Britain, as soon as they were negotiated, and turn them over to the public?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator at that point again?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to suggest to the Senator from North Carolina, and probably more especially to the Senator from Indiana, that there is nothing in the original statute which provides that we shall loan this money forever to these Governments.

Mr. McKELLAR. Not a thing, or that we shall make a change afterwards.

Mr. NORRIS. No. When the bond that they owe us is due, they must pay us the money or must come to us for a new contract, and we are under no obligation to pay any attention to any interest rate that has been in force in the past.

These bonds will mature as our bonds mature, and we will not change our bonds for bonds of a less rate of interest until they do mature, because the people who have them will not change them from a higher rate to a lower rate, and hence they will mature before any change can be made. When the bonds mature the contract is ended, and there is only one way to satisfy it, and that is to pay the money.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think what the Senator from Indiana has said is a valuable contribution to this discussion. I could not understand until now exactly the scheme that possibly was in the minds of the committee and possibly in the mind of the Secretary of the Treasury when this provision fixing the rate of interest was eliminated from the bill, which provision the committee had unanimously agreed upon and authorized to be reported to the Senate.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. No; Mr. President——

Mr. SIMMONS. It now develops—if the Senator will pardon me a minute——

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. It now develops that outside of and independently of the purposes that I have heretofore disclosed as probably existing in the mind of the Secretary there is a definite purpose, tentatively formed and agreed to, that whatever rate of interest may be fixed in these bonds shall be made subject to revision in the future and to reduction in the future. I think the people of this country will be very interested to know, before this bill becomes a law, that it is not the purpose of the Secretary to demand of any Government, however able, the payment of the rate of interest that this Government promised the people would be exacted in their bonds, but that he only fixes that rate tentatively, subject to the condition that it may be in the future materially reduced.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. SIMMONS. I yield.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. The Senator is ascribing to the Secretary of the Treasury views that I have expressed. If he has such views, I am not aware of the fact. I never have discussed that matter with him.

Mr. SIMMONS. Has the Senator such views?

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Yes; I have those views.

Mr. SIMMONS. Have the majority members of the committee such views?

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. I never have heard another member of the committee express those views. Those are my individual views as to the situation. Those are my individual views as to why we should have a commission to adjust, settle, and determine this question of foreign indebtedness in order that we may keep not only the letter but the spirit of the law under which our bonds are issued, and under which we loaned money to the associated powers in the war. Those are my views.

Now the Senator asks, "What would a bond of that kind be worth?" There could not be any better bond in the world than an English bond guaranteed by the American Government carrying 5 per cent interest for any fixed number of years.

Mr. SIMMONS. No; but suppose it contained a provision that the Government——

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. No, no; the bond is not to contain any such provision, in my thought.

Mr. SIMMONS. But suppose the Government of the United States has entered into an agreement with the Government of Great Britain that the rate of interest carried by that identical bond which I buy in the market to-day, supposing that it is a 5 per cent bond, may, in the discretion of the Government of this country, hereafter be reduced to 3 per cent?

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. But in the negotiations between Great Britain and the United States, for instance, we would have determined by our commission and their representatives the length of time that these bonds should run and in which they could probably make payment. That is the reason why we can not by law fix with unyielding rigidity all the terms.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator has written into his bill that these bonds shall run until 1947.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Certainly; but suppose they run beyond 1947?

Mr. SIMMONS. Then a new contract will be necessary.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Suppose, let me ask, we limit them to 1947?

Mr. SIMMONS. But does the Senator suppose that in 1947, when these bonds are due and Great Britain and these other Governments are ready to pay them, there is going to be any necessity for the execution of bonds to be taken by the United States for a lower rate of interest?

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. No. I can not say about 1947. I am not a prophet and can not project myself into the future that far; but what I am trying to get at is that the necessity of having a commission to adjust and settle this whole question is to enable us to carry out the very provisions we wrote in the law, so denominated in the terms of the statute. That is all I want, and that is all we have attempted to do in this bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am perfectly willing to give the commission all the power that it ought to have. I want to see these debts settled. I will cooperate with the Senator in any arrangement that will facilitate the settlement of these debts; but I do not want, and I do not think the people of the United States want, to have Congress grant to the Secretary of the Treasury unlimited power with reference to this matter of rate and the forgiving of the interest or its extension. In view of the fact that this indebtedness to us from foreign nations will mature and become due in its principal under the bill at the date, approximately, of the maturity of our domestic bond issues, whose rate of interest is to govern the rate we are to charge on these foreign loans, I see no necessity to lodge anywhere in the executive department of the Government the dangerous and far-reaching power to reduce the rate of interest on these foreign loans. We shall not, and can not, change or reduce the rate of interest we pay on our United States bonds before they mature. Why grant to any official, then, the power to reduce the rate we charge on these foreign loans during the same period? As the Senator from Nebraska says, when our loans to these debtor nations mature they must pay us the money or make the best contract they can with us for a renewal.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I can not further take up the Senator's time now. He has been very kind to me in the matter of yielding; but later on I shall express my own views with reference to this question.

Mr. SIMMONS. I shall be very glad to hear the views of the Senator, and I hope and believe that he and I desire to accomplish the same purpose; but I am afraid that he wants to trust the Secretary of the Treasury with discretion to which I can not agree. I have not changed my views about this bill. The majority has changed its views three times with respect to it.

It has pursued the same wiggling and wabbling policy with reference to this matter that it has pursued with reference to every big question that has been before Congress since it came into power. At first the members of the majority positively refused to impose any limitation upon the power of the Secretary of the Treasury. Then they agreed to limit his powers as far as the minority members insisted upon it. Then they turned about and struck out of the bill which they had agreed to, and which had been authorized by unanimous vote of the committee to be reported here, the very essential provisions limiting the powers of the Secretary.

The trouble with this administration is illustrated in this bill. It has no fixed and definite policy by which it is willing to stand for much more than 24 hours. You have turned about-face three times already with reference to this matter. What I should like would be to see this administration demonstrate, if it can, the "constructive ability" which the Republican Party has so proudly boasted of in past years. It is a matter of humiliation to me as an American citizen to see the administration in control of the great affairs of this Government unable to reach a definite conclusion as to any matter of great importance that is not subject to change the next day. So far as I am concerned, with reference to this matter I stand here to-day right where I stood when the measure was introduced by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Penrose] seven long months ago. I have not changed my position about it at all. I said then that it would be dangerous to confer upon the Secretary of the Treasury unlimited powers as to rates and as to interest, and I adhere to that to-day.

Now, Mr. President, let me get on.

The Secretary of the Treasury came before us with regard to this extension of the rate of interest. He was subjected to very rigid cross-examination by Senators on the committee as to why he desired this great power. He said that he desired it because he felt that many of the nations that were indebted to us, if not all of them, possibly with the exception of France and Great Britain, would want a reduction in the interest; that they would not be able to pay the interest if we required in the bill that it should be paid semiannually; that we knew it would not be paid; that they knew that they could not pay it; that they would refuse to sign the obligation to pay it; and that he would have his hands tied and be unable to negotiate an agreement that would be to the best advantage of the people of the United States. For that reason, because he claimed he would be weakened in his ability to bring about adjustments in the interest of the people of the United States, he desired the bill to be passed in this form. Mr. President, as was urged in the committee, so I urge here that, on the contrary, if the Secretary of the Treasury has his powers circumscribed as provided in this bill, instead of his being weakened in his position as a negotiator in the settlement of these claims with our debtors he will be strengthened.

Why will he be strengthened, Mr. President? If he goes over there with unlimited power, do you not suppose that every Government in Europe that owes us a dollar will at once say: "We have only one man to deal with. It is only necessary that we shall induce him to be liberal and to make broad concessions," and all the power and all the ingenuity so characteristic of European diplomacy and financiers will be brought to bear upon the members of this commission in order to induce them to give the most liberal extension of the time of payment and the most liberal rate of interest?

Will they prevail? We know how weak is human nature. We know how weak, sometimes, are these commissions that we have to create. We know how easily these commissions fall under the spell and the influence of great, powerful interests in this country. You have heard the arguments here in this body to-day that a great commission that we appointed to administer the farm loan bank law is not discharging its duties to the farmers of this country, because it has fallen under the influence of competitive financiers. You have heard the charge made here and in the press of this country and by the farmers from one end of this country to the other that the great Federal reserve bank system, which was to be made up of strong men of iron, has been brought under the influence of what is termed "Wall Street," and that this great system, devised in the interest of the people, is now being administered in the interest of a few great financial institutions of this country. In Europe, I undertake to say, influences just as powerful as those will be brought to bear upon the Secretary.

Mr. President, suppose we require the Secretary to submit his action to Congress for its approval. Suppose we deny him the unlimited power to extend the interest, and thereby, as proposed by the amendment which I have offered, permit him to go on and make a settlement with those nations that are ready to agree to the 5 per cent and to pay the interest, and that settlement becomes final and operates as conclusive against the United States; but if he can not do it, if he has to make concessions, we provide that he can go on and make the concessions, formulate the contract and the agreement, take the bond, if he wants to, but that his action in that particular shall be subject to the consent and approval of Congress.

Now, suppose you limit him in that way, either by requiring him to report back his action to Congress for its approval or by requiring that he shall, in case he can not secure an agreement to pay the interest semiannually, report back his agreement to Congress for its ratification. In either instance, if you do that, do you not strengthen him? Would not that be notice to the Governments of Europe that any agreement they make with the Secretary postponing the payment of the interest shall be and will be subject to congressional approval, and would they then be so anxious to get him to enter into an unconscionable or improper agreement? Would not that protect him against those influences, and would he not in that way bring about among the Governments of Europe an atmosphere leading to a liberal and equitable adjustment of these matters, one which, in my judgment, would be so fair that it would be likely to receive the sanction of the Congress?

That is my amendment. It provides that this legislation shall not be construed to give the Secretary such unlimited powers without the approval and consent of Congress; in other words, without the consent of Congress he shall not fix the rate at less than 5 per cent, payable semiannually. If he can not get that arrangement and has to make some other, then it must be subject to the approval of the Congress.

I wish to suggest to the Senator from North Dakota in charge of the bill that I think that would be a very happy solution of the difficulty we are now confronting. I think that would remove to a very large extent the opposition which exists to his bill and would not weaken the position of the Secretary, but, on the contrary, would strengthen him.

Mr. President, I ask permission to incorporate in my remarks without reading the amendment to which I have just referred.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, permission is granted.

The amendment referred to is as follows:

Amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. SIMMONS to the bill (H. R. 8762) to create a commission authorized under certain conditions to refund or convert obligations of foreign Governments owing to the United States of America, and for other purposes, viz:

On page 2, line 24, strike out the period and insert a comma and add "or without the consent and approval of the Congress fix the rate of interest at less than 5 per cent per annum, payable semiannually."

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, having labored in vain with the Secretary and being unable to induce him to yield in his insistence that he should be given the unlimited power to extend the time of the payment of interest, not only that which has already accumulated but that which might accumulate within the two, three, or five years in which he said he might further have to extend the interest, we asked him what sort of an arrangement he would make to accomplish that purpose without forgiving the interest. The Secretary disclosed two schemes by which he said the arrangement could be put in operation and made to apply both as to the billion dollars of interest already accumulated and the other billion dollars that would accumulate, according to his view, before some of these Governments would become able to pay anything.

The first of those schemes was this: He said we might consolidate the interest with the principal, and we might charge in that consolidated arrangement interest upon the interest, but when the total interest was ascertained it should be added to the principal and become a part of the principal, subject to interest payment after a certain date. I am not going to quarrel with that proposition. If we are going along that way I think it might be as good a method as any.

But the second method suggested by the Secretary, and the one that evidently had lodgment in his mind as a proper method of accomplishing his purpose, was not to consolidate the interest with the principal, but to take bonds from the different Governments for the principal sum and to adjust or increase the interest rate high enough to cover the amount of interest that would be due at the time the extension of interest payment terminated; that is, let the interest which has accumulated and the interest which may hereafter accumulate, where extended, be absorbed by the rate of interest. That would necessitate, I think the Secretary mentioned, 6 or 7 per cent, 6 per cent upon bonds in the case of such Governments as would probably be able to begin payment of the interest now and thus only have to provide for the accumulated interest, and probably 7 per cent in the case of those Governments which would have to have further extension of interest.

Mr. President, I say that is a sinister suggestion, not that I mean to convey the idea that the Secretary of the Treasury had any sinister motive in his mind, but as affecting the interests of the American people it is a sinister suggestion. Why do I say that? If the bonds taken to-day are paid off to-morrow under that scheme what would be the result? The Secretary said that he did not contemplate denying the debtor the right to pay before the final date of maturity, and he said he would provide for optional payments.

These are always or almost always provided for, and the impression he made upon my mind was that he would probably, in fixing the date of maturity, provide an optional time of payment just as we did in the case of certain Liberty bonds. If that option was provided and the debt was extinguished at the time of the option, is it not clear that the people of the United States would lose all the interest that would otherwise arise out of the accumulated payment of that debt?

But that is not the chief danger. If the Government of the United States should take bonds with the past due and accumulated interest covered into the new rate of interest, and then this Government should for any purpose whatsoever place those bonds upon the market and sell them, while the high rate of interest, of course, as the Secretary said, would give them an easy marketable value and a ready sale, yet is it not apparent that if that shall be done and to the extent that that may happen the people of the United States will lose the interest?

For instance, we take $4,000,000,000 of bonds from Great Britain. To-morrow, following out the scheme which was hatched at the White House some time ago, given to the Associated Press and announced to the country, we sell upon the market those bonds covering only the principal and accumulated interest covered in the high rate of interest. If those bonds shall be issued and sold according to that White House scheme, of which I know and of which the Senator from North Dakota admitted yesterday there had been some discussion, and which the Secretary of the Treasury in his statement before the committee said had been discussed, then the United States would get the principal of its English debt of $4,500,000,000 and the great international bankers, who manipulate this sort of transaction, would get the half billion dollars or more of accumulated interest that Great Britain owes to this Government.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. SIMMONS. I wish the Senator would let me finish this thought and then I shall be glad to yield to him.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Very well.

Mr. SIMMONS. I wish to say that the Secretary of the Treasury in his testimony admitted, when he was asked the direct question, that this scheme of adjusting the past-due interest was not only attractive to him, was not only regarded by him as a good business transaction, but he further admitted that it had been discussed at the White House and in a Cabinet meeting, and that the President of the United States had given it his approval, or, rather, he said the President of the United States strongly recommended and approved it. I am told, though I did not see the newspaper articles referring to it, that the President of the United States, in a public address delivered in the city of New York, commented upon and strongly approved this plan.

Now, Mr. President, considering the fact that the Secretary of the Treasury leans to it, the fact that the head of the Government, the President, has commended it, the fact that it has been the subject of favorable comment and discussion in the Cabinet, coupled together with all the other facts that the administration is considering or has been considering—I do not know whether they have abandoned it or not—the scheme of providing for the soldiers' adjusted compensation by the sale of $4,000,000,000 of English bonds, possibly arranged for upon this basis, is it not natural that we should hesitate before giving unlimited authority to a commission headed by the Secretary of the Treasury and appointed by the President who tell us that they have that sort of scheme in mind?

Suppose we carried out such a scheme; suppose we take the English bonds for the principal and sell them in the markets of the country to-morrow at par or three or four points above par, is it not apparent what its effect would be upon the toiling masses of the country who are interested in this interest being paid, its effect upon their taxes and its effect upon the payment of interest upon the Liberty bonds which they have so patriotically taken?

Its effect must be apparent, because the result would be that the entire interest upon those $4,000,000,000 of bonds accumulated since the last interest payment by Great Britain, amounting now to a little over half a billion dollars, would be lost and lost forever to the people and that it would be safely lodged in the pockets of speculators in international bonds.

Oh, Mr. President, was there ever a scheme conceived by man that presented a more alluring and attractive opportunity to that class of speculators ordinarily designated by the term "international bankers"? Whence did the thought come? Did it come from international bankers? It is worthy of them and of the ingenuity and initiative and resourcefulness which they have ever displayed. I do not know whether it came from them or not, but I do know that it would offer them the finest opportunity ever afforded to greed.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, I can answer his question.

Mr. SIMMONS. I certainly will allow the Senator to do so. I did not yield a moment ago because I did not want the Senator to break my line of thought.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I hope I have not done so.

Mr. SIMMONS. Oh, no; I am glad to yield to the Senator.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. In answer to the very important question which the Senator just asked, I would call his attention to a copyrighted article sent from London to the New York World and published in the New York World on Saturday, May 28, 1921, in which it was said:

From an extremely important and influential American financial source in London, the identity of which can not be disclosed, the World was to-day given a summary of the Anglo-American debt situation from a standpoint which, up to the present time, has not been publicly presented by a responsible American business or banking magnate.

From the standpoint of this very refunding proposition which is now pending before the Senate and which the Senator from North Carolina said was recently passed on at the White House, that was the first announcement of the plan that I saw definitely made. It is a copyrighted cablegram from London, and the reference there would seem to apply to a member of the international banking firm of J. P. Morgan & Co.

Mr. SIMMONS. I wish to say to the Senator that I have no doubt, having heard the Secretary of the Treasury, that that is the scheme of settlement he is now disposed to make, if this authority is given him, and that is one of the chief reasons why he wants to have unlimited authority.

Mr. President, I desire to incorporate in the RECORD at this point, without reading, a portion of the hearings of June 29, 1921, on page 23, beginning with an interrogatory by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], including an article written by Robert B. Armstrong, which was placed in the record of the hearings on that day.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I wish the Senator from North Carolina would state the pamphlet to which he has reference.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am referring to the report of the hearings which took place on June 29, 1921, on page 23.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Before the Committee on Finance?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes; before the Committee on Finance.

I desire also to insert, following the reading of the article, a colloquy between Mr. Mellon and Senator REED and ending at a point I shall mark in the report which I shall hand to the reporter. The whole scheme is there discussed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, leave will be granted. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Senator REED. I understand you to say, Mr. Secretary, that there has been no general plan discussed for the handling of this business which is referred to in the bill. Now, I want to read you a statement here and see whether there is any truth in it or not. I am reading from a newspaper clipping of June 17. It is an article by Robert B. Armstrong.

(The article referred to is here printed in full, as follows:)

NEW BONDS TO PUBLIC LIKELY—ADMINISTRATION MAY FUND ALL FOREIGN DEBTS—NATION MAY OR MAY NOT GIVE ITS GUARANTY—TREASURY DEPARTMENT NOW HAS NO POWERS.

WASHINGTON, June 17.

"In announcing the decision of the Cabinet to request from Congress legislation to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to fund and otherwise secure the obligations of foreign nations to the United States for moneys and supplies advanced, President Harding to-day confirmed the outline of several days ago of the manner in which the foreign loans were to be handled.

"The discussion of the proposed plan took up the greater part of the Cabinet meeting and, while the administration has worked out in considerable detail what it desires to do in connection with the ten billion or more in loans, it must have the cooperation of both the Senate and the House to make the plan possible.

"Briefly stated, the plan is to have all the foreign Governments which now owe the United States money for supplies place the obligations in the form of long-term bonds, these bonds to become the property of the United States Government, to be held by it or later offered to the investors of the United States in such amounts and at such times as it sees fit. The legislation asked will permit the Secretary of the Treasury to guarantee the principal and interest if, in his judgment, such course is desirable.

INTEREST OVERDUE.

"All of the loans now due the United States carry with them a lot of overdue and accrued interest which, under the plan contemplated, will be included in the bond issue proposed to represent these loans.

"The tentative plan contemplates that all of the accrued and overdue interest is to be either included in the amount of the bond issue to be pledged by the Governments which owe the large sums to the United States or that this interest be extinguished by increasing the rate on the long-time securities enough to absorb all the back interest and at the same time make the securities bear a higher rate of interest and become, therefore, desirable for the investors of the United States.

"If this is done, it is probable that the United States will not guarantee the bonds, but sell them on the interest rate and the security of the Government issuing them.

HAS NO AUTHORITY.

"As it is now the Secretary of the Treasury has no authority to whip these loans into good bankable shape, and has neither the specific nor implied authority to permit any obligations to remain unpaid either in principal or interest. If Congress will clothe the Secretary of the Treasury with broad powers under general limitations to fund all these loans, and also authorize him to refund them from time to time, if need be, the plan can be worked out in such a way as to stabilize conditions both here and abroad, and such action probably will correct to a great extent the wide fluctuations in foreign exchange which has been unsettled ever since the war began.

"Such an operation as contemplated in making this Government and the investors of the United States holders of long-time securities of the leading powers of the world will permanently intrench the United States as the creditor nation of the world."

I have read you the whole article, and I want to ask you if there is any truth in that statement?

Secretary MELLON. There was nothing so far as concerns any suggestion or anything originating with any foreign Government. There has nothing of that sort been suggested. There has been a great many suggestions generally by the press and by people of different methods of treating the indebtedness and of taking care of this accumulated interest, etc. There was a suggestion made and that was one which the President thought was a good one. It has not any significance so far as any particular government is concerned or so far as this refunding is concerned, excepting that it seemed a good business proposition. That suggestion was this: Here we had certain accumulated interest that it may be necessary or desirable to extend or defer the payment of. The thought there was this: That if, instead of adding that interest to the principal it was added to the rate of interest during the whole life of the bonds to be accepted, the refunding bonds, it would give those bonds a larger rate of interest than they otherwise would have. For instance, if we were going to accept refunding bonds at 5 per cent, that we add this accumulating interest into an additional rate of interest, and say, for example, that that made that rate of interest 6 per cent. That, then, would make the bonds more marketable. They would be bearing a higher rate of interest, and the benefit would come in the future from the fact that they bore a higher rate of interest and would be more marketable than they might be if they were at a lower rate of interest. That was merely an incidental suggestion.

Senator REED. You say you think that would be good business?

Secretary MELLON. It should be considered.

Senator REED. Let us put that in plain language. European Governments owe the United States in principal $10,000,000,000 and in interest $1,000,000,000. The proposition is to have them issue their bonds not for $11,000,000,000 bearing a rate of interest, but to have them issue their bonds for $10,000,000,000 bearing a higher rate of interest, the $1,000,000,000 to be devoted to the raising or increasing of that higher rate of interest. Thereupon these bonds will be sold to investors. In that event Uncle Sam loses the $1,000,000,000 of interest, does he not, that has already accumulated?

Secretary MELLON. If he does not sell the bonds, he gets the same money that otherwise would be gotten. Now, the matter of selling the bonds is a matter of judgment of Congress when the time comes.

Senator REED. But it will not be a matter of judgment of Congress under this bill; it will be a matter of judgment of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Secretary MELLON. No; this bill does not give authority to sell these bonds that are received, and if it did give that authority——

Senator REED. Under that arrangement——

Senator DILLINGHAM. May the witness complete his answer?

Secretary MELLON. I was going to say that there are no conditions now wherein anything of that sort could be accomplished. There is not any kind of a market.

Senator REED. Under that arrangement if Great Britain owes us four and a half billion dollars in principal, and she owes us $700,000,000 in interest, she would issue her bonds to us for four and a half billion dollars, not for $5,200,000,000. These bonds would have a high rate of interest. Thereupon Great Britain could immediately cancel the whole obligation by paying us the principal and thus escape the interest, could she not? That is just what an Englishman would do, is it not? He is a pretty smart fellow.

Secretary MELLON. I do not think he would do so under present conditions. But that is merely one of a great many suggestions, and the President thought it was a good one and talked of it. There may be circumstances where it would be desirable to make that kind of an adjustment.

Senator REED. In these discussions with the President was the question of the substitution of the obligations of other Governments for the present obligations discussed?

Secretary MELLON. I did not understand that question.

Senator REED. You say the President did discuss this one plan which we have just been over?

Secretary MELLON. That was his talk with the newspaper people.

Senator REED. Did you never discuss this question with the President?

Secretary MELLON. The letter that is with the committee was my letter to the President explaining the situation to him.

Senator REED. What I am trying to get at is whether the Cabinet or the President discussed the question of the substitution of the obligations of one government for the indebtedness of another.

Secretary MELLON. There has been no situation to discuss. There may have been just a general discussion of all these suggestions.

Senator REED. I am not asking you, Mr. Secretary, whether you discussed the proposition as to whether you would do a particular thing with Germany or a particular thing with England, but whether you discussed the proposition of the transfer of this indebtedness from one Government to the other by an exchange of obligations.

Secretary MELLON. The treatment of these loans or anything in the direction that you speak of was not a subject of discussion with the President or the Cabinet, excepting as relates to this act—that is, this question of requesting of Congress the authority to deal with it. That was discussed, and, of course, these other questions and suggestions that have been made came in, as always such questions do when there is a subject under discussion.

Senator WALSH. The authority sought in this bill, Mr. Secretary, is subject to the approval of the President?

Secretary MELLON. Yes.

Senator WALSH. Is there any reason you can state why it should not also be subject to the approval of the Senate the same as all foreign treaties and contracts are? I want to get your views on that.

Secretary MELLON. It would not be practicable. You could not come to a conclusion with the Government. If it had to come to Congress it would not be a practical method of settling these claims. I do not see how it could be done. It would take years to do it if it were done in that way.

Senator REED. We might have under some Secretaries of the Treasury two or three more billion dollars shoveled out—not under this one, I am very sure, and I would not reflect on Mr. Mellon for the world—but this is a matter that runs to the Secretary of the Treasury without any limiting clause.

Senator SIMMONS. I want to ask you one question with some matters propounded by Senator REED. In refunding under the plan that the Senator was inquiring about, in which you incorporate the interest with principal at the time when the bonds were issued and charge a higher rate of interest, I do not know whether I understood you to mean that you would incorporate the interest already accrued or would remit that interest.

Secretay MELLON. You do not understand the situation. There is no policy and there has been no policy adopted. That was only a suggestion that that would be a practicable way of putting these bonds into marketable shape.

Senator SIMMONS. Which was it? That you would include the accrued interest in the bonds as a part of the principal or that you would remit accrued interest?

Secretary MELLON. Oh, no. I have not even heard the suggestion that we would remit the interest. Remitting would mean canceling it.

Senator SIMMONS. I understand that, of course; that is the meaning of the word, and I thought that was the way you understood it, Senator REED.

Senator WATSON. That is the way Senator REED put it.

Senator REED. Oh, no; I did not—thereby include the one billion in the interest, and that then it would immediately take up its obligations then at the face and thus escape the accrued interest.

Senator SIMMONS. I did not understand it that way. Suppose that is true and that you do issue the bonds in that way. Will not that bond be due at a specified time, and could that bond be paid at the option of the debtor Government if the creditor Government was not willing to accept the payment at that time?

Secretary MELLON. It would depend upon the terms that you agreed upon in the bonds.

Senator SIMMONS. If you did that, would you enter into an agreement with the debtor nation that they might liquidate that at any time? If you did, the result that the Senator described would follow.

Secretary MELLON. That is a speculative situation.

Senator SIMMONS. The reason I asked that, Mr. Secretary, is this: I have understood that a long-term bond could carry a better rate of interest than a short-term bond; that it was because it was regarded as a more desirable thing. But a long-term bond would amount to nothing if the debtor had the option to liquidate it at any time he pleased.

Secretary MELLON. It is customary in these long-term bonds to make them optionable at certain times. The Liberty loan bond issues have certain options in them, and that has been customary. But as to these obligations, we have not come to that; we do not know what those particular Governments will ask us to do, and when they do ask us we are not obliged to do other than what might seem to the best interests of our Government.

The CHAIRMAN. As I understand it, Mr. Secretary, each Government will have to be treated separately and as a distinct proposition?

Secretary MELLON. Yes; the obligations are entirely separate, and we expect to take up one after another.

Senator REED. Can you tell me the amount of interest that England is now involved, or can Mr. WADSWORTH tell me the amount of obligations Great Britain now owes us?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I will do that in a moment.

Senator JONES. Recurring to the question of the substitution of obligations, would the situation or not be this, approximately: That the present debtor nations would not be particularly anxious to substitute obligations of another Government if the debtor nation had to guarantee the obligation of the other Government. But in the present contingency, when this money is due the United States, would it not be advisable from a business standpoint for this Government to accept obligations of other governments provided those obligations were guaranteed by the present debtor nation?

Secretary MELLON. Yes.

Senator JONES. Is not that about the situation?

Secretary MELLON. Yes.

Senator JONES. And assuming that they were German obligations, we would not be releasing——

Secretary MELLON (interposing). We would be adding.

Senator JONES. We would be adding to the security of our Government and getting payments which Germany might make on those obligations paid direct to the United States rather than through France, England, or Italy to the United States, when those Governments might see fit to make the payment?

Secretary MELLON. Yes.

Senator JONES. And then would there be any objection, Mr. Secretary, to our amending the bill by providing that in the event of such substitution that the present debtor nations should guarantee the obligation?

Secretary MELLON. I do not think so. I do not think that this authority should be limited, because you can not foresee what may arise. For instance, as I said before, there may be a country which in itself is not only in bad shape economically and financially, but that there is not any prospect of developing and rehabilitating; and suppose that that Government may have some securities which it might be able to release, it might be desirable to take that security and release the Government. I can imagine where that contingency might arise. I think it is not likely to happen; I do not know of any instance where there is any prospect of it happening, but there might be a case where a particular Government that might be in that unfavorable condition that they would have something where they would say, "If you will release us we will turn this over," and we might not be able to get that security without releasing. I can understand and you can understand, as a business proposition, that there could be such a contingency where it would be desirable to make that change. I do not think it is likely to happen.

But, so far as limiting this authority is concerned, why limit it? If we are going to go wrong in judgment and not do the right thing, it is not likely to be on some particular point that you would limit us; we would go wrong on something more important than that.

And so I think that if you are giving authority that the authority ought to be complete.

Senator JONES. Mr. Secretary, do you not believe that in the present state of the public mind that it would be of advantage to the administration to have some such limitation as that in this law, because it has been circulated throughout the country that there is a movement on foot to have this country take the obligations of Germany and release our present debtors, and if the contingency of accepting other securities free from any obligation of our debtors is remote, do you not think that it would have at least a good psychological effect to put a limitation in this bill to that effect?

Secretary MELLON. I think it is very much better to take that which is the logical and sound action, to give this authority where this authority can be used to the advantage of the Government and the people, and then any untoward psychological condition in the public mind will soon disappear.

Senator WILLIAMS. Or will not exist?

Secretary MELLON. Yes.

Senator REED. England owes us, I am informed by Mr. Wadsworth, in defaulted interest $407,303,000. What is the reason England can not pay us that interest to-day when she can expend $700,000,000 enlarging her navy?

Secretary MELLON. I do not know about her expending $700,000,000 enlarging her navy, but you can understand that it may be much easier to expend money at home where it does not require gold, where it does not require a rate of exchange that every dollar paid costs $1.60, or whatever it is—it is an entirely different proposition, because in the one case she has to pay in actual gold, in the other case it is merely a transaction between her own citizens. She buys something from domestic sources.

Senator REED. But the English gold sovereign is at par and exchange, less a small carriage and insurance rate, is it not?

Secretary MELLON. What is that?

Senator REED. The English gold sovereign is not suffering from the rate of exchange, is it, except that there is always a little rate of exchange?

Secretary MELLON. The gold sovereign is a gold sovereign, but if they do not have those gold sovereigns, then they must go out and buy exchange to make the equivalent of the gold sovereigns.

Senator REED. I understand that; that is to say, if they have inflated and depreciated currency, they must make that up. But if England was paying us in gold, she would not have to pay $1.60 in exchange, would she?

Secretary MELLON. But, to answer your question, she does not require gold sovereigns to pay for battleships at home.

Senator REED. But if she would give us $407,303,000 in gold, do you think she would be any worse off than if she expended at home $765,000,000 on her navy?

Secretary MELLON. You can answer those questions in many ways. It might be much better if, because of giving us that gold, which she could not do practically—could not ship us the gold, but she would go out and buy exchange, and the very fact of her buying that exchange and putting up the rate of exchange she to that extent protects her own trade, because it makes it harder for her people to buy in this country; the higher the exchange the more difficult it is for them to buy goods from us. So it is conceivable that by paying us that money she would do very much better and benefit herself rather than using the money at home.

You can answer those questions in many ways.

Senator REED. You do not mean to say—and I drop the question with this merely explanatory suggestion—that England could not pay us in gold if she had the gold? Now, has she not got the gold?

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I do not know that I wish further to discuss this bill, except as to one aspect. I said a little while ago that I somewhat doubted the constitutionality of the proposed act in the form in which it now appears. I do not now intend to enter into a discussion of that question, except in a most general way. I think very likely the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] will discuss that phase of the matter later, but my contention is that under the Constitution the Congress has no power, directly or indirectly, through a commission or otherwise, to enter into any contract or to authorize anybody else to enter into a contract with foreign governments. I do not think the Liberty bond acts in any way violated that principle, for they could be predicated on the war powers of the Government. There is, however, no question of war powers now. We are dealing with this question in normal times.

The Constitution of the United States expressly denies to Congress the power to negotiate with foreign governments. It confers that power exclusively upon the executive department. Neither House of Congress has any voice until the President presents the question to the Senate in the form of a treaty.

Does this bill authorize negotiations? Mr. President, it authorizes the same sort of negotiations that the executive department under the Wilson administration, through regular channels, had inaugurated with Great Britain and possibly with other governments looking to the settlement of these foreign debts. The Secretary of the Treasury at that time appointed an Assistant Secretary of the Treasury as the representative of the executive department to go to Europe and to take up with our debtors there the question of negotiating a settlement of those obligations. He went first to Great Britain, and there, Mr. President, Assistant Secretary Rathbone, representing this Government, entered into negotiations with Mr. Brackett, the direct and accredited representative of the British premier, Lloyd-George.

I have here a volume which is full of communications between Mr. Rathbone, representing the executive department of the Government, and Mr. Brackett, representing the British Government, with reference to the adjustment of these claims. The negotiations assumed a broad scope. Agreement had been reached between these two representatives of the executive departments of the two Governments as to the rate of interest; and the negotiations were proceeding upon other lines when Lloyd-George interrupted, and in a letter advised Mr. Rathbone that the negotiations had reached a point of delicacy and involvement where reluctantly he had to bring them to a conclusion and announce that he could not agree to any arrangement for the adjustment of America's claims until the whole scope of interallied indebtedness could be taken up and considered. It is into that sort of negotiation that we are proposing to authorize a commission to enter. That commission will represent whom? The executive branch? No; it will represent the legislative branch in negotiations with foreign Governments.

Mr. President, let me read from a letter of Mr. Rathbone and from some observations made in the views of the minority of the Committee on Finance on the refunding bill, to which I have heretofore referred. This is what the minority of the committee say:

> Furthermore, the official documents which have passed between the United States and the debtor nations, the most important of which have not yet been made public, demonstrate that the negotiations contemplated by this act are not concerned merely with technical financial adjustments, but involve questions of foreign relations of such delicacy that in the words of Austen Chamberlain, chancellor of the exchequer of Great Britain, they raise "questions of great importance unsuited"—

"Unsuited," Mr. President—

> "for departmental treatment between our two treasuries"—

Unsuited for "departmental treatment," but suited for diplomatic treatment. He does not say that, but manifestly that is what is meant.

> Negotiations between Great Britain and the United States were accordingly taken completely out of the hands of the Treasury officials of the two nations—

It was held to be a matter for diplomacy, and was taken out of the hands of the Treasury Department, though it represented the Executive, as being too delicate to justify being left in any less experienced and expert hands than the diplomatic representatives of the two nations—and were made the subject of direct communications—

They were made the subject of direct communications—between Premier Lloyd-George and President Wilson. In the letter of the British prime minister to the President of the United States, dated August 5, 1920, an extract from which has been printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, the British premier proposes the cancellation of the entire indebtedness. It is true that President Wilson rejected this proposal for cancellation, but this does not offset the fact that the British prime minister has served formal notice that his Government would press for the reduction or cancellation of interallied indebtedness. The Senate has only a portion of this letter, and can only infer the considerations which may have been presented in the omitted sections. Nevertheless, in the portion which has been printed, the British premier makes this unequivocal statement:

"When the British Government decided that it could not deal with the question of the debts owed to it by its allies except as part and parcel of an all-around arrangement of interallied debts, the chancellor of the exchequer told Mr. Rathbone"—

The representative of the Treasury Department—

"that he could not proceed any further with the negotiations which they had been conducting together with regard to the postponement of the payment of interest on the funding of Great Britain's debts to America. I should like to make it plain that this is due to no reluctance on the part of Great Britain to fund its debt, but solely to the fact that it can not bind itself by any arrangement which would prejudice the working of any interallied arrangement which may be reached in the future. If some method can be found for funding the British debt which does not prejudice the larger question, the British Government would be glad to fall in with it."

Mr. President, can there be any question that negotiations such as Mr. Rathbone was conducting, and such as would be necessary to be carried on in order to bring this settlement to a consummation, particularly if the Secretary of the Treasury and the commission should undertake to open up such negotiations and extend them to the broader field to which he in his evidence said he would necessarily have to extend them—to inquiring into and investigating the economic, financial, and industrial situations of every nation in Europe and entering into an agreement with them adjusted and suited to such facts as he might find—would be such negotiations with a foreign nation by a commission created by Congress, representing Congress, speaking only for the Congress, as is prohibited by the Constitution of the United States, and would therefore be a usurpation of the powers of the executive?

I do not care to elaborate the idea, though I wash to suggest it. I do so in the utmost good faith. I do not know whether it has occurred to Senators on the other side or whether or not they think it is worthy of consideration. I do not claim to be a great constitutional lawyer, though I practiced law for 25 years, and enjoyed a very large practice in all the courts of my State. I have given some study, nevertheless, to the powers and functions under the Constitution of the various departments of our Government; and to my mind the kind of negotiation which we are proposing to authorize here to be conducted by a commission is unconstitutional. The fact that the Secretary of the Treasury is the chairman of it does not change the fact that it is only a commission, similar to the commissions which were authorized and appointed for various and sundry war purposes during the war under our war powers. In legal intendment it is merely a commission, a commission of individuals and not a commission of officials, although it be headed by the highest officer of the Treasury.

In my judgment, there is nothing in the Constitution to authorize it or that gives us the power to vest any such authority in a commission. If we have not the power to grant such authority, because we have not the power to do it ourselves, then the grant is void. If the grant is void, then the exercise of the power under the grant is void, and we may have a final and conclusive settlement of the English debt, bonds taken, and hereafter have it discovered that this Government had no authority to make the settlement in that way; that the men who entered into the agreement had no authority under the Constitution to act; that their settlement was void, and that the bonds were void.

Mr. KING rose.

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not want to elaborate that idea. The Senator from Utah knows that I have spoken very long. I leave the matter of the elaboration of this point to him and to the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], if they think it worthy of discussion. I merely want to suggest it.

Mr. KING. I think it is worthy of discussion, and I was about to propound a question of the Senator, but in view of his last observation I shall not do so at this time.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, in conclusion I desire to offer to the pending bill an amendment intended to be proposed by me to the bill to create a commission authorized under certain conditions to refund the debt, and so forth. This amendment proposes a bonus for the soldiers, the ex-service men, of the United States. It is substantially a copy of the bonus bill introduced by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] as acting chairman of the Finance Committee. I have not stopped with offering this amendment providing for the bonus for the soliders, but I have proceeded to provide the method for payment of the bonus, and I desire to read now the part of the amendment which provides the method. I do this because I am led to hope, from what the Senator from North Dakota said on yesterday and from what I have seen published in the papers respecting the plans that have been discussed, with approval at the White House, with reference to meeting this obligation, that the method of paying it will meet the approval of the majority side of this Chamber, and that the bonus proposition itself may meet their approval. I am going to read to the Senate this method of payment, because I know Senators do not always read the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD carefully:

There is hereby appropriated such amount as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this title, to be paid out of any money and to be a first charge upon the interest received by the United States on obligations of foreign Governments. If at any time the amount of such interest is not sufficient to meet the appropriation hereby made, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to issue certificates of indebtedness under section 5 of the second Liberty bond act, as amended, to be redeemed as far as practicable out of interest payments on such obligations of foreign Governments, or, with the consent and approval of the President, to sell, with or without the indorsement of the United States, such of the bonds of foreign Governments then held by the United States as he may deem necessary, and apply the proceeds as far as required to the payment of such deficiency.

We have had a great deal of wiggling and wabbling about this bonus business. Sometimes we saw it, and sometimes we did not; but all the time we have had the most emphatic assurance that everything was in readiness as soon as some means could be devised to raise the money. Recently I have heard that the administration has been inclined to look with favor upon raising the money in the way that I have indicated, through these bonds; but it was said that the interest might not be quite sufficient, and it was said that the President was not willing that the bonus bill should pass unless he knew right where he could put his hands on the money. I have provided here that if the interest is not sufficient, then he can issue certificates, such as we have issued during the war, and have been issuing since, when there has not been enough money in the Treasury to meet the Government's obligations, to meet the deficiency, if any, and then return into the Treasury the money so taken out whenever the interest was sufficient. Now, I have added that if that interest is not sufficient, the administration shall have the choice between paying the deficit by the issuance of certificates of indebtedness, to be paid out of future interest payments, or it may sell any of our foreign bonds as far as is necessary to get the money to make up that deficiency.

It has been stated that the President, or the administration—I suppose it was the President—had practically agreed at one time that it would be entirely feasible to sell enough of these bonds to pay the whole amount of the bonus. The bonds of Great Britain were expected to come first, because there was no doubt in the mind of anybody that Great Britain would begin to pay her interest without delay.

Mr. President, the interest on the British bonds will be nearly enough—not quite, perhaps, but nearly enough—to meet the annual cash payments. If it is not, then nobody would be hurt very much if we were to use these bonds for the purpose of paying the soldiers. Instead of keeping them waiting and waiting indefinitely, we can sell a few of those bonds and not hurt anybody.

I want to say, Mr. President, that in offering this bonus amendment to this bill I am in earnest. The majority can not criticize it, because I have been given to understand by the members of the majority of the committee that at one time while they were holding up this bill in their committee they were seriously considering joining with the refunding bill the bonus bill, and providing in that bill both for the bonus and for the payment of the bonus. They have abandoned that, for what reason I do not know; but certainly no amendment could be more pertinent to a bill than this one is. Certainly if a reasonable method of raising this money can be devised the soldiers are entitled to have the measure passed and the money paid. If it be true, as the President contended at one time, that the financial exigencies of the Treasury will not permit the money to be paid out of the Treasury, and that the distressed condition of the people will not permit of the imposition of higher taxes than they are now bearing, those arguments—and they are the only arguments that the other side have advanced as a reason for the delay of this measure of justice to the soldiers—do not apply to the amendment I have offered.

On the contrary, it is extremely fitting that these men who have sacrificed for their country should be paid; and I can think of nothing more appropriate than to pay them out of the money that we lent to our allies to help them fight with us in that gigantic struggle, the winning of which, although its present aftermath is overclouded, holds out the brightest hope that has been vouchsafed to man for the future of this world.

Mr. President, I ask that the amendment I have submitted be printed as an appendix to my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

APPENDIX.

Amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. SIMMONS to the bill (H. R. 8762) to create a commission authorized under certain conditions to refund or convert obligations of foreign Governments owing to the United States of America, and for other purposes, viz: Add after section 5 a new section:

Sec. 6. Adjusted compensation.

PART I.—GENERAL PROVISIONS.

DEFINITIONS.

SEC. 1500. That this act may be cited as the "World War adjusted compensation act."

SEC. 1501. That as used in this title—

The term "veteran" includes any individual, a member of the military or naval forces of the United States at any time after April 5, 1917, and before November 12, 1918, but does not include (1) any individual at any time during such period or thereafter separated from such forces under other than honorable conditions, (2) any conscientious objector who performed no military duty whatever or refused to wear the uniform, or (3) any alien at any time during such period or thereafter discharged from the military or naval forces on account of his alienage; and

The term "adjusted service pay" means the amount of the payment to which the veteran would be entitled under the provisions of Part II of this title.

OPTIONAL PLANS.

SEC. 1502. That each veteran shall have the right to avail himself of any one, but only one, of the following plans:

(1) To receive "adjusted service pay," as provided in Part II;
(2) To receive an "adjusted service certificate," as provided in Part III;
(3) To receive "vocational training aid," as provided in Part IV;
(4) To receive "farm or home aid," as provided in Part V; or
(5) To receive "land settlement aid," as provided in Part VI.

APPLICATION BY VETERAN.

SEC. 1503. (a) That the veteran's choice among the plans enumerated in section 1502 shall be made by application filed with the Secretary of War if he is serving in or his last service was with the military forces, or with the Secretary of the Navy if he is serving in or his last service was with the naval forces.

(b) Such application may be made at any time after the passage and approval of this act.

(c) An application shall be made (1) personally by the veteran, or (2) in case of physical or mental incapacity or absence from the continental United States prevents the making of a personal application, then by such representative of the veteran and in such manner as the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy shall jointly by regulation prescribe. An application made by a representative other than one required by any such regulation shall be held void.

(d) The Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy shall jointly make any regulations necessary to the efficient administration of the provisions of this section.

PROOF OF VETERAN'S CHOICE OF PLAN.

SEC. 1504. (a) That as soon as practicable after the receipt of a valid application, the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, as the case may be, shall transmit to the Secretary of the Treasury, if the veteran has chosen an adjusted service certificate, or to the Federal Board for Vocational Education if the veteran has chosen vocational training aid, or to the Secretary of the Interior if the veteran has chosen farm or home aid, or land settlement aid, a certificate setting forth:

(1) That the applicant is a veteran;
(2) His name and address;
(3) The plan chosen; and
(4) The amount of adjusted service pay to which he would be entitled if he had chosen that plan.

(b) Upon receipt of such certificate, the officer or board to which it is transmitted shall proceed to extend to the veteran the benefits conferred by the plan chosen, at the time, in the manner, and under the conditions provided for in the part of this title covering such plan.

PUBLICITY.

SEC. 1505. (a) That the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy shall, as soon as practicable after the passage and approval of this act, jointly prepare and publish a pamphlet or pamphlets containing a digest and explanation of the provisions of this title, accompanied by such statements as to the comparative advantages of each of the plans enumerated in section 1502, as may be of assistance to veterans in making their choice among such plans; and shall from time to time thereafter jointly prepare and publish such additional or supplementary information as may be found necessary.

(b) The officer or board having charge of the administration of any plan or part thereof enumerated in section 1502 shall transmit to the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy as soon as practicable after the passage and approval of this act full information and explanations as to the matters of which such officer or board has charge, which shall be considered by the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy in preparing the publications referred to in subdivision (a).

(c) The publications provided for in subdivision (a) shall be distributed in such manner as the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy may determine to be most effective to inform veterans of their rights under this title.

STATISTICS.

SEC. 1506. That immediately upon the passage of this act the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy shall ascertain the individuals who are veterans as defined in section 1501, and, as to each veteran, the number of days of overseas service and of home service, as defined in section 1520, for which he is entitled to receive adjusted service pay; and their decisions shall not be subject to review by the accounting officers of the Treasury.

ADMINISTRATIVE REGULATIONS.

SEC. 1507. That any officer or board charged with the administration of any plan under this title, or of any part thereof, shall make such regulations, not inconsistent with this title, as may be necessary to the efficient administration of the matter of which such officer or board has charge.

DEDUCTION OF OVERPAYMENTS.

SEC. 1508. That after computing the amount of payment to be made to the veteran under any one of the plans enumerated in section 1502, or after using his adjusted service pay as the basis for any computation under this title, there shall be deducted from the amount thus obtained the amount of any overpayment previously made in respect to the service of the veteran in the military or naval forces.

SEC. 1509. That any officer or board charged with the administration of any plan under this title or of any part thereof shall make a full report to Congress on the first Monday of December of each year.

SEC. 1510. That no sum payable under this title to a veteran, or to his estate, or to any beneficiary named under Part III, shall be subject to attachment, levy, or seizure under any legal or equitable process.

PART II.—ADJUSTED SERVICE PAY.

SEC. 1520. That as used in this part—

The term "overseas service" means service on shore in Europe or Asia, exclusive of China, Japan, and the Philippine Islands; and service afloat, including the period from the date of embarkation for such service to the date of disembarkation on return from such service, both dates inclusive; and

The term "home service" means all service not overseas service.

SEC. 1521. That there shall be paid to any veteran, upon application in accordance with the provisions of section 1503 and in addition to any other amounts due him in pursuance of law, the following sums for each day of active service, in excess of 60 days, in the military or naval forces of the United States after April 5, 1917, and before July 1, 1919, as shown by the service or other record of the veteran: $1.25 for each day of overseas service, and $1 for each day of home service; but the amount payable to a veteran who performed no overseas service shall not exceed $500, and the amount payable to a veteran who performed any overseas service shall not exceed $625.

SEC. 1522. (a) That no such payment shall be made to—

(1) Any commissioned officer above the grade of captain in the Army or Marine Corps, lieutenant in the Navy, first lieutenant or first lieutenant of engineers in the Coast Guard, or passed assistant surgeon in the Public Health Service, or having the pay and allowances, if not the rank, of any officer superior in rank to any of such grades—in each case for the period of service as such;

(2) Any individual holding a permanent or provisional commission or permanent or acting warrant in any branch of the military or naval forces, for the period of service under such commission or warrant after the accrual of the right to pay thereunder;

(3) Any civilian officer or employee of any branch of the military or naval forces, contract surgeon, cadet of the United States Military Academy, midshipman, cadet of the Coast Guard, member of the Reserve Officers' Training Corps, member of the Students' Army Training Corps (except an enlisted man detailed thereto), member of the United States Guards, member of a development battalion (except an officer or enlisted man detailed thereto), member of the United States Disciplinary Barrack Guard, Philippine Scout, member of the Philippine Guard, member of the Philippine Constabulary, member of the Porto Rico Regiment of Infantry, member of the National Guard of Hawaii, member of the insular force of the Navy, member of the Samoan native guard and band of the Navy, or Indian scout—in each case for the period of service as such;

(4) Any individual entering the military or naval forces after November 11, 1918—for any period after such entrance;

(5) Any individual originally entering the service for special or limited service only—for the period of such special or limited service not overseas service;

(6) Any individual performing home service not with troops and receiving commutation of quarters or of subsistence—for the period of such service;

(7) Any member of the Public Health Service—for any period during which he was not detailed for duty with the Army or the Navy;

(8) Any individual granted a farm or industrial furlough—for the period of such furlough;

(9) Any individual detailed for work on roads or other highway construction or repair work—for the period during which his pay was equalized to conform to the compensation paid to civilian employees in the same or like employment, pursuant to the provisions of section 9 of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes," approved February 28, 1919;

(10) Any individual who has been absent from duty on account of disease resulting from his own intemperate use of drugs or alcoholic liquors or from other misconduct—for the period of such absence; or

(11) Any individual who has been absent without proper authority for more than one day, or in confinement under sentence or awaiting trial and disposition of his case, if the trial resulted in conviction—for the period of such absence or confinement.

(b) The periods referred to in paragraphs (5) and (6) of subdivision (a) may be included in the case of any individual if and to the extent that the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy jointly find that such service subjected such individual to exceptional hazard. A full statement of all action under this subdivision shall be included in the reports of the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy required by section 1509.

(c) In computing the payments to any veteran under this part effect shall be given to all paragraphs of subdivision (a) which are applicable.

(d) If part of the service is overseas service and part is home service, the home service shall first be used in computing the 60 days' period referred to in section 1521.

(e) For the purpose of computing the 60 days' period referred to in section 1521 any period of service after April 5, 1917, and before July 1, 1919, in the military or naval forces in any capacity may be included, notwithstanding payment for such period, or a part thereof, is prohibited under the provisions of subdivision (a) of this section, except that the periods referred to in paragraphs (2), (3), and (4) of subdivision (a) shall not be included.

(f) For the purpose of section 1521, in the case of members of the National Guard or of the National Guard Reserve called into service by the proclamation of the President dated July 3, 1917, the time of service between the date of call into the service as specified in such proclamation and August 5, 1917, both dates inclusive, shall be deemed to be active service in the military or naval forces of the United States.

SEC. 1523. (a) That the payments authorized by the provisions of this title shall be made in installments, beginning on the 1st day of July or January next succeeding the fifteenth day after the date of filing the application, but not before January 1, 1923, as follows: (1) If the total amount payable is $500 or over, in 10 equal quarterly installments; and (2) if the total amount payable is less than $500, in quarterly installments of $50; except that any installment necessary to complete the payments may be less than $50.

(b) If before the completion of the installment payments the veteran is separated from the military or naval forces under other than honorable conditions, or is discharged therefrom on account of his alienage, no further installments shall be paid. Payment shall be made by the Secretary of War if the veteran is serving in, or his last service was with, the military forces; and by the Secretary of the Navy, if he is serving in, or his last service was with, the naval forces.

SEC. 1524. That if the veteran dies, after making application in accordance with the provisions of section 1503 for adjusted service pay and before receiving all the installment payments, the payments authorized by the provisions of this part shall be made to his estate.

SEC. 1525. That no right to adjusted service pay under the provisions of this part shall be assignable or serve as security for any loan. Any assignment or loan made in violation of the provisions of this section shall be held void. The Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy shall not pay the amount of adjusted service pay to any person other than the veteran or his estate or such representative of the veteran as the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy shall jointly by regulation prescribe.

PART III.—ADJUSTED SERVICE CERTIFICATES.

SEC. 1530. That the Secretary of the Treasury, upon certification from the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, as provided in section 1504, is hereby directed to issue, without cost to the veteran designated therein, an adjusted service certificate (hereinafter in this part referred to as a "certificate") of a face value equal to the sum of (1) the adjusted service pay of the veteran increased by 40 per cent, plus (2) interest thereon for 20 years at the rate of 4½ per cent per annum, compounded annually (such amount being approximately equal to three and thirty-eight hundredths times the adjusted service pay of the veteran). The certificate and all rights conferred under the provisions of this part shall take effect as of the 1st day of July or January next succeeding the date of filing the application, but not before January 1, 1923. The veteran shall name the beneficiary of the certificate and may from time to time, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, alter such beneficiary. The amount of the face value of the certificate shall be payable (1) to the veteran 20 years after it becomes effective or (2) upon the death of the veteran prior thereto to the beneficiary named; except that if such beneficiary dies before the veteran and no new beneficiary is named, or if the beneficiary in the first instance has not yet been named, the amount of the certificate shall be paid to the estate of the veteran.

SEC. 1531. That there is hereby established in the Treasury a revolving fund to be known as the "adjusted service certificate loan fund" (hereinafter in this part referred to as the "fund"). The Postmaster General is authorized to make loans out of such funds upon the certificate of any veteran. The amount of such loans to any one veteran outstanding at any one time shall not exceed—

(a) If the loan is made during the third to fifth years, inclusive, after the certificate becomes effective, 90 per cent of the sum of (1) the adjusted service pay of the veteran, plus (2) interest thereon, from the date the certificate becomes effective to the time of the making of the loan at the rate of 4½ per cent per annum, compounded annually, or

(b) If the loan is made during the sixth to twentieth years, inclusive, after the certificate becomes effective, 80 per cent of the sum of (1) the adjusted service pay of the veteran increased by 40 per cent, plus (2) interest thereon from the date the certificate becomes effective, to the time of the making of the loan, at the rate of 4½ per cent per annum, compounded annually.

SEC. 1532. That moneys in the fund shall be available to make all loans upon certificates. The Postmaster General is hereby authorized to set aside out of the fund such reserve moneys as may be required to make such loans, and the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to invest the remainder of the moneys in the fund in interest-bearing obligations of the United States. Such obligations may, at the discretion of the Secretary, be sold and the proceeds reinvested in other interest-bearing obligations of the United States, and shall be sold and the proceeds made available for the purposes of the fund, whenever the Postmaster General certifies that in his opinion further amounts are required for the purposes of the fund. Any moneys in such fund not deemed necessary by the Secretary of the Treasury for the purposes of this part shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

SEC. 1533. That no loan shall be made upon any certificate within two years after the certificate becomes effective. Application for loans may be made to any postmaster of a first, second, or third class post office. The veteran shall give a note for the repayment of the loan upon an amortization plan by means of a fixed number of annual installments sufficient to cover (1) interest on the unpaid principal at the rate of 4½ per cent per annum and (2) such amount of the principal as will extinguish the debt within an agreed period not exceeding the life of the certificate. The veteran may, however, pay any or all installments of the principal previous to their due date. The Postmaster General shall by regulation prescribe the form of application and the duration, number, and amount of installments, and such other conditions as he deems advisable, of the loan. All payments in respect to the loan shall be made through a first, second, or third class post office. Any moneys received for the repayment of the loan shall be covered into the fund. Whenever the Postmaster General finds that the borrower is in arrears for more than two years in his installments upon the note or has violated any other conditions thereof, he shall certify such fact to the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall thereupon declare the certificate of the borrower to be forfeited.

SEC. 1534. That no certificate issued or right conferred under the provisions of this part shall be negotiable or assignable or serve as security for a loan other than one made under the provisions of section 1531. Any loan made in violation of any provision of this section shall be held void. Whenever the Secretary of the Treasury finds that any such certificate or right has been negotiated or assigned, or has served as security, in violation of a provision of this section, the rights of the veteran under this part shall be forfeited.

SEC. 1535. That in the case of the death of the borrower or the forfeiture of his certificate or rights under this part, any loan made upon the certificate and the note in respect thereto shall be deemed canceled. The Secretary of the Treasury shall thereupon reimburse the Postmaster General for all unpaid installments upon any canceled loan; and in case such loan has been canceled as a result of the death of the borrower, the Secretary of the Treasury shall deduct the amount of such reimbursement from the amount of the face value of the certificate in respect to which the loan is made.

SEC. 1536. That any certificate issued under the provisions of this part shall have printed upon its face the conditions and terms upon which it is issued and to which it is subject.

SEC. 1537. That if the veteran dies, after making application in accordance with the provisions of section 1503 and before the certificate becomes effective, the amount of the adjusted service pay of the veteran shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury to his estate.

PART IV.—VOCATIONAL TRAINING AID.

SEC. —. That the Federal Board for Vocational Education (hereinafter in this title referred to as the "board") upon certification from the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, as provided in section 1504, is hereby directed to pay to the veteran designated therein (if he is not receiving the benefits of the vocational rehabilitation act, as amended) the sum of $1.75 for each day of his attendance (on or after January 1, 1923), on a course of vocational training previously approved by the board as suitable for such veteran. Such payment shall be made without deduction for Sundays, holidays, or vacations not exceeding two weeks in duration, or for absence for other cause which the board deems justifiable; but the total payment shall not exceed 140 per cent of the amount of adjusted service pay which the veteran would be entitled to receive if he had chosen that plan.

Payments under this section shall be made monthly, or at more frequent intervals, as the board may determine generally or in special cases.

SEC. 1541. That the board shall establish such regulations as will insure the regular attendance of the veteran on his course of training, and no sum or sums shall be payable under this part unless the board has been furnished proof of such regular attendance. For each day of unjustifiable absence the veteran shall forfeit the sum payable for that day, and shall receive no reimbursement for it in any other form.

SEC. 1542. (a) That if the payment under section 1540 plus the amounts forfeited under section 1541 is less than 140 per cent of the adjusted service pay, either by reason of the duration of the course approved, or by reason of the veteran's discontinuing, with the approval of the board, his attendance on his course of training, he shall be entitled to receive an amount equal to the difference between (1) his adjusted service pay and (2) that proportion thereof which the payments made or accrued under section 1540 plus the amounts forfeited under section 1541 bear to 140 per cent of his adjusted service pay: Provided, That from the amount thus computed there shall be deducted an amount equal to the sums forfeited under section 1541.

(b) Such amount shall be paid to him by the board in such installments and at such times as will place him upon the same basis as if he had originally chosen to receive adjusted service pay as provided in Part II.

SEC. 1543. That if before the completion of the payments under this part the veteran is separated from the military or naval forces under other than honorable conditions, or is discharged therefrom on account of his alienage, no further payments shall be made under this part.

SEC. 1544. (a) That if the veteran dies, after making application in accordance with the provisions of section 1503 and before any payments have been made or have accrued under this title, the amount of the adjusted service pay of the veteran shall be paid by the board to his estate.

(b) If the veteran dies after the course of training has begun, his estate shall be paid by the board the same amount as would have been paid to the veteran under subdivision (a) of section 1542, treating for such purposes the date of his death as the date of discontinuance of attendance on his course of training.

(c) The amounts payable under this section shall be payable in the same manner as provided in subdivision (b) of section 1542.

SEC. 1545. (a) That the board is hereby authorized to cooperate with State boards for vocational education in such manner as will secure their assistance in the approval of courses of training for veterans and other assistance in carrying out the provisions of this part.

(b) Whenever any State provides funds for assistance to veterans in attendance upon approved courses or provides for free tuition in approved educational institutions, the board is authorized and directed to cooperate with the State board for vocational education of such State in securing the maximum educational opportunities to veterans entitled to the benefits of this part.

PART V.—FARM OR HOME AID.

SEC. 1550. That the Secretary of the Interior, upon certification from the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, as provided in section 1504, is hereby directed, on or after January 1, 1923, to pay to the veteran designated therein, in one payment or in installments, an amount equal to his adjusted service pay increased by 40 per cent.

Such payment shall be made for the purpose, and only for the purpose, of enabling the veteran to make improvements on a city or suburban home, or a farm not selected under Part VI, or to purchase or make payments on such a home or farm.

SEC. 1551. That no such payment shall be made unless and until the Secretary of the Interior has approved the purpose for which it is desired by the veteran, and has suitable assurance that the money will be expended for such purpose. The Secretary of the Interior may, at the option of the veteran, or on his own motion, make the payment directly to the vendor or other persons to whom such payment is due from the veteran.

SEC. 1552. That for the purpose of enabling him to pass upon the desirability of the investment he may make use of the services of land bank appraisers of the Federal Farm Loan Board, to be designated by such board.

SEC. 1553. (a) That if the veteran dies after making application in accordance with the provisions of section 1503 for farm or home aid and before a contract has been entered into with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, the amount of his adjusted service pay shall be paid by the Secretary of the Interior to the estate of the veteran in such installments and at such times as will place the beneficiaries thereof upon the same basis as the veteran would have been if he had originally chosen to receive adjusted service pay as provided in Part II, but no such payment shall be made if the veteran has been separated from the military or naval forces under other than honorable conditions or discharged therefrom on account of his alienage.

(b) If before the veteran's death a contract has been entered into with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior and payments under this part on such contract are still due, such payments shall be made by the Secretary of the Interior to the vendor or other person to whom such payments are due from the veteran.

PART VI.—LAND SETTLEMENT.

SEC. 1560. That on the opening of public or Indian lands to entry, or the restoration to entry of public lands theretofore withdrawn from entry, such opening or restoration shall, in the order therefor, provide for a period of not less than 60 days before the general opening of such lands to disposal, in which period veterans who have chosen the benefits of this part shall have a preferred right of entry under the homestead or desert land laws, if qualified thereunder, except as against prior existing valid settlement rights and as against preference rights conferred by existing laws or equitable claims subject to allowance and confirmation.

Such preference right for such period shall also be accorded on all reclamation projects now in existence or hereafter established, whether such reclamation is made by irrigation, drainage, or other method.

Upon certification from the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, as provided in section 1504, approved by the Secretary of the Interior, there shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury, on or after January 1, 1923, to the veteran designated therein, in one payment or in installments, an amount equal to his adjusted service pay increased by 40 per centum. Such payment shall be made for the purpose, and only for the purpose, of enabling the veteran to make payments in connection with the lands as to which preference has been given under this section, or for the improvement of any such land, and shall be made only if the Secretary of the Interior has suitable assurance that the money will be expended for such purpose.

PART VII.—MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS.

SEC. 1570. That the officers and boards having charge of the administration of any of the provisions of this title are authorized to appoint such officers, employees, and agents in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, and to make such expenditures for rent, furniture, office equipment, printing, binding, telegrams, telephone, law books, books of reference, stationery, motor-propelled vehicles or trucks used for official purposes, traveling expenses and per diem in lieu of subsistence at not exceeding $4 for officers, agents, and other employees, for the purchase of reports and materials for publications, and for other contingent and miscellaneous expenses, as may be necessary efficiently to execute the purposes of this title and as may be provided for by the Congress from time to time. With the exception of such special experts as may be found necessary for the conduct of the work, all such appointments shall be made subject to the civil-service laws, and preference shall, so far as practicable, be given to veterans.

SEC. 1571. That whoever knowingly makes any false or fraudulent statement of a material fact in any application, certificate, or document made under the provisions of Parts I, II, III, IV, V, or VI, or of any regulation made under any such part, shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $1,000, or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.

SEC. 1572. That there is hereby appropriated such amount as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this title, to be paid out of, and to be a first charge upon, the interest received by the United States on obligations of foreign Governments. If at any time the amount of such interest is not sufficient to meet the appropriation hereby made, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to issue certificates of indebtedness under section 5 of the second Liberty bond act, as amended, to be redeemed, so far as practicable, out of interest payments on such obligations of foreign Governments, or, with the consent and approval of the President, to sell, with or without the indorsement of the United States, such of the bonds of foreign Governments then held by the United States as he may deem necessary, and apply the proceeds as far as required to the payment of such deficiency.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I send to the desk the amendment which I submitted a few moments ago and ask that it be printed and lie on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, if I understood the Senator correctly and understood all Senators correctly, there is no objection to one amendment that is offered by the committee, namely, the amendment adding, at the bottom of the second page:

Provided, That nothing contained in this act shall be construed to authorize or empower the commission to extend the time of maturity of any such bonds or obligations due the United States by any foreign Government beyond June 15, 1947.

I desire to add at the end of that:

Or to fix the rate of interest at less than that fixed by existing law.

In order that we may have the bill printed with that amendment, so that the discussion may be limited to what we all agree to be in the bill, I ask the Senators if there is any objection to presenting that amendment now?

Mr. SIMMONS. I will say frankly to the Senator that I see no objection to presenting the amendment now, and I am very glad the Senator proposes it, because it meets one of the serious objections—not by any means the most serious, but one of the serious objections—that I made.

Mr. McKELLAR. I hope the Senator will have the bill reprinted, so that it can go on the desks of Senators to-morrow. I think the amendment is perfectly proper, and I hope the Senator will have it reprinted, so that we can have the whole thing before us.

Mr. McCUMBER. I intended to ask that.

Then, Mr. President, I move to add, after the word "therefor," on line 20, page 2 of the bill as reported in, the following:

Provided, That nothing contained in this act shall be construed to authorize or empower the commission to extend the time of maturity of any such bonds or obligations due the United States by any foreign Government beyond June 15, 1947, or to fix the rate of interest at less than that fixed by existing law.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator move that as an amendment?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; I move that as a committee amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota on behalf of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask, then, that the bill may be printed with this amendment as it has just been adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

THE MUSCLE SHOALS PLANT.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, on July 8, 1921, Henry Ford submitted to the Government a proposition for the purchase of the Muscle Shoals plant on the Tennessee River. I desire to have the proposition submitted by Mr. Ford printed in the RECORD, and I ask unanimous consent that it may be printed in the RECORD without reading.

On January 20 I received from Mr. Ford's secretary a letter containing an amendment to the proposition, and the only amendment to the offer that has already been made by Mr. Ford in this matter. I desire to have that printed immediately after the contract, and then we will have the whole proposition before the Senate and before the country. I ask unanimous consent that that may be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the printing of the documents? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

DEARBORN, MICH., July 8, 1921.

Gen. LANSING H. BEACH,
Chief of Engineers, United States Army,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: In response to your advice that the Government invites an offer for the power at the Muscle Shoals Wilson Dam, on my part or on the part of a company to be formed by me (and throughout this proposal to be called the company), I hereby and through you place at the disposal of the President, the Secretary of War, and Congress the following tender:

1. If the United States will promptly resume construction work on the Wilson Dam, and as speedily as possible complete the construction of the dam and progressively install hydroelectric facilities and equipment for generating 600,000 horsepower, then the company will agree to lease from the United States the Wilson Dam, its power house, and all of its hydroelectric and operating appurtenances, together with all lands and buildings owned by the United States connected with and adjacent to either end of the Wilson Dam, for a period of 100 years from the date of the completion of the dam and its power-house facilities; and the company will pay to the United States 6 per cent on the remaining cost of the locks, the dam, and power-house facilities, taken at $20,000,000, in payments of $1,200,000 annually, except that during the first six years of the lease period payments shall begin and be made annually as follows:

Two hundred thousand dollars one year from the date when 100,000 horsepower is generated and continuously ready for service, and thereafter $200,000 annually at the end of each year for five years. After the first six years payment of $1,200,000 shall be made annually at the end of each calendar year during the lease period.

2. At the beginning of the seventh year of the lease period, and annually thereafter, the company will pay to the United States a sum not greater than $39,537 to retire during the remaining period of 94 years the total cost of the Wilson Dam and its power house, substructures, superstructures, machinery, and appliances, including locks, all taken at $40,000,000; the sinking-fund investments to bear the highest rate of interest obtainable, but not less than 4 per cent per annum.

3. The company will further agree to pay to the United States $35,000 annually for repairs, maintenance, and operation of the dam, gates, and locks at Wilson Dam; all repairs, maintenance, and operation of the same to be under the direction, care, and responsibility of the United States during the 100-year period.

4. The company will furnish the United States, free of charge, delivered at a point on the lock grounds designated by the Chief of Engineers, electric power not to exceed 200 horsepower for the operation of the locks.

5. If the United States shall accept the above proposal for leasing the Wilson Dam and its power installation, then, as a condition of acceptance, the company will ask that immediately upon release of suitable construction equipment and facilities at the Wilson Dam, and upon the release of labor forces, the United States will forthwith proceed to construct and fully complete with reasonable promptness Dam No. 3, as designed and proposed by the United States Engineers, the power installation at Dam No. 3 to be taken in this proposal at 250,000 horsepower.

6. When the lock, dam, and power-house installations at Dam No. 3 are completed, the company offers to lease Dam No. 3, its power house, and all of its hydroelectric and operating appurtenances, for a period of 100 years, from the date of the completion of the dam and its power-house facilities, and the company will pay to the United States 6 per cent on the cost of the dam, lock, and power-house facilities, taken at a cost of $8,000,000, in payments of $480,000 annually, except that during the first three years of the lease period payments shall begin and be made annually as follows:

One hundred and sixty thousand dollars one year from the date when 80,000 horsepower is generated and continuously ready for service, and thereafter $160,000 annually at the end of each year for two years. If and when, after the first three years, the entire power house generating equipment of 250,000 horsepower is continuously ready for service, payments of $480,000 shall be made annually at the end of each calendar year during the remaining 97 years of the lease period.

7. At the beginning of the fourth year of the lease period and annually thereafter the company will pay to the United States a sum not greater than $7,010, to retire during the remaining period of 97 years the total cost of Dam No. 3 and its power house, substructures, superstructures, machinery, and appliances, including lock, all taken at $8,000,000, the sinking fund investments to bear the highest rate of interests obtainable, but not less than 4 per cent per annum.

8. The company will further agree to pay to the United States $20,000 annually for repairs, maintenance, and operation of dam, gates, and lock at Dam No. 3, all repairs, maintenance, and operation of the same to be under the direction, care, and responsibility of the United States during the 100-year period.

9. The company will furnish the United States, free of charge, at Dam No. 3, to be delivered at a point on the lock grounds designated by the Chief of Engineers, electric power not in excess of 100 horsepower for the operation of the lock.

10. If the United States shall accept the above several proposals in their entirety, then the company offers to purchase from the United States the following properties, viz:

(a) All of the property at nitrate plant No. 2, and its adjacent steam power plant, land, buildings, material, machinery, fixtures, equipment, apparatus, appurtenances, tools, supplies, and the right, license, and privilege to use any and all of the patents, processes, methods, and designs which have been acquired by the United States, and which the United States has a right to transfer and assign the use of to any purchaser of nitrate plant No. 2, together with the sulphuric-acid units now in storage on the premises.

(b) All of the properties of the United States at nitrate plant No. 1, its steam power plant, land, buildings, material, machinery, fixtures, equipment, apparatus, appurtenances, tools, supplies, and the right, license, and privilege to use any and all of the patents, processes, methods, and designs appertaining to said nitrate plant No. 1, which have been acquired by the United States; but nitrate plant No. 1 shall not be operated as an air nitrogen fixation plant, as designed to be.

"(c) All of the property at the quarry of the United States, known as the Waco Quarry, including all material, buildings, quarry tracks, machinery, railroad tracks, tools, and other equipment.

"(d) Also the steam plant built and owned by the Government at Gorgas, Ala., on the Warrior River, including material, buildings, machinery, fixtures, apparatus, appurtenances, tools, supplies, and the transmission line from the Gorgas steam plant to nitrate plant No. 2, at Muscle Shoals, the United States to acquire title to the right-of-way lands necessary along the transmission line, and also to acquire the title to the land and site occupied by the steam plant and by all Government buildings and other structures at the Gorgas steam plant."

For the foregoing plants and other properties, as set forth and described above under a, b, c, d, the company offers to pay the United States $5,000,000, the terms of payment to be agreed upon between the Secretary of War and the company, the Secretary of War having the authority to dispose of said plants and other properties as above enumerated.

11. At any time prior to the expiration of said lease period of 100 years the company shall have the right to negotiate with the Government for a renewal of the leases for the two above dams, their power houses, etc. In the event of disagreement as to terms of the renewal the United States and the company shall each appoint an arbitrator, and these arbitrators shall choose a third. The decision of the arbitration board of three shall be final and binding upon both parties.

12. If the United States agrees to sell and the company purchases these several properties, nitrate plants, quarry, steam-power plants, transmission lines, etc., and at prices and on terms mutually satisfactory, the company will operate nitrate plant No. 2 to approximate present capacity in the production of nitrogen and other fertilizer compounds, with the following special objectives:

"(a) To determine by research on a commercial scale whether by means of electric-furnace methods and industrial chemistry there may be produced fertilizer compounds of higher grade and at cheaper prices than the fertilizer-using farmers have in the past been able to procure, and to determine whether in a broad way the application of electricity and industrial chemistry may do for the agricultural industry of the country what they have economically accomplished for other industries.

"(b) To maintain nitrate plant No. 2 in a state of readiness to be promptly operated in the manufacture of materials necessary in time of war for the production of explosives."

13. If the above offers of the company are accepted by the United States, and if the agreement between the Secretary of War and the company can be made for the purchase of the above-described properties, it will naturally and reasonably follow that the buyers of fertilizers will desire to be assured that fertilizers produced at nitrate plant No. 2 shall be sold at fair prices and without excessive profits.

14. To meet this reasonable expectation on the part of the farmers of the country who buy fertilizer, the company proposes that the maximum net profits which it shall make in the manufacture and sale of fertilizer products at nitrate plant No. 2 shall not exceed 8 per cent. The company also suggests that a board be created composed of officially designated members and representatives of farmers' national organizations, such as the American Farm Bureau Federation, the National Grange, and the Farmers' Union, together with a representative from the Bureau of Markets of the Agricultural Department (to be an ex officio member of this board, serving in an advisory capacity, without right to vote), and two representatives of the company. It is expected that the board shall have access to the books and records of the company at any reasonable time, and that its duty shall be to investigate costs and revenues and to determine for public information whether the profits of the company are being kept within the established limit of 8 per cent, as above set forth; and it is also suggested that this board determine upon the territorial distribution of fertilizers produced at nitrate plant No. 2. If and when this board can not agree upon its findings and determinations, then the points of disagreement by the board at any time shall be referred to the Federal Trade Commission for arbitration and settlement, and the decision of the Trade Commission shall be final and binding upon the board.

15. Whenever, in the event of war, the United States shall require any part of the operating facilities of nitrate plant No. 2 for the production of materials necessary in the manufacture of explosives, then the United States shall have the immediate right, upon notice to the company, to take over and operate the same for the national defense of the country, and the company will supply the United States with hydroelectric power necessary for such operations, together with the use of all patented processes which the United States may need in time of war for munition purposes, and which the company owns and has the right to use, and any of the company's personnel and operating organization required in times of war for operating any part of nitrate plant No. 2 in the manufacture of materials for explosives shall be at the disposal of the United States. All duly authorized agents and representatives of the United States shall have free access at all reasonable times during the lease period to inspect and study all of the operations, chemical processes, and methods employed by the company at nitrate plant No. 2, provided such agents and representatives shall not use the information and the facts about any of the company's operations, except for the benefit and protection of the United States.

16. It will be obvious to you that, should the above proposals and offers of the company be accepted by the United States, there will be many details in the lease and purchase agreements to be worked out, but it is believed that the above will furnish all of the information required for decision by the United States upon the tender herein submitted.

17. The above proposals of the company are submitted as a whole and not in part.

18. The plans of the company with respect to its hydroelectric power needs are such that it is hoped that you, and those to whom you refer these proposals, will be able to arrive at prompt decisions regarding the company's offer, and that it can be confidently expected that the undersigned will very soon receive an answer to this communication.

Respectfully,

HENRY FORD.

DEARBORN, MICH., January 20, 1922.

Hon. KENNETH MCKELLAR,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: The only amendment which Mr. Ford has made to the Muscle Shoals proposal reads as follows:

"The company proposes to undertake the construction and completion at actual cost of all the work referred to, and when completed and ready for operation will pay to the United States Government as annual rental of the property an amount equal to 4 per cent of the total cost of such construction."

Very truly, yours,

E. G. LIEBOLD,
General Secretary to Henry Ford.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Now, I desire to offer for printing in the RECORD two articles, one from the Nashville Banner of January 18, 1922, entitled "The Trust in the Fight," and the other from the Knoxville Sentinel of the same date, entitled "Ford and Muscle Shoals." I ask to have these articles printed in the RECORD without reading.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[From the Nashville Banner of Jan. 18, 1922.]

THE TRUST IN THE FIGHT.

The National Fertilizer Association, 1016 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa., would be glad to furnish you printed matter intended to show that Henry Ford should not be permitted to make nitrate at Muscle Shoals.

The Banner knows that the National Fertilizer Association is eager to scatter alleged information of this kind abroad, because it has sent to this paper a printed circular in which the fact is asserted in big black type.

The circular is accompanied by typewritten matter that newspapers are licensed to use as their own production.

There is also a colored chart and many figures intended to show that Henry Ford would swindle the Government out of some millions of dollars and get too much for the money he offers.

And this same National Fertilizer Association would fight any proposal to have the Government complete the Muscle Shoals project and operate the industries there on its own account as assiduously as it is fighting Ford.

It would also encourage any plan to abandon or scrap the Government works at Muscle Shoals, as was urged in Congress, possibly under the association's influence, when it was proposed to appropriate money to complete the Government undertaking.

The circular from the National Fertilizer Association sent the Banner is marked in the upper left-hand corner "Muscle Shoals No. 1," meaning that there is more like it to follow. It is to be widely disseminated.

The association has evidently set to work in an active campaign of propaganda to defeat Henry Ford or anyone else who wishes to make nitrate at Muscle Shoals.

The purpose of its activities and the reason for its manifest anxiety can not be disguised, and that purpose is really an argument in favor of the Ford proposal. If the association did not believe fertilizer could be manufactured abundantly and cheaply at Muscle Shoals it would never have gone to the trouble and expense of this fight.

It is plainly and palpably fighting for its own selfish interest against the interest of the public. There is no disguise; there could not be any. Its attack has at least the merit of open fight, but its gall in asking that Ford's proposition to take over Muscle Shoals be defeated in order to serve the popular welfare is rather gigantic.

[From the Knoxville Sentinel of Jan. 18, 1922.]

FORD AND MUSCLE SHOALS.

We have received some literature from the National Fertilizer Association, entitled "Truth about Muscle Shoals," which figures out that by completing the plant at a further cost to the Government of $30,000,000 to $57,000,000, as variously estimated, and accepting Mr. Ford's offer to pay the interest on this money and to repay the Government a sum equal to every dollar of its outlay, and greatly in excess of it by the expiration of his lease, that the Government will be conferring a subsidy of some billion dollars and more on Mr. Ford, and the association is mortally opposed to the Government giving anybody a subsidy at the expense of the taxpayers of the country.

"The National Fertilizer Association," it tells us, "does not oppose private operation of the Muscle Shoals nitrate plant unless it involves a subsidy by the Government, but it does oppose either Government operation or Government subsidized operation in competition with the existing fertilizer industry."

We do not know by what method of mathematics the association arrives at its conclusion that the acceptance of Mr. Ford's offer to put into operation the plant—which otherwise is a "dead horse"—will cost the taxpayers a billion dollars in the course of 100 years, but the association's literature makes no reference to the billions of dollars and many revolutionizing and far-reaching benefits that Mr. Ford's plan promises to confer on the taxpayers during the period of his lease.

And yet we suspect that these results were the objections that the association had fully developed in its mind in voicing its protest.

The association does not appear to have been worried about the billions of dollars the Government stood to lose in its mind by calculating the compound interest for the next 100 years on the investment the Government has already made in the plant of upward of $150,000,000, as we recall the figures.

"The Muscle Shoals enterprise was denounced over and over again as a raid on the Treasury," the Manufacturers' Record says, "A perfectly worthless thing, fit only to be junked. 'Let the Government take its loss and be glad that it is no more!' was the cry. Then Henry Ford made an offer for the property. Immediately it was charged in endless propaganda that he was endeavoring to rob the Government."

Let us accept for the moment that the Government throw from $30,000,000 to $50,000,000 more of its money after the $150,000,000 already sunk in the plant, in view of what Mr. Ford proposes to do it would be a splendid gamble compared with many of the extraordinary appropriations Congress is accustomed to make of the people's money.

"Mr. Ford states," says the Manufacturers' Record, "that he intends to create another Detroit in the vicinity of Muscle Shoals, a series of villages extending over 75 miles, providing a multitude of employees with city work and country lives. He promises cheap fertilizer," among other things, the Record says, "cheap power and cheap products. He proposes to show how water power can be made an asset of almost every community in the land. He visions, as it were, a new dispensation, not to be brought about by treaties or political expedients, but by the application of mind to matter and the utilization of resources now but imperfectly developed. The man is not an author of fiction, but a doer. Moreover, he has the cash."

Mr. Ford has declared that "the Fertilizer Trust, the power and chemical interests of Wall Street, the money brokers, and other interests that fear to have Muscle Shoals developed along lines that will serve all the people most are deluging Weeks and Congress with literature that grossly misrepresents the facts."

Whether the literature that we have received and referred to "grossly misrepresents the facts" or not, taking it at its own valuation, we do not think it sufficient for the purpose of turning down this splendid vision and development which, splendid as it is, is not in the least extravagant or impractical as we people of to-day know and have come to accept the potentialities of modern agencies and methods applied to industrial development.

"The whole South should get behind Mr. Ford in this matter, irrespective of any personal feelings, and so should the whole country," the Record says: "If he should fail, the country will be no worse off than it is; if he should succeed, who can tell what stupendously great things will result?

"Secretary Weeks has stated that he will submit the Ford offer to Congress. Dilatory tactics there would be deplorable. An agreement with Ford should promptly be brought to pass."

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, one other word.

I wish to call the attention of the Senate to a pamphlet which is apparently issued by way of propaganda by the National Fertilizer Association, John D. Toll, secretary, 1010 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa. I call especial attention to the first page:

Do you want your Government to engage in a manufacturing business on a tremendous scale in competition with private industry?

Do you want any part of your tax moneys paid out of the Public Treasury to a single individual or corporation in order that he or it may compete on specially favorable terms in the manufacture of power, fertilizer, metallurgical products, or anything else?

Do you believe in open, fair, free competition in business, or would you advocate taxing all the people to give one company an advantage over its competitors?

Finally, do you realize that the Muscle Shoals project is being promoted as a means of initiating Government competition, either directly by a straight-out Government operation scheme, or indirectly by subsidizing a single private interest, that a nation-wide propaganda is being conducted for such a plan and it is actually gaining important support, and that it is simply the entering wedge for other socialistic schemes that would destroy private industry?

If you consider this issue important enough to enlist your interest, you will find it worth a few minutes of your time to read the following pages. They contain a plain statement of the facts regarding the Muscle Shoals project and the principles that should be applied to its development.

Mr. President, I wish to say that this propaganda of the National Fertilizer Association is being spread broadcast throughout the country. It is entirely a misleading document. It will be recalled by Senators that until Mr. Ford made his offer for Muscle Shoals in July, 1921, it was openly stated on the floor of this Chamber and stated elsewhere in many periodicals and newspapers that Muscle Shoals was a liability rather than an asset; and when that proposition from Mr. Ford came in it immediately galvanized that alleged liability into a splendid asset of this Government. It is the only proposition that has been offered that has any material substance to it. It is a proposition that will mean many, many millions of dollars to the Government. It will mean the upbuilding of a great section of our country. It will mean cheaper fertilizers for the farmers of this country; and I think that the propaganda that is being issued by the National Fertilizer Association ought to be condemned by every right-thinking man in this country.

If the man who wrote the article has any sense at all, he must know that this is not in any sense a subsidy. It is not in any sense a case of the Government entering into competition with private enterprise. It is merely the purchase by a private individual of a piece of property that belongs to the Government now, and which some of the Government's agents have heretofore said had no value at all. It is an offer of many millions of dollars for this property, and it is in no sense what this propaganda of the Fertilizer Trust is saying that it is.

I do not desire to put this propaganda in the RECORD, but I do desire to have the offer of a contract and the supplemental offer of a contract from Mr. Ford put in the RECORD, so that Senators may see it, and so that the country may be apprised of what Mr. Ford has really offered for this valuable property at Muscle Shoals.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, January 24, 1922.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, the Father of us all, in Thy presence we wait again. As we look out upon all lands we behold the countless heads that are bowed and the hearts of the multitudes are deeply moved with great sorrow. Death has claimed one whose holy zeal, sustaining hope, and heavenly purpose were for Thy glory, the peace of earth, and for the salvation of mankind. May the eternal God be their refuge and His everlasting arms their unfailing support. O look upon us all according to our earthly limitations; accept and bless our humble petition as we thank Thee for all the good things that come to us from above. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MEMORIAL SERVICES—LATE REPRESENTATIVE TAYLOR OF ARKANSAS.

Mr. OLDFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following order which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That Sunday, the 26th day of February, at 12 o'clock, be set apart for addresses on the life, character, and public services of Hon. SAMUEL TAYLOR, late a Representative from the State of Arkansas.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the order?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the order.

The order was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. HERSEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD upon the antilynching bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LARSEN of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the antilynching bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

GREAT LAKES-ST. LAWRENCE WATERWAY.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, this was the morning on which the rereference of the St. Lawrence route matter was to be brought up. It was suggested in the discussion of the Speaker that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WINSLOW], the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Committee, and myself be allowed 20 minutes each in which to present our views to the House. I ask that that be done, and if it is agreeable to the gentleman from Massachusetts, I would like to use 15 minutes of my time and then have him use his 20 minutes and I use the remaining 5 minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, can not the gentleman reduce that time somewhat?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Suppose we reduce it to 15 minutes on a side?

Mr. MONDELL. Ordinarily 5 minutes on a side is used in a matter of this kind. Would not 10 minutes on a side be sufficient?

Mr. DEMPSEY. That is a pretty short time in which to present the views that I want to present to the House. The committee has directed me unanimously to present the views of the committee. Mr. Speaker, at the suggestion of the floor leader, I would suggest to the gentleman from Massachusetts that we use 15 minutes on a side, that I use 10 minutes at first, that he then use his 15 minutes, and that I have the remaining 5 minutes in which to close.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from New York yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Ways and Means yesterday decided that they would submit to the House the claim of that committee for jurisdiction over the legislation on account of the bond issue involved. I see the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY], the chairman of the committee, has just come into the Chamber. I make this statement to preserve the rights of the Committee on Ways and Means in any discussion that is to be had.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman if that is not taking the Speaker somewhat by surprise?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I think the gentleman from Oregon would not be able to tell whether the Speaker is surprised or not.

Mr. HAWLEY. I merely rise to state the fact that the Committee on Ways and Means yesterday took that action.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, in view of this new angle that the matter has taken, would it not be just as well to have the matter go over for a few days? These gentlemen may be able to agree among themselves. Evidently three committees are now contending for jurisdiction of this legislation. There may be more eventually.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Speaker, may I ask what the proper procedure would be in such a case as this, where the matter takes a triangular form?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York gave notice that he would move a rereference of the report upon the St. Lawrence waterway from the Interstate Commerce Committee to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. The Chair was informed the other day that the Committee on Ways and Means had waived the claim, but he is now informed that the Committee on Ways and Means intend to insist upon it. Of course, any committee has the right to move a rereference to itself of legislation. However, unless some unanimous-consent arrangement is entered into the Chair does not see how more than one such motion can be pending at the same time.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, in order to give us a little more time to look into the matter, I ask that the matter go over for to-day, because we intend to insist that that portion of the legislation which relates to the issuing of bonds must go to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. DEMPSEY. The Committee on Rivers and Harbors is perfectly willing to have the matter go over, but we want to have it set for a definite time. We would like to have it heard on Thursday next, if it is possible.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Would it be in order for the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] to move as a substitute that the reference be to the Committee on Ways and Means, in lieu of the motion of the gentleman from New York?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it would.

Mr. BARKLEY. So that in that way the two propositions would be pending at the same time. Of course, they could not be voted on at the same time.

The SPEAKER. No; only one could be voted on at once.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from New York yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. I think it would be well if the gentleman from New York would withdraw his motion for the present, and that the chairmen of the three different committees meet to-day and arrange some time in the near future when the matter may be taken up.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Why can we not agree right now on the time?

Mr. MONDELL. I think that would be difficult in view of the parliamentary situation.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I mean as to time, simply.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman can make his motion at any time.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I know the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce is anxious to bring the matter up as speedily as possible.

Mr. FORDNEY. We will meet with the gentleman any time he suggests.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Then, say Thursday morning.

Mr. FORDNEY. All right. Thursday morning.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Thursday morning as soon as the Journal has been read.

Mr. FORDNEY. When do you want to meet in order to settle the question?

Mr. DEMPSEY. We will settle it right here. It is settled if it meets with the views of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WINSLOW].

Mr. DUPRÉ. There is no use of having any preliminary discussion with the Speaker. That has all been thrashed out.

Mr. FORDNEY. I just came in.

Mr. DUPRÉ. I very much regret that the gentleman is not aware of what has been going on.

Mr. WINSLOW. I would like to ask whether the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which the bill has been referred, is to meet all the contestants one at a time, or whether it is to be a free for all?

Mr. DUPRÉ. How would the gentleman like to have it? [Laughter.] Personally I should refuse to engage in any personal encounter with the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The SPEAKER. The regular order would be for the gentleman from New York [Mr. DEMPSEY] and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] to move to have it referred to their committee and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WINSLOW] to offer an amendment to refer it to his. Unless there is a unanimous-consent agreement, one of the gentlemen must move it be referred to his committee.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I have made such a motion, and my understanding is that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY], the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, will move to substitute that committee.

Mr. DUPRÉ. I think I may help the gentleman from New York [Mr. DEMPSEY] by saying that I think the majority will not object to the matter being disposed of this morning. [Laughter.] I will ask the gentleman from Wyoming if that is not true?

Mr. MONDELL. I have no objection to the matter being disposed of this morning. It would make no difference if I did object, if they insisted. I hope the gentleman will not take unnecessary time. I trust that the consideration of these matters may be made as brief as possible.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. DEMPSEY] put his motion now?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes; I make the motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York, as the Chair understands, moves that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce be discharged from the consideration of the report of the International Joint Commission and the same be referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, as a substitute, I move that the matter be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WALSH. Does that include pending measures that have been introduced?

Mr. DEMPSEY. The motion includes them.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that by unanimous consent that could be done. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. Of course the Chair in the future would be governed by the action of the House.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, the question now comes as to the time and distribution of the time.

The SPEAKER. That can be arranged by unanimous consent.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I ask unanimous consent that there be 45 minutes of time, 15 minutes to each of the three committees, and I ask that we be given the benefit of the division of the time, one speaker, as I understood, to be heard for each committee. And I ask in that connection——

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that each committee could dispose of its time as it desires.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. DEMPSEY] asks unanimous consent that each of the three committees be allowed 15 minutes in which to state its case. Is there objection?

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, because this is a very important matter, I think we should have somewhat more time than that. For instance, I happen to know very well my distinguished chairman, and if I know him as well on the floor as I know him in the committee, he will probably consume the whole 15 minutes himself. [Laughter.] It does seem, in justice to some of us who have had to sit under him, that we ought to have a little more time than that. I should think that an hour and a half would not be objectionable to the majority leader.

The SPEAKER. Of course the House knows that unless there is unanimous consent there can be no debate at all.

Mr. DUPRÉ. That is what I understand.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana asks unanimous consent that there be an hour and a half debate.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the regular order is to submit the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. DEMPSEY].

Mr. DEMPSEY. I think everybody would be satisfied to make it an hour, 20 minutes to each one, and then I can allow some time to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. DUPRÉ].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that an hour——

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman has already submitted a request. Has he withdrawn it?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I have modified it.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I shall have to object. I shall have to object to more than the original time in the original request of the gentleman from New York. I am perfectly willing to have the matter discussed for 45 minutes, which is all that the gentleman from New York asked for.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. DEMPSEY] asks unanimous consent that there be 45 minutes of time, 15 minutes to each side. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the House is going to have this proposition before it and hear this argument, I make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee makes the point of no quorum.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The roll was called, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Anderson	Hill	McSwain	Sanders, N. Y.
Brinson	Hooker	Mansfield	Shaw, Ill.
Britten	Hull	Morin	Sinclair
Brooks, Ill.	Husted	Mudd	Speaks
Brooks, Pa.	Johnson, S. Dak.	Nolan	Stiness
Burke	Kiess	Ogden	Sullivan
Clark, Fla.	Kitchin	Olpp	Swing
Classon	Kunz	Park, Ga.	Tague
Connell	Langley	Pringey	Taylor, Colo.
Copley	Lawrence	Purnell	Temple
Drane	Lee, N. Y.	Rainey, Ala.	Tyson
Dunbar	Lehlbach	Reavis	Vare
Edmonds	Lineberger	Reed, N. Y.	Volstead
Fess	Linthicum	Riddick	Ward, N. Y.
Funk	Luce	Riordan	Woodyard
Gilbert	McArthur	Rosenbloom
Gould	McFadden	Rucker
Hays	McPherson	Sabath

The SPEAKER. On this roll call 360 Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves to dispense with further proceedings under the call. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. DEMPSEY] is recognized.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, I understand the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] wishes to be recognized first.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan is recognized.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, the resolution in question relates to a matter that in my opinion does not belong to the Committee on Ways and Means, except that portion of the resolution that relates to a bond issue. Under the rules of the House all bills or resolutions affecting the revenues of the Government should go to the Committee on Ways and Means. The last two paragraphs of the resolution read as follows:

Resolved further, That the expenditure of the sum of $1,000,000 is hereby authorized to be paid from funds not otherwise appropriated, to be under the control of the American section of the International Board, to be transferred to the control of the International Board when completed by the legal appointment of the Canadian section of said International Board and the appropriation of an equal amount of money by the Dominion of Canada. This joint appropriation is to be used by the International Board for organization purposes and to start the work until additional funds are made available.

The resolution provides for the transfer of whatever money is appropriated for that purpose to that commission.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield and tell the House where that resolution was referred by the Speaker?

Mr. FORDNEY. I do not know where.

Mr. DUPRÉ. I should think you would know.

Mr. FORDNEY. It was referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Why?

Mr. FORDNEY. Ask the Speaker or somebody else who knows more about it than I.

The last paragraph reads:

Resolved further, That the International Board is hereby authorized to issue bonds, guaranteed by the United States of America and Great Britain, in an amount necessary to pay for the construction of the navigation and power works.

There is no estimate of the amount of money to be invested. By the time this work is completed it will cost a billion dollars. The Committee on Ways and Means is asking the House to refer to the Committee on Ways and Means that portion of the resolution that relates to the issuing of bonds. That is all.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. I yield.

Mr. MANN. Does not the gentleman from Michigan know that under the rules of the House it is customary to refer one part of a resolution to one committee and another part to another committee?

Mr. FORDNEY. I know that under the rules the President's message can be divided up and different portions of it sent to the proper committees having jurisdiction of such portions.

Mr. DEMPSEY. The bill on the China trade act was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, but it referred to the Committee on Ways and Means that portion which related to revenue.

Mr. FORDNEY. I think it would be proper, but at all events the Committee on Ways and Means is going to insist that that portion of the bill referring to a bond issue be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means. If it carries the whole bill, well and good. We do not want the bill, and do not believe that the balance of the bill relates to matters that should be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means; but certainly that portion relating to bond issues should go to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman's motion is to refer the whole subject matter to the Committee on Ways and Means. Why does not the gentleman make a motion to refer that part of the President's message and the accompanying documents relating to the issuance of bonds to the Committee on Ways and Means?

Mr. FORDNEY. I do not remember just why I did not do that, but that is water that is over the dam.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. BURTON. Is it not true that before the question of the bond issue can be raised certain preliminary questions must be determined?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. BURTON. As to adjustments with Canada or Great Britain as to the relative part which each country shall have in the construction of the canal?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. BURTON. Is it not true that there is included in that an adjustment of boundaries?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. BURTON. And a division of waterpower created?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes. I will say to the gentleman from Ohio that there are many questions involved. The only one that I am contending should go to the Committee on Ways and Means is the bond issue for the raising of the money. Whether that is for payment of the expenses of the preliminary examination or the permanent construction of this waterway, the bond issue belongs to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. BURTON. It is clear that numerous questions, such as the division of the amount to be raised by each country, must be determined before that question of a bond issue is pending before the House or is reported.

Mr. FORDNEY. But it provides for the authorization or transfer of $1,000,000. There must be a bond issue to get that money.

Mr. BURTON. The question of the construction of the Great Lakes waterway comes before this body, in the first place, not through a bill but through a message of the President of the United States transmitting certain documents. That is a mere incident. I may say further that there is yet the question of whether the canal is to be built to be decided before bonds are issued.

Mr. FORDNEY. Before a preliminary examination is made this money must be raised, and it must be raised by a bond issue.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. When was the suggestion made in the Committee on Ways and Means that this resolution be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means?

Mr. FORDNEY. Just a few moments ago it was suggested.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I myself was not present at the meeting of the committee when that was done.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Michigan will permit, I may say that it was at a meeting of the committee on the day before yesterday, when the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] presided over the meeting of the committee. We should not be overtechnical. The Nation wants the St. Lawrence deep waterway.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP]. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I have no personal interest in this controversy, and I realize fully that it is a case in which three or four committees can properly claim jurisdiction of the subject matter.

And while I have the utmost confidence in and respect for the judgment of the Speaker, and conceding there are reasons why he is justified in sending this case to the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, in my judgment the proper committee to handle this report is the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. [Applause.] It frequently happens that bills are introduced in this House containing provisions that might properly go to one of two or three committees; and as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] said a few moments ago to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY], it is impossible to divide up a bill and send part of it to one committee and part of it to another. In this controversy before the House the provision in the report authorizing the issuing of bonds, of course, comes properly within the jurisdiction of the Ways and Means Committee. The provision for canal construction and for the transmission of hydroelectric power is within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, but that part providing for the improvement of the St. Lawrence River and harbors is purely a river-and-harbor proposition. Now, the rules of the House say that any legislation for the improvement of rivers and harbors comes within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. In my judgment there is only one course to pursue in cases where a bill or document is before the House containing different subject matters that might go to one of two or three committees, and that is to send it to the committee that has jurisdiction of the prime or principal subject matter of the bill. Now, the committee having jurisdiction of the principal object of this report is the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, because all must concede that the prime object of this international waterway project is the improvement of the St. Lawrence River and of the harbors on the Great Lakes for navigation purposes. These other matters flow from that. Therefore I think the Committee on Rivers and Harbors is entitled to handle the proposition. [Applause.]

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask the Chair to be good enough to advise me when I have used six minutes.

Gentlemen of the House, the history of this reference is as follows: In 1919 there was included in the river and harbor bill a provision referring to the International Joint Commission an investigation of the question as to what further improvement of the St. Lawrence River between Montreal and Lake Ontario is necessary to make the same navigable for ocean-going vessels.

There is your basis. That is what you start with. You start with a provision in the river and harbor bill for 1919. In pursuance of that provision the International Joint Commission made its report. It was brought before this body and was referred by the Speaker, and it is interesting to review what the Speaker had to say in making the reference. Now, what did he refer? He referred "the report of the International Joint Commission relative to the improvement of the St. Lawrence River and navigation from the Great Lakes to the sea." That is how he defined it, and he defined it in accordance with the terms of the report. It was the improvement of the St. Lawrence River, and navigation from the Great Lakes to the sea. Then the Speaker came to the reasons for referring this report, based on that provision of the river and harbor act of 1919, to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. These are the reasons—

Because it seems to the Chair a main and dominant feature of the subject is the great Welland Canal.

Let us take the language of the report and see what they say about the great Welland Canal. They say that—the new Welland Ship Canal be embodied in said scheme and included as a part thereof.

In other words, we open this project, the St. Lawrence scheme, and we embody and entomb and inclose in it the new Welland Ship Canal; and it is such a small part of the St. Lawrence scheme that it is embodied and swallowed up and engulfed in the scheme, yet the Welland Canal is denominated as a main and controlling and paramount feature of this report.

Moreover, the report expressly recommends that the construction of the Welland Canal be completed by Canada alone so that all this country will have to do with the Welland Canal will be to help pay the cost of construction, and that is a matter for the Ways and Means Committee and not for the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Now, let us come to the second reason, which is the creation and transmission of power. The International Joint Commission is undoubtedly the best judge of what importance the production and transmission of power are in this project. It has spoken on this subject, and I prefer not to characterize it myself but to turn to the report of the commission for its description of the part which power development plays in this project.

Mr. BURTNESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. No; I prefer not to yield. I have not the time. I quote from the report of the commission as follows:

Obviously—

I ask gentleman who have the report to refer to page 342—

the first consideration is to take care of the "interests of navigation, and water power is only to be considered in so far as its development is not inconsistent"— with the primary purposes of navigation.

With what?—

Why, is there anyone on this floor to-day who is in favor of the St. Lawrence route for power purposes? Does not that query answer itself? Is not the purpose of this project to send the wheat and send the grain and send the many products of the Northwest and the Middle West down the Great Lakes and then down the St. Lawrence to the sea? Is there anyone who claims that the dominant, controlling purpose which has inspired this project and which enables it to exist, is water power? Is that the dominant, controlling purpose back of this project?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has used six minutes.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I thank the Chair. I will use but a moment more. Yet these are the two reasons which are assigned for referring this report to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

I reserve the remainder of my time and yield five minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. DUPRÉ].

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Just what is the motion before the House?

The SPEAKER. The motion is to refer the report of the International Waterways Commission, and such bills or resolutions as relate thereto, to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and this is amended by the motion of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] to refer it to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Would it be in order to subdivide the motion so as to refer certain portions of the report to one committee and certain portions to another?

The SPEAKER. The Chair hardly sees how that can be done. It does not seem to the Chair at first blush that that could be done.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Speaker, the inquiry of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] just now makes it important that the case should be stated here. The report of the International High Commission came to this House.

Among other things that came in was the bill introduced by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CHALMERS]. The Speaker, after hearing the controversy from three standpoints, not including, as I recollect, the Committee on Railways and Canals, referred this report, and therefore, as he has very properly said, will refer other bills on the subject, to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. How he ever came to that conclusion is a matter that he and his parliamentary adviser will decide. After the statement of the gentleman from New York, who is very much more amiable than I am, he certainly could not have done it on the theory that the proposition which was conferred to that commission was not one that did not emanate from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, which primarily was given authority to decide, with approval of the House, that the navigability of the St. Lawrence was the matter at issue, and, as the gentleman from New York [Mr. DEMPSEY] well said, it required the Speaker and his parliamentary adviser to find in some remote corner of the report that hydroelectric energy had to be generated after some remote time in order to send this matter to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. I can conceive how the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] could make a point that this measure should have been referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, but even that seems to have gone by, and yet it is the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, the very committee which in the nature of things knows more about it, at least should know more about it, and that committee has been ignored in the premises.

Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. CLOUSE].

Mr. CLOUSE. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has two minutes.

Mr. CLOUSE. Mr. Speaker, of course I can not begin to say anything on this question in two minutes' time, but it seems to me that the controlling question in this reference is that of navigation. The issuance of bonds will never be necessary unless it is first determined that the improvement of the St. Lawrence is a practical and advisable one. The negotiation of a treaty with Canada will never be necessary unless it is first determined as an elementary proposition that the improvement of the St. Lawrence River and the Great Lakes is a practical scheme. Therefore it seems to me that the reference should be made to the Rivers and Harbors Committee of the House, who are studying and have studied the conditions of navigation all over the country, the internal rivers, the improvement of harbors, and are in a better position to know about the advisability of this scheme than any other committee of the House. [Applause.]

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, it is not for me to tell you what actuated the Speaker in coming to a decision.

It is perhaps worth while to note that he has come to a decision, and on slight reflection I think we can put a good deal of confidence in his conclusions in this matter or any other. This bill proposes various more or less indefinite things, but when you work it down to the heart it involves just two main propositions. One is commerce in connection with which transportation and navigation are to be considered, and the other is hydroelectric power. Both of these subjects with various subdivisions are the work of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee. We are likely to have in this bill the consideration of railroad competition and all that means, telegraph and telephone lines, and it may be cables, all of which have been considered in the past, as long as any of us can remember, by the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee. The work of the Interstate Commerce Commission will also be involved. Not one of these subjects has ever been considered by any other committee of this House. Such is the kernel of the whole thing. We may have some foreign relations to take up, but the State Department will attend to that, no matter what committee has the bill. It may be that there will be an improvement of some harbor incidentally. The point which any committee will have to finally determine is this: Is it worth while for the United States, for the benefit of commerce, for the benefit of hydroelectric power in sections that can be favorably served, to undertake this proposition of the construction of a canal, and so forth?

For my part, I can not understand why the incidental work of foreign relations or foreign affairs, or the consideration of a possible bond issue, should interfere with this reference.

Get into your minds what it is that we are really to accomplish, not think unduly of the little frills, really no more than tags onto the tail of the kite. We believe, not by reason of superior ability but by training, men who have been brought up in the Interstate Commerce Committee dealing with the subjects really at the heart of this general proposition, are best equipped to handle legislation of this character.

Mr. CLOUSE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINSLOW. For a brief question.

Mr. CLOUSE. The report of the joint commission is directed to the improvement of the St. Lawrence River for the purposes of navigation.

Mr. WINSLOW. Well, say that it is.

Mr. CLOUSE. What end are you going to consider from, the development of the power project or the improvement of the river?

Mr. WINSLOW. I say that if we wish to develop it it must first be determined if we think it wise to develop it for the purposes represented to us as desirable. All these concrete considerations fall under the jurisdiction of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Mr. SCOTT of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINSLOW. Yes.

Mr. SCOTT of Michigan. This project is not a river and harbor project within the United States, but it is an international waterway proposition.

Mr. WINSLOW. Absolutely, and no other committee has any business with legislation dealing with interstate and foreign commercial matters.

I yield seven minutes to the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. MAPES, a member of the committee.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, there might be more uncertainty about this question than there is if it were a new question in the House of Representatives, but the matter is not new. Similar matters have been before the House of Representatives for a number of years, and the almost unbroken line of precedents is in favor of the reference to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce which the Speaker has made. Gentlemen will be impressed with the fact, I think, that the gentlemen who have argued in favor of a reference of this matter to other committees have in no single instance cited a precedent for their argument or their conclusion. Hinds' Precedents says:

The Committee on Rivers and Harbors does not have jurisdiction of the subject of canals, and may not include provisions therefor in river and harbor appropriation bills.

Two precedents are cited for that statement, one where a provision was carried in the river and harbor appropriation bill to provide for the Hennepin Canal. It went out on a point of order on the ground that the committee had no jurisdiction of the matter. Later, in 1907, the same question came up on an amendment offered by Mr. J. Warren Keifer, of Ohio, to amend a river and harbor bill by inserting a provision to construct a canal to connect the Ohio River and Lake Erie, by way of the Miami River. Mr. MANN made the point of order against that amendment, citing the Hennepin Canal precedent. The Chairman of the committee sustained the point of order. He said:

It is perfectly clear to the Chair that this is not within the jurisdiction of this committee.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAPES. I am sorry, but I have only seven minutes, and I must decline to yield. I hope the gentleman will pardon me. To show that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce ought to retain jurisdiction of this matter, I desire to call attention to the Panama Canal legislation, to the Nicaragua Canal project, and other canal legislation. Such legislation has been practically invariably referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce for a great many years.

Almost the same identical question as we are now considering has been before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce in two former Congresses, and was reported on by that committee without any question as to its jurisdiction. In 1892 Mr. Lind, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, reported a joint resolution to promote the improvement of the waterway from the head of Lake Superior by way of the Welland and St. Lawrence Canals and the St. Lawrence River to the sea—almost the identical proposition that is before us to-day. The body of that resolution goes on to say that the President of the United States be, and is hereby, requested to invite negotiations with the Government of the Dominion of Canada to secure the speedy improvement of the Welland and St. Lawrence Canals and the St. Lawrence River.

In 1895 a Senate joint resolution came over from the Senate authorizing a preliminary inquiry concerning a deep waterway between the ocean and the Great Lakes and providing commissioners therefor. That resolution was referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and that committee, after considering the same, reported it out favorably. No question was raised as to the jurisdiction of the committee to consider that legislation. The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce does not dispute the fact that the bond provision of this proposed legislation, if it ever comes to that point, ought to be handled by the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAPES. Yes.

Mr. YOUNG. I am in sympathy with the gentleman's argument, but I would like to ask this question: Will the gentleman's committee be willing to submit that question to the Committee on Ways and Means informally?

Mr. MAPES. I can not speak for the committee, but I have no doubt that the matter would in due course of time get before the Committee on Ways and Means. However, the legislation authorizing the construction of the Panama Canal was reported by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce without any part of it being referred to the Committee on Ways and Means. That legislation passed the House of Representatives without any bond provision. The bond section was put on as an amendment in the Senate, and was adopted by the House of Representatives without reference to the Committee on Ways and Means. What will happen in this case I can not tell, but there is a lot of preliminary investigation to be made. The International Joint Commission has not made any definite, concrete report or recommendation. It has made a general survey of the situation and referred the matter back to Congress. Its conclusion, almost the last thing it says in its report, after 300 typewritten pages of matter, is this:

Finally, the commission is strongly of the opinion that the subject matter of this investigation is one of such extraordinary importance to the people of the two countries, and involves engineering problems of such magnitude and diversity, that no effort should be spared to secure a plan which will beyond all reasonable doubt obtain from the upper St. Lawrence its maximum efficiency in navigation and power.

There is nothing said in that about "bonded indebtedness"; there is nothing said in that about the improvement of any river. It is a proposition to investigate and report a plan to secure the maximum efficiency in "navigation and power" of this route from the Great Lakes to the ocean by way of the St. Lawrence River. [Applause.]

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the Speaker of the House the other day when this message from the President and the report of the commission came in withheld its reference temporarily. After hearing from various gentlemen who urged the reference to different committees, the Speaker, impartially, having in mind the practice and the precedents of the House, referred the matter to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. Personally, I am thoroughly satisfied that that is the correct reference under all of the precedents of the House.

The Committee on Rivers and Harbors has jurisdiction over the improvements of the rivers and harbors in the United States. They have no jurisdiction over the question of what is a navigable river. That question, raised, goes to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. They have no jurisdiction over aids to navigation like lighthouses, life-saving stations, and so forth. Jurisdiction over that subject is with the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. Under all of the precedents of the House the Committee on Rivers and Harbors has jurisdiction only over the improvement of rivers and harbors in the United States, and they have a privileged status to report a bill to that effect.

The Panama Canal legislation, involving millions, was referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, which always has had jurisdiction over all matters relating to it. The proposition now pending here is not a matter for the engineers of the War Department to pass on offhand. If this great work shall be concluded, it will not be commenced tomorrow without consideration. It will require long study on the part of many people—not an offhand proposition like the ordinary improvement of a river and harbor. Under all the practice of the House the reference made by the Speaker was correct, though I personally am of the opinion that it would have been proper to refer that part of the message and accompanying documents relating to the issuance of bonds to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield two and one-half minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN].

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman from New York [Mr. DEMPSEY] was correct in saying that the most important matter contained in the bill ought to determine its reference, provided there be no way of separating the parts that belong to different committees. Whether or not there may be a separation of those matters and a reference to the different committees I shall not undertake to say at this time. That matter may arise hereafter, depending on how this motion is disposed of. I do undertake to say, however, that if the matter is to be treated as a whole the reference ought to be to the Committee on Ways and Means. The jurisdiction of that committee as applied to the bill under consideration is not confused with that of any other committee whatever. The rules require that measures pertaining to the bonded debt must be referred to the Ways and Means Committee. There is not the slightest conflict, not the slightest bit of overlapping, with reference to that.

With respect to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce there may be points where it is difficult to determine where the jurisdiction of one begins and the other leaves off, but with respect to the bonded debt of the Nation there is no question of dispute about that. Bills pertaining to the bonded debt of the Government must be referred to the Ways and Means Committee, and which, in my opinion, is also the place where the action on the bill ought to start. The first thing to determine is whether we want to increase the bonded debt of the Nation, or whether, on the contrary, we are in a position at this time to undertake to determine that question. If the bill is considered in this manner, as I think it should be, the reference will be to the Ways and Means Committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes and a half to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH].

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I am sorry I do not find myself in exact accord either with my colleague from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] or my colleague from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY]. It seems to me that the best interests of this whole matter can best be served at this time by voting down both amendments and leaving the general jurisdiction of this whole matter to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. However, I am firmly of the belief that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr.

FORDNEY] is right; that eventually, where this bond issue is to be considered, it ought to be considered by the Ways and Means Committee. I intend, if some other gentleman does not do so, to move, if these two amendments shall fail, to refer that portion of the message and accompanying documents which deal with the question of a bond issue, to the Ways and Means Committee. But it does seem to me that at this time, where we have not the faintest notion as to the amount that is going to be involved, it will be wise to determine first whether or not we should adopt the contemplated project. If so, how much we are justified in expending upon it. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] said that he had heard that eventually this might cost a billion dollars. I do not know how much it is going to cost, but it seems to me before we determine upon a bond issue we should have some competent committee, with thorough jurisdiction of the subject, investigate the whole matter of the question of policy, and then we can determine as to how much it may cost and as to whether we are justified in issuing the requisite number of bonds.

Mr. BURTON. There has been an estimate made of $252,000,000 instead of $1,000,000,000, so that the amount we may use is within limits after careful investigation.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I confess utter ignorance on my own part as to how much this will eventually cost. It only shows there is great difference of opinion, and it seems to me the question of policy should be determined before the question of the bond issue.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WALSH). The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Four minutes.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, I will first answer the argument of the gentleman from Illinois, who said that the jurisdiction of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors was confined to waterways within the United States. If the gentleman will refer to Hinds' Precedents, volume 4, section 4126, he will find this:

> The Committee on Rivers and Harbors has exercised jurisdiction over legislation inviting the Government of Great Britain to join in the formation of an international commission to investigate into the conditions and uses of the waters on the boundary line whose outlet is the St. Lawrence River, and as to the advisability of locating a dam at the outlet of Lake Erie.

I wish further to say that the International Joint Waterways Commission was formed in 1902 by a provision of the rivers and harbors act. That commission made its reports—and it made several—to this House, and in each instance they were referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. Not only was that the uniform practice of this House but even in one instance where the Senate referred that report to the Committee on Foreign Affairs the House preserved its uniformity of action and referred its report to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Now, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WINSLOW] says that we may deal with telephone lines, we may have telegraph lines, we may have a variety of other things growing out of this report. That is all true. We do not know what we may have, but we do know what this report is, and it is this report we are considering, and this report does not mention telegraph lines; it does not mention telephone lines; it does not mention other means of commerce. It confines itself to the improvement of the St. Lawrence route, which was the only matter referred to it, and all that it had jurisdiction to consider, and to the improvement of that route for navigation purposes, and it says that the question of water-power development is entirely subsidiary to that.

The gentleman from Michigan says that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors never have had jurisdiction of canals. I will take the time of the House to read a list of the canals which have been improved under the jurisdiction of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, as follows: Albemarle & Chesapeake Canal, Bee Tree Shoals Canal, Benton Harbor Canal, Black Rock Canal and Ferry Street Bridge, Calaveras River, Cape Cod Canal, Cascades Canal, Chesapeake & Delaware Canal, Colbert Shoals Canal, Dalles-Celilo Canal, Des Moines Rapids Canal and Dry Dock, Dismal Swamp Canal, Elk River Shoals Canal, Estherville-Minin Creek Canal, Illinois & Mississippi Canal, Lake Washington Canal, Muscle Shoals Canal, Portage Lake Canals, Port Arthur Ship Canal, Sabine-Neches Canal, and St. Mary's Falls Canal.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] to the motion offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. DEMPSEY]. The amendment of the gentleman from Michigan is that the report of the International Joint Commission and proposed legislation relating thereto be referred from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to the Committee on Ways and Means.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York that the report of the International Joint Commission and legislation relating thereto be referred from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 74, noes 153.

So the motion was rejected.

Mr. LONGWORTH rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WALSH). For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I rise to move that such portion of this report and accompanying documents as refers to the question of a bond issue be rereferred from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to the Committee on Ways and Means.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio moves that such portion of this report and accompanying documents as refers to the question of a bond issue be rereferred from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. STAFFORD. A question of order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STAFFORD. The House having virtually by vote decided on that proposal adversely, is it in order now to bring it up anew?

Mr. MANN. The House did not decide.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not understand that the House passed upon that question.

Mr. BARKLEY. Did the gentleman's motion include all bills and joint resolutions?

Mr. LONGWORTH. All questions referring to a bond issue.

Mr. BARKLEY. That report is one thing and the resolution is another.

Mr. LONGWORTH. That is a question.

Mr. BARKLEY. I make the point that the report and the resolution both having been disposed of already, they can not be dissected and part referred to a different committee.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, the motion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH], as I understand it, relates to the message of the President and the documents accompanying that, and not to the bill. Logically I think there is no question but that the gentleman's motion should prevail, but I can see where its prevailing will bring the Speaker face to face with the question as to where he shall refer bills that make reference to a bond issue. We can not divide the bill that has been referred, as I understand. Whether that is going to follow with other bills, I do not know.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Under the old practice the House passed a resolution referring the President's message, such parts of it relating to so-and-so, to certain committees, and——

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. MANN. If the House determines that the main issue here goes to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, that is where bills referring to that measure will go, although they may have attached features relating to a bond issue. So far as the reference of the bond issue is concerned, I think it ought to be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to proceed for two additional minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Of course, the importance of this matter lies in the possibilities of future action and the status of bills that may be reported upon the subject matter. If a bill carrying a revenue proposition were reported from the Committee on Ways and Means the question would arise as to whether it was privileged. It might, of course, be reported from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, but it probably would not be.

Mr. MANN. It would not be privileged if coming from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors or any other committee.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr.. DEMPSEY. The gentleman is familiar with the fact that the China trade bill was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and that that committee referred the revenue feature to the Committee on Ways and Means?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Why could not that which was done in practice between committees be as well done by the Presiding Officer of the House and the House itself?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. As a matter of fact, I assume that if any legislation comes out of this matter at all it probably will not carry a bond issue, and that that matter will be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, as a matter of fact, before it is passed upon by the House.

Mr. MANN. Then, why not do the proper thing under the old precedent, to refer that part of it to the Committee on Ways and Means? It would not hamper the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I think that would be logical, but I was referring simply to the question of the position it would leave the Speaker in with respect to the reference of the bond issue.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] that such portion of the President's message and the report of the International Commission and the accompanying documents as refers to a bond issue be rereferred from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to the Committee on Ways and Means.

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the "noes" appeared to have it.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, let us have a division.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A division is demanded.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 129, noes 41.

So the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The rereference is made.

Mr. DEMPSEY rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman from New York rise?

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I move, Mr. Speaker, that the portion of the report of the International Joint Commission referring to the scheme of improvement on the St. Lawrence River between Montreal and Lake Ontario be rereferred from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York moves that such portion of the report of the International Joint Commission as relates to the improvement of the St. Lawrence River between Montreal and Lake Ontario be rereferred from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The question was taken, and the motion was rejected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ANNOUNCEMENT.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa, by unanimous consent, is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, there has been a call for a conference of the majority. It seems to be understood that it was called for Wednesday night. Instead of that, it is called for Thursday night. In order that there may be no misapprehension of the matter, I desire to state that the conference is called for Thursday night at 8 o'clock.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 6119. An act for the coinage of a Grant souvenir gold dollar in commemoration of the centenary of the birth of Gen. Ulysses S. Grant, late President of the United States; and

H. R. 244. An act to provide for the disposition of abandoned portions of rights of way granted to railroad companies.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendment to the bill (H. R. 9724) making appropriations for the Treasury Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. WARREN, Mr. JONES of Washington, and Mr. HARRIS as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 6262. An act to add certain lands to Mount McKinley National Park, Alaska;

H. R. 4598. An act to provide for the exchange of Government lands for privately owned lands in the Territory of Hawaii;

H. R. 1460. An act for the relief of the William Gordon Corporation;

H. R. 1459. An act for the relief of Charles R. Powell;

H. R. 2865. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to sell and patent to J. D. Calhoun, of Lincoln Parish, La., certain lands;

H. R. 7290. An act to confirm private land claim of the widow and heirs of Joseph Etier;

H. R. 7600. An act authorizing the adjustment of the boundaries of the Deschutes National Forest in the State of Oregon, and for other purposes;

H. R. 1318. An act granting to certain claimants the preferential right to purchase certain alleged public lands in the State of Arkansas, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 9050. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Pamunkey Ferry Co. to construct a bridge across the Pamunkey River in Virginia.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills, joint resolution, and concurrent resolution of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 2774. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes,' approved June 3, 1916, and to establish military justice," approved June 4, 1920;

S. 1034. An act to establish a game sanctuary in the watershed of the South Fork of the Flathead River in the Flathead National Forest to perpetuate a breeding place for game animals;

S. 2147. An act to patent to the Ed E. Richardson Co. (Inc.) certain lands;

S. 2471. An act to amend the act entitled "An act authorizing the survey and sale of certain lands in Coconino County, Ariz., to the occupants thereof," approved July 28, 1914 (38 Stats. L., 558);

S. 1878. An act to permit the State of Montana to exchange cut-over timberlands granted for educational purposes for other lands of like character and approximate value;

S. 2411. An act to vacate certain streets and alleys within the area known as the Walter Reed General Hospital, District of Columbia, and to authorize the extension and widening of Fourteenth Street from Montague Street to its southern terminus south of Dahlia Street, Nicholson Street from Thirteenth Street to Sixteenth Street, Colorado Avenue from Montague Street to Thirteenth Street, Concord Avenue from Sixteenth Street to its western terminus west of Eighth Street west, Thirteenth Street from Nicholson Street to Piney Branch Road, and Piney Branch Road from Thireenth Street to Blair Road, and for other purposes;

S. 2556. An act for the relief of Edwin Gantner;

S. 2736. An act providing for the conveyance of certain unused military reservations in the State of Massachusetts to the city of Salem and the town of Marblehead;

S. 2810. An act to amend and reenact section 113 of chapter 5 of the Judicial Code of the United States, as amended and reenacted by an act approved the 22d of August, 1914;

S. 2173. An act to loan to the College of William and Mary, in Virginia, two of the cannon surrendered by the British at Yorktown on October 19, 1781;

S. 2616. An act to empower the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to convey certain land;

S. 1074. An act to prescribe the method of capital punishment in the District of Columbia;

S. 1312. An act to amend the charter of the Potomac Insurance Co., of the District of Columbia;

Senate concurrent resolution 1.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That legislation dealing with private pensions, either original or increases, with private claims, and with the distribution of war trophies to municipalities or organizations, shall hereafter be initiated by petition upon suitable forms provided for that purpose, which petition shall be referred to its appropriate committee without printing other than by title in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD; and that any bill resulting therefrom shall be printed only when reported favorably by the committee—to the Committee on Rules.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the independent offices appropriation bill (H. R. 9981).

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of H. R. 9981, with Mr. TOWNER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

For all other authorized expenditures of the Federal Trade Commission in performing the duties imposed by law or in pursuance of law, including personal and other services, supplies and equipment, law books, books of reference, periodicals, printing and binding, garage rental, traveling expenses, including actual expenses at not to exceed $5 per day or per diem in lieu of subsistence not to exceed $4, newspapers, foreign postage, and witness fees and mileage in accordance with section 9 of the Federal Trade Commission act, $800,000.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last line.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves to strike out the last line.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I realize that in a bill of this character nothing can be done affecting the organic act establishing these various boards and commissions, but I would like to ask the committee having this matter in charge whether or not the Government is getting a fair return for such an appropriation as this? In line 3, on page 11, we allow $55,000 for salaries of the Federal Trade Commissioners, and then we make a lump-sum appropriation of $800,000 for the general expenses of that commission. As nearly as I have been able to find out, the greater part of the work of the Federal Trade Commission is hamstringing business. I myself have not seen much else as the result of this board's activities during its period of life. To-day is a time when business ought to be encouraged and not discouraged, and every minute detail of the manner in which business is conducted should not be subjected to the review of such a commission as this. As I look over the report of the Federal Trade Commission it seems to me that the job which that commission conceives to be its duty is largely to make trouble for business. If there is one thing that wants to be done in this country it is to reverse that policy; and while to-day in the consideration of this bill, of course, nothing can be done except to vote the necessary appropriations for the support of such a commission as this, I for one wish to record my opposition to the continuation of such boards whatever their name may be or whatever may be their activities. We have gone the limit in regulating affairs of a private character and of a business nature purely, through some official head here in Washington, and I object to a continuation of that policy. I would like the gentleman having the bill in charge to explain the activities of the Federal Trade Commission and to state whether in his judgment the Government is receiving $855,000 of value from a continuation of such a commission.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is recognized.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Chairman, it was my purpose to offer an amendment increasing the appropriation in line 13 to $900,000 instead of $800,000. I want to state to my friend from Massachusetts that this is the estimate of Mr. Dawes, who seems to be as explicit and accurate in his estimates as he sometimes is in the language he employs.

With reference to the statement which my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] makes that this Federal Trade Commission is destroying business or interfering with business, I want to say that it was through the Federal Trade Commission that the public were given the truth relative to the immense profits made by the packers of this country and their combination to fix prices on live stock. Was that disturbing legitimate business? Until the Federal Trade Commission made its report the packers gave out the statement broadcast throughout this country that they were making only $1 a head on the slaughtering of animals; but the evidence taken by the Federal Trade Commission showed that the profits of the five big packers of this country were between 6, 8, and 10 per cent on capital invested. In making that finding they did not take into consideration the branch businesses of the packers in Argentina and other South American countries where the reports of the Federal Trade Commission show that they have made as high as 30 per cent, as I now recall. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts state here that the Federal Trade Commission in giving those facts to the people concerning the profits of the packers of this country was disturbing legitimate business? Mr. Wilson, the representative of one of the big packing concerns, stated before the farmers' congress yesterday that his packing concern last year lost $30,000,000. I want to say to you that if Mr. Wilson's concern lost $30,000,000, it was not reflected in the prices that the cattlemen and the sheepmen got for their products. If Mr. Wilson's concern lost $30,000,000, the cattlemen and the sheepmen lost 50 to 75 per cent on the price of their products below what they were in prewar times. I want to state to the gentleman from Massachusetts that I think this estimate given by Mr. Dawes for the expenses of the Federal Trade Commission should be reinstated, and that this great commission in its efforts to give the people the truth should not be "ham strung" as he says they are "ham-stringing business."

Now, gentlemen, I am not an enemy of the packers; neither am I an enemy of any legitimate interest, be it large or small, in this country. I simply desire that this Federal Trade Commission be not hampered by a curtailment of its estimated appropriation so that it can not investigate when the people are being imposed upon by profiteers and unscrupulous concerns and shed the true light upon their transactions. Let me call your attention to the action of this committee in its treatment of the Federal Trade Commission in cutting off $100,000 from the Budget submitted by Mr. Dawes and its liberal treatment of the Shipping Board. The salary given the lawyers in the Shipping Board run as high as $11,000 a year and average as a whole, so I am informed, $8,000 per year. The salaries of the lawyers in the Federal Trade Commission average $3,400. Will any man contend that the legal help in the Trade Commission do not have to cope with as strong legal talent on the other side as the lawyers in the Shipping Board? Yet, Mr. Chairman, so far as I can find from reading these hearings, this $100,000 was lopped off from the Trade Commission's estimate without rhyme or reason.

Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. HUDSPETH. I should like to offer an amendment.

Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin. I am offering an amendment which I think is along the same line as that which the gentleman proposes.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Increasing the appropriation?

Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin: On page 11, line 13, after the word "act," strike out "$800,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$900,000."

Mr. HUDSPETH. That is the amendment I intended to offer.

Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, this amendment simply proposes to reinstate the amount of the appropriation of last year of $900,000. I want to say that the Dawes Commission, as the gentleman from Texas remarked, left the appropriation at $900,000. The Dawes Commission, it is needless to remark, was not a very sympathetic commission and had its pruning knife out to cut off unnecessary expenses. There has not been a time in the history of this country when the services of the Trade Commission are as much demanded and as greatly needed as at this time. What does this Trade Commission do? What are some of its many duties? For one thing it prevents unjust competition. Another thing, it investigates foreign competition and foreign trade. Another thing, it has the enforcement of the antitrust law. Every one of these duties are very important and are absolutely necessary at this time if we expect business to revive.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I would like to call the gentleman's attention to what Mr. Gaskill said to the chairman, Mr. WOOD. Last year they had between 600 and 700 more applications for matters to investigate than any other year. Besides, additional duties were placed upon them, under the Ladd resolution to investigate the Furniture Trust and to investigate the Flour Trust, and yet the appropriation is cut 10 per cent. This cut of 10 per cent in this appropriation is without rhyme or reason.

Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin. The gentleman is correct. Only a short time ago a number of new duties were placed upon the Federal Trade Commission. They were asked to investigate the Flour Trust, to investigate the manipulation of foreign markets in regard to grain. I hold in my hand the decision of the Federal Trade Commission just rendered in regard to the conditions in the tobacco industry. What does that decision hold? It holds that the old Tobacco Trust, which we thought had been dissolved a number of years ago, is still alive and still keeping up prices of manufactured tobacco and holding down the price of the raw material raised by the farmers. The jobbers are in the combine, and this decision holds that they are guilty of a conspiracy. The Federal Trade Commission tried to get the correspondence between these different tobacco corporations, but their safes were locked, and some of the very important letters and documents were destroyed. The commission, however, got enough evidence to show conclusively that the great Tobacco Trust is still alive.

Investigations of that kind bring hope to the producers of all agricultural products. We know to-day that the price that the farmer is getting for his products is far below the cost of production. Farming is not paying a living wage. The high cost of living stands about as it did a few years ago. Go down to the Center Market with your basket and you will buy what you eat very little cheaper than you did a few years ago. The Federal Trade Commission is the organization that points out all these things. We would not have the facts upon which we passed the legislation against the packers if it had not been for the Federal Trade Commission. They had one of the most bitter fights that every took place in this country in obtaining these facts. To-day this administration is boasting that one of its greatest achievements is the packer legislation, but it would not have had that legislation if it had not been for the Federal Trade Commission. And yet this committee proposes to cut their appropriation 10 per cent.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. Speaking of packer legislation and the wonderful benefits that have resulted from it, I would like to know what the gentleman bases that information upon. I know, so far as my own observation goes, that I have seen the price of hogs and cattle go down, and sheep go down, and every other meat product go down since the passage of that law.

Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin. That legislation did not go as far as some Members thought it ought to go, but it went far enough, so that the packers are here trying to have the decree modified and asking the Attorney General to modify it in that respect. I say to-day that there are complaints made by five or six legislatures in Western States asking this Federal Trade Commission to begin certain activities—one against the steel companies for their ruling in regard to the "Pittsburgh base" freight proposition—which holds that, no matter if the steel is produced at Gary, Ill., or any other place far away from Pittsburgh, the freight from Pittsburgh shall be added to the price, which makes a difference of $7.60 a ton on steel. As I say, there are many of these activities now under way and I have not heard any criticism to speak of except from people or corporations who are violating the law and who have been exposed by the ruling of the Federal Trade Commission and the unfair combinations that have been trying to wring out of the people unjust profits, until I heard my friend from Massachusetts complain that the Federal Trade Commission was hamstringing business.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I ask for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I want to say in regard to the expenses of this Federal Trade Commission that $900,000, compared with the money they have saved the people, is negligible. Let us examine what lawyers of this commission are paid. The average price paid the lawyers connected with the Federal Trade Commission—and they had to fight some of the greatest trusts and combinations in the country—is $3,400. The average price paid for economic force is only $2,300, while the administration service is paid $1,400. Contrast these salaries with the prices paid by the Shipping Board. The statement was made a day or two ago on this floor, and was not contradicted, that the Shipping Board are employing 78 attorneys and paying them $600,000 a year. Contrast this with the Federal Trade Commission force that has to meet the best lawyers in the land, and has new and difficult legal questions to decide. A great many of their cases have gone to the Supreme Court of the United States. If a decree is not paid any attention to they have to proceed by mandamus for the United States Circuit Court of Appeals to enforce their decrees. It takes good lawyers to meet what they are up against.

If you cut their appropriation down 10 per cent, you cut down by 10 per cent their activities. I have a letter here from the chairman of this commission. I asked him if it would make any particular difference in regard to their activites, and he said, "Yes"; that it would; that they would have to practically cut down a great many of their activities. I do not believe the people of this country at this time, when the high cost of living has mounted away up in the skies, when 40,000,000 people, the producers of this country, are producing large crops and receiving less than enough to give them a living wage at present prices, want this commission's activities curtailed or hampered for lack of $100,000. I do not believe it is good policy for this administration or for any Member here to vote to hamstring this valuable commission, which is needed more now than at any time in its existence. It is about the same proposition as cutting down the forces of a hospital when we have a pestilence in the country. I do not believe the people want it done. If there is any commission that has the confidence of the people of this land, especially the great producing element, it is the Federal Trade Commission. I hope this amendment will be agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended for two minutes in order that I might ask him a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Chairman, I would like to state this to the gentleman in reply to my colleague from Texas, that the prices of cattle and sheep have gone down; yes, they have; but they went down before the packer legislation was enacted, before and after. I want to say this to my friend, that this law has just begun to function. It was placed under the Agricultural Department, under Mr. Wallace. It has not been fully functioning more than a few weeks, but in that time they have controlled the stockyards and the price of hay, and no man on this floor can deny that the price of hay to the stockman has been reduced since the matter was placed under this splendid Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Wallace. [Applause.]

Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin. The gentleman from Texas states the positive fact in regard to the matter. He is absolutely correct.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Does the gentleman think it is fair for the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to pay $4,500 for an appointment clerk while only $3,400 is paid for the lawyers to handle those important questions under consideration?

Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin. No; I think that the lawyers are underpaid. Take the Assistant Attorney General of the United States to-day, Mr. Goff. He receives $7,500 a year, and yet he could go out and command $25,000 in any city in the land. When people are working and performing services they ought to receive good, fair compensation, and I am in favor of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has again expired.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Chairman, I am in sympathy with the work being done by the Federal Trade Commission. The reduction involved here does not involve a reduction in the efficiency with which this commission can function. I want to give a few figures here with reference to this. I do not believe we can ask one department of the Government to reduce its force and then permit another department of the Government to expand its force.

For the year 1921 there is an unexpended balance of $65,000, and there is an estimated unexpended balance of $50,000 for the year 1922, with the present working force doing all of this work that these gentlemen here contend is being done at the present time.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I see by the report here that the number of employees for the year 1922–23 is reduced by only 11.

Mr. DICKINSON. We do not reduce them 11. We keep them from increasing the number by 11, and that is what I am going to show to the gentleman.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Then I want to ask my friend if Mr. Gaskill, the chairman of the commission, did not state that the commission could not do the amount of work that would be brought to them?

Mr. DICKINSON. They always say that, and they have a 25 per cent cushion in their estimate to take care of this new work which they claim is going to be brought in.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Does not the evidence show that the work is very rapidly increasing at the present time, and if it keeps on the commission can not possibly take care of the situation with the appropriation which is granted?

Mr. DICKINSON. There is no doubt that you can expand this commission to involve a personnel of 1,000, but the question is whether we ought to do it.

Mr. HUDSPETH. It would not be any detriment to the people of the country if we did expand it.

Mr. DICKINSON. But can they not perform this function and take care of the work with the personnel they have at the present time? They are going through the biggest year right now that they have ever been through, and they have produced more results than in any other year. They have a field of work ahead of them for the next year, and when you go back and look at their estimates for the year 1923 you will find that they have reduced their rental item, their printing and binding item, their furniture and equipment item, by reason of economies being made, and that the total reduction amounts to $38,600. However, they turned right over and on the next page in the other estimate and put on one man at $5,000, one man at $4,800, one man at $4,500, one man at $4,200; two men at $3,600, and three men at $3,300, and in that way eat up the savings accomplished by creating new positions in their personnel.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I have understood that the Federal Trade Commission in 1921 had 444 employees, but that they have reduced that number to 315, a reduction of 129, and that their salary roll now with this reduced number of employees is $683,000. If that be true——

Mr. DICKINSON. But it is not true.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Understanding, of course, that the Federal Trade Commission has increased duties, would not this reduction serve to greatly hamper them?

Mr. DICKINSON. This is not true. In 1921 the personnel was 444, but in 1922 this year the personnel is only 301, and they are increasing in this estimate, with this $38,600, their personnel by 11 over the 1922 force, and that is the year when they have done the best work they have ever done. This is not an effort to curtail the Federal Trade Commission, it is an effort to keep them working on the same basis they are working on now. This would prevent their taking into their department 11 more men at an estimated salary of $38,600.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. GRIFFIN. The gentleman stated it was not true that the personnel of this commission had been reduced. I want to call his attention at this point to the testimony on page 161. Mr. WOOD, chairman of the committee, asked the question:

> I see that in 1920 you had 489 civil-service employees and 318 in 1921. How many are you asking for in this estimate?
> Mr. DUGANNE. Three hundred and eleven total employees.

And then further on in the testimony it appears that in 1921 they had 444 employees. On December 31, 1921, the number of employees had been reduced to 315.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I just wanted to state so much for the information of the gentleman that the testimony bears out the statement of his colleague, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS], that the personnel of the commission has been reduced 129 employees.

Mr. DICKINSON. That is between 1921 and 1922, which I do not contradict; but the question I am talking about is between 1922 and 1923. They are claiming here that we are making a curtailment of the operations of this commission. I say that we are not. We are simply keeping them from employing additional men.

Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin. I think I read the testimony very carefully, but I want to call your attention to a letter dated January 23, 1922, written by the chairman of the commission, Mr. Gaskill. He says:

I regret that some of the Appropriation Committee seem to have misunderstood my testimony. I was asked what relation the incidental expense of the commission bore to its pay roll. And I replied that out of the total expended about 75 per cent was salaries and 25 per cent was used in the field work of the commission for mileage, per diem allowance, contract stenographic services, and so forth. Out of this 25 per cent comes in addition to the items mentioned all of our expenses for stationery, furniture, printing and binding, rent of our branch offices in New York, Chicago, and San Francisco, and so forth, the larger portion being used for field-investigation work. In many departments, of course, the salary roll with some little additional expense covers the department's work. But practically everything which this commission is called upon to do involves field investigation and travel for the trial of cases. To take this 25 per cent away from us means that we will have to discontinue a part of the work which the citizens of the country want.

I ask the gentleman whether he wants this commission to discontinue any of this work that it is doing at the present time?

Mr. DICKINSON. In reply to the gentleman I wish to say that they will not have to curtail any of the work, and they cite here on their own estimates they have reduced the traveling expenses $12,000. If they have made a mistake in that item, it is not shown in the testimony.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. The gentleman, I am sure, does not want to reduce the work or efficiency of the commission. On page 161, Mr. Gaskill told the subcommittee:

We have need for a few more men in our trial force and a few more men in the legal examiners' force, because that work is damming up on us. We receive applications for complaint in excess of one a day. It is impossible, particularly when we get a big case, to carry through the work of examination and completion at anything like the same rate with the present force, and a few more men in the examiners' office and in the trial force will give us the sufficient dispatch, and we can handle that increase in personnel without any increase over the former year's appropriation.

I get the idea that they are not keeping up the work the way they should, and they have been cut down $35,000 in their expenses, and they are seeking with that amount to keep up the work.

Mr. DICKINSON. That is not the position at all. Their position is this, that under this appropriation they can reduce their overhead expenses next year on account of the economies, and they want to take on these additional men. I know, and you know, if they get the 11 men this year you are going to have trouble in getting them off the pay roll next year. Now, why should we go on and enlarge this commission to as large a personnel as they seek?

We will keep expending it from year to year, because we will have demands for investigations and investigations for years to come. And I see no reason why the demands for 1923 for this commission should be larger than for 1922, because there was more chaos in business and more profiteering going on in 1922 than in 1923.

Mr. HUDSPETH. The gentleman sees no reason why that increase for 1923 should be as great as 1922. Under the commission for investigating the Furniture Trust, and in view of the statement of Mr. Gaskill that this last year he had between 600 and 700 more investigations than he had in any other previous year, I think the gentleman's statement is not justified.

Mr. DICKINSON. Would you think——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DICKINSON. I would like to ask the gentleman from Texas if he thinks these new problems taken on by this commission are going to impose greater duties on the commission than the investigation of the Steel Trust and the Packers' Trust?

Mr. HUDSPETH. I want to say to my friend that there is a probability of another packer investigation, and I want to ask if it is fair to the agricultural and live-stock interest to limit these men here? That is, they are giving their attorneys $3,400 a year, men who have to cope with the best legal talent the packers can procure, and the gentleman knows that they do not hire any shysters. We all know that. Under the Shipping Board you allow the attorneys there an average of over $11,000 a year——

Mr. DICKINSON. Oh, no; we do not.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Many of them get that.

Mr. DICKINSON. That is the maximum. I think six men get that. I think we will reduce all of those in another year.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Do you think these gentlemen will have to deal with any more complex questions than that of the packers?

Mr. DICKINSON. I certainly do. I have studied this question very seriously and carefully.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Does not the gentleman think the committee could well afford to take a few thousand dollars from the amount paid the attorneys of the Shipping Board and transfer them to this commission?

Mr. DICKINSON. With 3,500 cases now pending, with $300,000,000 in claims, the gentleman says that we might well curtail the legal department of the Shipping Board. The fact is that if you do not maintain the legal department of the Shipping Board you are going to have an eyesore in connection with that establishment for many years to come.

Mr. JONES of Texas. You have more lawyers there than anywhere else, and yet conditions are in worse shape than in any other department.

Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes.

Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin. You say that if you gave them all these employees you would never get rid of them. In the year 1918 did they not have over 700 employees?

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes.

Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin. And they voluntarily cut them down?

Mr. DICKINSON. Oh, no.

Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin. The evidence shows that they kept cutting those down until to-day they have got only 311.

Mr. DICKINSON. Why, Congress cut them down. They did not do it.

Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin. They did not use all their appropriation. The gentleman himself says that they did not use all their last appropriation. That is called "a cushion" for this department. They ought to receive some credit for it.

Mr. DICKINSON. This commission does that because they have a cushion on which they work. They can not tell what the demand may be. In 1917 they had $1,494,000. In 1918 they had $1,472,000, and this is simply an effort to get somewhere near back to normal.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I hope this amendment, offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BROWNE], will prevail. The Federal Trade Commission was created in order to meet a special condition of affairs which had grown up in this country and to relieve the Federal courts not only of the onerous burdens of hearing and considering every unfair practice in commerce that might be brought to their attention, but it also offered to the commercial world and to the people of the United States a tribunal before which they could go to lay those difficulties and charges of unfair practices and unfair competition on the part of competitors. That was made necessary on account of the inevitable delay that ensued by reason of the inability of the Federal courts to deal with those questions as efficiently and rapidly as they needed to be dealt with, and power was given to the commission, after hearing complaints that might be filed with it, either formally or informally, to issue orders that would abate the conditions complained of. That condition still exists, and the efficiency of this Federal Trade Commission has been demonstrated over and over again in dealing with the thousands upon thousands of cases that have been brought to their attention, and in the solution of the economic, industrial, and commercial problems to the satisfaction of the people of the United States, and in the very nature of things that work has grown.

Now, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON] refers to the fact that there is an unexpended balance of $50,000. I suppose that is the remains of the so-called "cushion" to which he refers. I do not think you ought to take the cushion away from the appropriation that you now have under consideration, which is done by the reduction of this amount from $900,000.

Mr. DICKINSON. There will be no necessity for taking away that cushion, because we are leaving the force exactly as it was, and the appropriation to pay them.

Mr. BARKLEY. They have not had enough money even in the past. I want to refer to the tobacco investigation. This House passed a resolution in the Sixty-sixth Congress directing the commission to investigate the tobacco industry. The commission did that, and made a report, which has been printed, but the commission did not have enough money to print enough copies of that report for the Members of Congress each to have one, and you can not get copies now. They are not available unless you are able to purchase them from somebody. They ought to have enough money when they make an exhaustive report of this sort at least to print enough copies so that the report will be of some value to Congress and to the people who are interested in the subject.

Mr. DICKINSON. The business world can buy them, can they not?

Mr. BARKLEY. I suppose they could buy them if some publishing company publishes them. But you can not get them in the document room or in the folding room, and they have only a few of them in the Government Printing Office.

The Federal Trade Commission was not a war commission. It was not created for war purposes, and it did not increase its force during the war, except as an incident in the difficulties that arose and the controversies that developed between business concerns. But fundamentally the Federal Trade Commission did not increase its personnel and its expenses due to the war. It has been increased by virtue of the demands made upon it by the people of the United States and by business, big and little, calling upon it to deal with questions which heretofore the Federal courts were charged with, but which they did not have time to consider.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Is my understanding correct that the Director of the Budget, Mr. Dawes, recommended $900,000?

Mr. BARKLEY. That is correct, and I think that should be evidence of the fact that that much is needed, because I think the Comptroller General has not established the reputation so far, and I hope he will not establish the reputation of being extravagant or loose in his recommendations for appropriations by Congress. It is perfectly apparent that $800,000 will not be sufficient to enable them to carry on the work they already have in prospect and whatever emergency work may be thrown upon them in the next fiscal year. It seems to me that certainly when Congress provided for a considerable reduction of the force of the Federal Trade Commission at the end of 1921, we ought not to handicap them, we ought not to put them in a financial strait-jacket, so that they will be unable to perform the functions that were originally intended to be performed by them without their coming back to Congress asking for a deficiency appropriation.

I believe this $100,000 ought to be added. It is not a real addition, but it is simply the retention of the same amount that was given last year and the same amount recommended by the Bureau of the Budget for this year. And even with that amount last year they were not able to carry on the investigations with which Congress charged them or which Congress referred to them and instructed them to make in such a way as would meet the greatest needs of the country at large. I hope the gentleman's amendment will prevail.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the question was asked by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BROWNE] whether $900,000 was the amount recommended by the Bureau of the Budget and whether we had reduced it. In answer I will say we reduced the estimate $100,000. There seems to be an impression among many gentlemen here that because the Bureau of the Budget recommends a certain amount of money it is sacrilegious to reduce it. If that is the case, we have been great offenders. In this bill we have reduced the total below the estimates of the Budget very nearly $10,000,000. I am not criticizing the Bureau of the Budget for their recommendations.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. In a few minutes. They did the best they could with the light that they had. We have tried to bring some additional light upon these various proposals in the bill. We have tried to save the Government some money, and in our judgment we think we can. In this particular instance we feel that we are perfectly justified in making the reductions that we have made, without in the least crippling the activities of this organization. The reduction here is made up very largely of incidentals, of material, equipment, and things that were very much higher last year than they are now. But this is just a sample of what every committee of this Congress has had to contend with where the head of the organization is constantly trying to increase that organization. It is for Congress to determine whether they will limit them or whether they will let them go unlimited. I am not here to discuss the merits or the demerits of the Federal Trade Commission, about which much may be said. I think if I were expressing my individual opinion I would say that while they have done some good, they have done more harm to the business interests of this country than any other official organization that was ever gotten together.

I want to call your attention simply to one example to show you how they cripple the industries of this country to its very great detriment. You will all remember that it was through this very organization that the steel corporations of this country were put upon the rack, and that suits were instituted for the purpose of dissolving them, on the ground of unjust and unfair competition, and on the charge that they were doing more business, some of them, than they were authorized to do under the law by virtue of their investment. The war came on, and the great heads of these institutions were sent for by Secretary of War Baker and Secretary of the Navy Daniels, who asked them to give the Government an estimate of how much steel they could produce in a given length of time. They asked a few days in order to prepare their answer. They came back with it and gave it in tonnage. It was very satisfactory, but the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy said, "Can you not produce more steel than that?" Then they were reminded that there were suits pending against them to dissolve them, because they were said to be violating the law in having produced too much steel. That was the result of the work of this commission. You have never heard anything more of those suits. Had it not been for the wisdom of those two Secretaries in permitting these organizations to go on and produce more steel and more steel and more steel, we do not know what the result of the war would have been.

Reports come to us from all over the country that because of the intermeddling of this commission in little bits of petty affairs—not in the great, big matters for which they were created—they are destroying fair competition and destroying the business of this country. I have said here upon this floor, and desire to say again now, that the people of this country are becoming tired of the intermeddling with their business. One gentleman told me that it used to be one of his favorite pastimes to go to the post office to get his mail, and in consequence he did not have it delivered by the mail carrier. "This is no longer a pleasure to me," he said, "because I go with fear and trembling each day to the post office fearing that I will get a long envelope from the Federal Trade Commission asking for a new report with reference to some branch of my business."

The result is that instead of encouraging competition, which is the life of trade and the life of the Nation, they have a tendency to destroy it; and I know that one gentleman, who was selected as a member of this commission because of his great business experience and because it was thought he might be helpful, resigned because he found the activities of that commission were being prostituted to persecution and to the detriment of the business interests of this country. So that much might be said against the entire thing. We need not deceive ourselves. There is a very great sentiment in this country in favor of abolishing the Federal Trade Commission altogether.

Much has been said about the report of that commission concerning the packers. I think of all the infamy that was ever consummated under the guise of law and order it was the report of this commission on the packers.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes additional.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That investigation was organized, if you please, not to do justice to anybody, but to do injustice to one of the great industries of this country. But we in our committee are unmindful of the criticisms that justly may be urged against this commission, and are desirous only of saving some money to the Treasury of the United States without crippling in the least the activities of this commission, and we have reported appropriations that will permit them to go on and do just as much work next year as they did last year, and we are all hopeful that they may not have so much to do. We are all hopeful that the furnace fires may be lighted again, that business may have a new life throughout this country, that employment may be given to men who are now idle, and we can best subserve that purpose by giving men who have money to invest some encouragement to believe that they will not be interfered with by governmental intervention.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I should like to know for my own information how the amount of the appropriation and the number of the personnel compare with what they were in 1917 before the war began.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. In 1916 the appropriation for the Federal Trade Commission was $355,000. In 1917 it was practically the same. It grew during the period of the war. Some one has said that it did not expand by reason of the war. It did expand from some cause or other until in 1920 and in 1921 in each year they received $955,000. I know that many of you gentlemen have been receiving telegrams in support of this proposed amendment. I am not bothered with any of them. I suppose they thought they might as well save their money. I know that propaganda can be started in favor of any measure and it will find a supporter in this body. I wish to admonish you that we have another duty to serve beside the desire to enlarge this organization. We have been talking about economy. We have been talking about reducing the expenses of the Government, and yet there is not a single measure that comes up before this body but what some apologist will be found to increase every appropriation that may be suggested to support it.

Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Is it not a fact that the packers, or any other concern that this commission investigates, can before anything is done to injure them have their matters passed upon by a competent court—the United States Circuit Court of Appeals?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That is true.

Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin. Then how can they be hurt?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The very fact that you stop an industry in any quarter temporarily, the mere fact that an investigation is made and becomes public, is an injury to the business. It is a good deal like the Chinese proposition, hang the man first and try him afterwards. You destroy the industry or greatly cripple it.

Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin. But they do not stop the concern, they do not stop the business, they simply investigate and make a report.

Mr. RAYBURN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. RAYBURN. I can say in the case of the packers that they were injured in public opinion irreparably, and it was shown before the committee that reported the bill that half of the conclusions of the commission were not justifiable.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I am glad to have the corroboration. Now, gentlemen, do not let us be carried away by propaganda hysteria, let us remember that we are going through the most precarious time in the history of this country, in so far as the business of this country is concerned.

Mr. HERRICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Wait a moment, I would like to finish my sentence. If it is understood that we are appropriating extra money especially to one activity in this Government, while we are trying to reduce it in other activities of the Government, and that activity which is receiving our partiality is inquisitorial in nature with the business interest of the country, it will be hurtful. There is nothing quite so sensitive in this world as money, and if there was ever a time that we should encourage it to come out of its hiding and into investment, it is now.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I ask for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. So that if we are wise we will not by any act of ours give notice that we are attempting to interfere with money coming out of its hiding and into legitimate investments.

Mr. HERRICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. HERRICK. Is it not a fact that here in Washington you have to pay $1.25 for a decent steak, while down in Oklahoma all I can get is $12 for a 1,200-pound animal, or a cent a pound? Does not the gentleman think that there ought to be an investigation of what becomes of the money between the price paid by the consumer and that paid by the purchaser?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Oh, that is the price the gentleman pays for living in Washington. We are all subject to the profiteers in Washington, and they seem to be above the reach of the law.

Mr. HERRICK. Then the gentleman admits that there is profiteering, and yet at the same time he does not want the profiteer investigated; is that it?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The trouble is with this investigation board, that it is like the foxes, they do not investigate around their own holes.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman was speaking of propaganda. I think this is but another evidence of the effort of certain interests to get rid of the Federal Trade Commission. There are some people in this land who do not want the investigations that are conducted by the Federal Trade Commission. It is said in the Scriptures that men love darkness rather than light, because their deeds are evil. You would think from some speeches made here that the Federal Trade Commission has the opportunity, authority, and right to interfere with the operations of business, to make regulations, and forbid certain things in business. As a matter of fact, the primary purpose of the Federal Trade Commission is investigation, and practically in the last few years much of the important legislation that has been passed has been the result of facts furnished by the Federal Trade Commission. Now, these gentlemen do not want the facts brought to light. Is it that they do not want Federal interference? No; it is that they do not want the public to know the facts and the conditions under which they are doing business. I am as much opposed to Federal interference in business as a lot of other men. I have voted against a number of such bills and I expect to vote against similar bills in the future, but I do not believe that any honest man or any honest concern has anything to fear from the true facts being brought to light.

My colleague from Texas [Mr. HUDSPETH] stated that the packers claimed they were making less than $1 per head on all stock until the Federal Trade Commission made the investigations. It was shown in the hearings before the Committee on Agriculture that they actually made from 7 to 9 and 10 and in some instances as high as 13 and 15 per cent, according to their own figures, taking their own estimates of their costs and expenses.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I am glad the gentleman corrected my colleague from Texas, because I understood him to say the packers stated they made only 1 cent a head.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I said a cent a pound on the hundred.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Everyone knew that the gentleman did not mean a cent a head, if he said that. That is a mere incident in the discussion. The head of the Federal Trade Commission says that "the work of the commission is damming up" at the present time, and they need some men to conduct some of the investigations they are called on to make. As to the estimate of the amount they wanted Mr. Gaskill was asked the question:

> Are these the Budget Bureau's figures, or are they your figures?

The reply made by Mr. Duganne was:

> The figure originally was $950,000, and the Budget Bureau cut it to $900,000. That is the lump-sum appropriation.

That amount is needed, Mr. Chairman, according to the man who appeared before the committee to maintain their present personnel and conduct investigations they are called on to conduct.

I believe in economy. But in this same bill there is an appropriation for $650,000 for attorneys for the Shipping Board. That should be reduced to not more than $100,000. By doing this the Trade Commission could be taken care of and still this appropriation could be reduced $450,000, which would be a great saving.

I do not claim they have not made some mistakes. I do not claim that their figures are altogether always accurate, but I do know that in the investigations that have been conducted before a certain committee, in respect to the packers and other matters, each member of the committee in conducting the cross-examination of witnesses has held before him a report of the Federal Trade Commission, and has pulled the facts out of the witnesses by virtue of information that is furnished by the Federal Trade Commission.

I believe we ought to be very reasonable in our regulations and rules with respect to the conduct of business, but I believe that any American who engages in business or who buys the products of business ought to be able to know that the laws are being complied with, and he ought to have the right to know and realize and believe and expect that the proper department of the Government will be furnished with the proper information through this institution that is established for that purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JONES of Texas. On page 161 of the hearings, Mr. Gaskill says:

> We have need for a few more men in our trial force and a few more men in the legal examiner's force, because the work is damming up on us. We receive applications for complaints in excess of one a day.

When the various committees are able by virtue of this source of information furnished to secure valuable methods of getting needed information with reference to legislation, I do not think they ought to hamstring and try to destroy the very institution which furnishes the information. Something has been said about propaganda, and I want to say in answer to one suggestion that was made a while ago, that I have not received a single letter or telegram with reference to this matter.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Yes.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Is it not a fact that there has been no more continuous, persistent, or effective propaganda than that in behalf of the Packer Trust?

Mr. JONES of Texas. The gentleman is correct. They of all people have said, "Save us from the Federal Trade Commission." They were exceedingly anxious to have a dagger thrust into the body of the Federal Trade Commission in any legislation that affected them or which may be enacted, and they have worked to that end. Let me tell you with reference to some of the activities of the Federal Trade Commission. When they sought to investigate the Shoe Trust propaganda was started to the effect that it interfered with business, and I notice that the gentleman from Massachusetts—which State is a famous shoe State—does not want the Federal Trade Commission to have even the amount of appropriation here allowed. They have not much use for the Federal Trade Commission, and the same thing will be true whenever they go after any of these great concerns. They do not want the facts brought to light.

Mr. WASON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I want to say that there must be some good reason which ought to be brought to light, when hides are rotting on the carcasses, and can not be sold for even the cost of skinning, and yet shoes are still $10 and $12 a pair.

Mr. WASON. Will the gentleman inform the House some of the benefits to the public that they have earned through this investigation of the shoe trade?

Mr. JONES of Texas. If there is any use for an Attorney General's Department in the United States, if there is any use for an antitrust law, or if there is any use for any of the other laws that have been enacted for the purpose of securing a proper relationship between men and honesty in dealing, then the information furnished to these departments is valuable in carrying out the laws, as well as in enacting new legislation.

Mr. WASON. I was asking for specific information and not for the reason for the law. I approve of the law, but in this particular instance the gentleman referred to the shoe industry——

Mr. JONES of Texas. As a matter of fact, taking packer legislation——

Mr. WASON. I am referring to the shoe industry.

Mr. JONES of Texas. They can not do everything at once, but they have some of these profiteers sweating blood. The packers were able prior to the creation of this commission to save any legislation being enacted at all. There might be other instances I could mention with reference to information. They say they have one complaint a day, and need a number of men to conduct prosecutions that arise from information that they get. I do not believe in hamstringing business or in enacting every law that they want or that any other organization wants, but I believe that when there is need of legislation to protect honesty in business that legislators ought to have all of the information they can secure. Anyone who has sat on a committee during a hearing with reference to any legislation that involves matters that have been investigated by the Federal Trade Commission, I know, has found some very valuable information which that commission was able to furnish.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has again expired.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I move that debate upon this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman will withhold that until I have something to say on the proposition as a member of the committee.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I can not modify it now.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can by unanimous consent.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the motion be modified to 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to modify his motion to limit the time of debate to 15 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. SPROUL. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana to limit the debate to 10 minutes.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WOOD of Indiana) there were—ayes 26, noes 29.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I raise the question of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman makes the point of no quorum. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and eleven gentlemen are present, a quorum. The gentleman from New York [Mr. GRIFFIN] is recognized.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Chairman, there is an old couplet, very brief, that runs this way:

> No rogue ere felt the halter draw
> With good opinion of the law.

And I think it is particularly applicable to the opposition to the Federal Trade Commission, a commission organized in 1915 as the Bureau of Corporations and altered to become the Federal Trade Commission, a commission that has functioned throughout the war, in the most critical period of our history, and has exposed the doings of profiteers in numerous reports to this House, a commission whose work has been above reproach in every particular. And yet it is not liked. I am not surprised that gentlemen do not like the Federal Trade Commission. Oh, no; it is too embarrassing. It goes into too many secrets as to the affairs of corporations which are defying the law. What is the Federal Trade Commission? It is an instrumentality of our Government, an aid to the President and to Congress. It inquires into unfair competition, which is the reverse of the character given it by the chairman, who expressed the belief that it was to prevent fair competition. It has no such purpose; it is not its aim; it is not its practice. Its purpose is to go into the details of unfair competition. It is its function under section 6, as the agent of the President or of Congress, to make economic studies or investigations with reference to conditions in the various trades and industries.

If you do not want this commission to function, by all means abolish it. But be fair and frank about it. Pass an act here if you feel that you can go before the country on that proposition, but do not throttle it by depriving it of its means of subsistence. That is an old game for cutting off instrumentalities which Congress does not like, but it is not a fair method of procedure. There is no justification whatever in the hearings for the action of the committee in cutting down this appropriation $100,000 a year. They estimated that they needed $950,000. Why? Because on October 31, 1921, they had 344 cases before them and the calendar piling up.

Mr. WASON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRIFFIN. I will be very glad to do so.

Mr. WASON. In considering this particular item of the bill did my friend from New York discover any evidence on the part of any of the committee of wishing to injure or abolish the commission, and did he make any such suggestions as that when, I assume, he agreed to the bill, or, at least, he did not disagree?

Mr. GRIFFIN. The gentleman calls for a revelation as to what goes on in the committee room.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, that would not be fair to the other men who wish to speak.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I think it is particularly fair, if the gentleman will permit me, in view of the fact that this is the first time I have arisen to speak on this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized for five minutes more.

Mr. GRIFFIN. The gentleman from New Hampshire asks for a revelation of what went on in the committee. I do not think I ought to do it, but since he challenges I will say this, that it became obvious to me——

The CHAIRMAN. It seems the duty of the Chair to admonish the gentleman from New York that although challenged to do so it is not in order for him to reveal what took place in a committee of the House.

Mr. GRIFFIN. There is good deal of animus behind this provision. What more do we want as an illustration of the animus of the chairman of the committee, who is a good and estimable friend of mine and who is to be complimented for the way in which he has handled this bill. The work of the committee was long and arduous, and involved many departments and bureaus, and he was unfailing in his courtesy and in his handling of his responsibilities, both with witnesses and with gentlemen of the committee. And I have no complaint to make against the gentleman personally. But as to his political and economic ideas I am in utter and complete disharmony.

I can not feel any sympathy with the gentleman when he tells you that the purpose of the commission is to meddle with business. It is not to meddle with business. It is only working on behalf of the President of the United States and of this Congress and of the entire people in endeavoring to prevent unfair competition and profiteering wherever it may exist, and I think it is a great mistake for this House to cut down this appropriation, thus throttling its work and making it almost useless. It is the duty, it seems to me, of every man who has the interest of the consumers of the country at heart, rather than that of the profiteers and monopolists, to vote for the restoration of this appropriation. It estimated its needs at $950,000. The Budget Bureau allowed it $900,000, and yet this committee, without any cause, without any evidence in the hearings, arbitrarily cuts the appropriation down to $800,000.

Mr. WALSH. Did it carry on its statutory duties in 1918 and 1919?

Mr. GRIFFIN. It surely did. You will find that in the hearings between pages 168 and 177.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, as I understand it, there are now two amendments pending: One is the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] to eliminate the appropriation for the support of the Federal Trade Commission altogether, and the other, offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BROWNE], to increase the appropriation from $800,000 to $900,000.

Now, I am opposed to both of these amendments. I am opposed to the amendment to strike out the appropriation altogether, because I believe that the Federal Trade Commission has done some very useful work. I feel absolutely certain that some of its investigations have been of value, although possibly some of them have been without value. That is probably true of most commissions. Taking the whole work of the Federal Trade Commission and viewing it in its entirety, I think we must conclude that it has done much good work and should be continued. So, while I am opposed to the Treadway motion to strike out the entire appropriation, I am also opposed to the Browne motion to increase it $100,000.

We do not have to go any farther back than 1918 to find out the amount of money we were expending for the support of the commission during normal times. I have here the appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1918, which was during the war. It carries the largest amount that had been appropriated for the commission up to that time. The first item is for the salaries of the commission and the personnel of the commission. These amount to $172,920. The next item is for all expenses necessary for compensation, travel, per diem, special attorneys, special experts, the general work of the commission, and so forth, $300,000. The next item is for $20,000—scientific papers, books, law books, filing cabinets, materials, equipment, and things of that sort, $20,000. The next item is for rental of buildings, $15,000; and the next and last item is for witness fees and mileage, $15,000, making an aggregate appropriation of $522,920.

I will say in order that I may be exactly accurate that there was a special item carried in the bill for that year to investigate the packers and the food supply in general. The amount thus appropriated was $250,000. That was a special investigation, and a special appropriation was provided. I do not know of any special investigation of this kind that the commission plans to make during the ensuing year.

So in 1918 we find that the ordinary expenses for this commission were $522,000, as against $850,000 carried in this bill. Yet some gentlemen argue very earnestly that we should increase this amount by the sum of $100,000 and that it is evidence of unfriendliness to the commission to not do so. The trouble is my friends on the other side seem not to take into consideration the fact that if we are ever to get any economy in this Government service we have got to begin to economize somewhere. When I was a boy we used to have camp meetings in the summer, and we had a good many people who attended to profess religion, but I always noticed that a great many more professed religion than joined the church, and that is the trouble in these economy fights. We have too many of our Members who are ready and willing to profess economy, but the trouble is that not enough of them join the church. [Laughter.] It is getting to be time, gentlemen of the House, when we should pursue a consistent policy of economy. I do not want to be understood as making an attack on the Federal Trade Commission in any sense, but we have got the same situation here with respect to this commission as we will doubtless have with respect to the next commission that we come to in the bill. If there has been a reduction in the appropriation for that next particular commission, there will probably be another group of Members in the House who will come to the rescue of such commission and say, "Oh, no; let us lay off of this one. It is a useful activity of the Government. We must under no circumstances cut it down any."

This attitude reminds me of a little poem I used to read in McGuffey's Fourth Reader. The subject of it was "Which." It told the story of a mother and father who were poor and had seven children, and one day they received a letter from a rich brother asking that they give him one of the seven. And so that night, when all the children were snugly asleep in their cradles and beds, they decided they would go around and pick out the one of the seven which they were willing to spare. First to the cradle they stepped where the baby slept; softly the father stooped and laid his rough hand in loving way, when dream or whisper made her stir, and huskily he said, "No; not her." And so around to each child the mother and father went until they came to the eldest lad, so like his father, and then the mother said, "No, John; no; I can not, will not, let him go." And so they wrote in courteous way, "We can not give one child away."

And so we face very much the same situation in these appropriations for the support of the several boards and commissions. If we take the advice of our colleagues on this particular proposition that we now have before us, we will go ahead and increase this amount by $100,000, and then when we take up the consideration of the next commission some able, persuasive advocates will take the floor in its behalf and we will be constrained to follow the same precedent, and we should wind up by not reducing any at all. As I understand it, what the Committee on Appropriations is trying to do is to lop off enough of all these various appropriations so as to effect savings enough for the next fiscal year to make the expenditures balance with the revenue, and I am going to cooperate with them in that effort every time I get a chance and where the effort seems to be based on sound reason. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has again expired.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I move that the debate on this section and all amendments thereto be now closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana moves that the debate on this section and all amendments thereto be now closed. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BROWNE], which, without objection, the Clerk will again report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin: Page 11, line 13, after the word "act," strike out "$800,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$900,000."

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin) there were—ayes 30, noes 63.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

GENERAL ACCOUNTING OFFICE.

For carrying out the provisions of the act of June 10, 1921, establishing the General Accounting Office, including salaries of officers and employees, traveling expenses and per diem in lieu of subsistence while absent on official business outside the District of Columbia not to exceed $50,000, rent, purchase, and exchange of books, and contingent and miscellaneous expenses, $2,468,601.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee: Strike out lines 15 to 21, inclusive, on page 11 and insert the following:

For salaries: Comptroller General, $10,000; Assistant Comptroller General, $7,500; assistants to Comptroller General, 4 at $6,000; chief clerk, $3,600; chiefs of division, 3 at $3,600, 3 at $3,000; chief of appointment division, 1 at $2,500; assistants to chief of division, 3 at $2,750, 2 at $2,500, 1 at $2,250; chiefs of section, 9 at $2,500, 12 at $2,250, 2 at $2,000; assistant chief of section, 1 at $2,250, 10 at $2,000, 1 at $1,900; chiefs of subsection, 3 at $2,000; disbursing officer,

1 at $3,000; deputy disbursing officer, 1 at $1,800; private secretary, 1 at $1,800; attorneys, 1 at $5,000, 4 at $4,000, 4 at $3,600, 1 at $3,100, 5 at $3,000, 1 at $2,750; law clerks, 1 at $2,750, 1 at $2,500, 4 at $2,400, 4 at $2,250, 2 at $2,200, 9 at $2,000, 4 at $1,800, 1 at $1,600; accountants, 1 at $2,500, 2 at $2,400, 3 at $2,100, 3 at $2,000; investigators, 1 at $3,000, 25 at $2,000; principal clerks, 18 at $2,000; clerks, 214 at $1,800, 268 at $1,600, 305 at $1,400, 367 at $1,200, 78 at $1,000, 90 at $900; reviewers, 8 at $2,100; check assorters, 4 at $1,000; duplicating-machine operator, 1 at $900; carpenter, 1 at $1,400; foreman of messengers and laborers, 1 at $1,400; chief messenger, 1 at $1,000; messengers, 1 at $1,000, 15 at $840; assistant messengers, 29 at $720; laborers, 1 at $720, 21 at $660; messenger boys, 14 at $480, 1 at $420; forewoman of charwomen, 1 at $660; charwomen, 22 at $240.

"For traveling expenses, $50,000; rent, $40,000; telephone service, $2,000; books, purchase and exchange, $1,353; office supplies (including stationery) and equipment, $45,950; repairs and maintenance, $1,807; miscellaneous items, $9,151."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment, that it is legislation on an appropriation bill and unauthorized by law.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman please state his objection more explicitly?

Mr. BLANTON. This amendment would make statutory positions with stated salaries, and in that way would change the law, and it would change the law in other particulars. It is clearly legislation on an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Let the Chair understand the gentleman clearly. The bill provides a lump-sum appropriation. As the Chair understands it, this amendment is not permanent legislation. It makes appropriations to pay these particular individuals for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, but that does not change existing law as the Chair understands it.

Mr. BLANTON. As I understand the Chairman's comment, it relates to the merits of the proposition; and as to that I will say that if you specify these certain positions with certain salaries attached to them we will have a hard time next year and in all succeeding years in ever reducing them.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not consider that in passing on the point of order. The point of order is overruled.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield before he begins his remarks?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. There is no total given in the gentleman's amendment. Has the gentleman the total of the figures he has submitted?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes. I want to say first to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], who always insists that he favors economy and is anxious to hold down the heads of departments and bureaus, that if his point of order had been sustained he would have opened wide the door to the general accounting office to pay any salaries it pleased, at any amount. This amendment seeks to fix these salaries at a definite sum, so that Congress will have some voice as to what shall be paid.

I will say to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] that this amendment does not reduce the appropriation one dollar. I have taken the list submitted by the Comptroller General of the persons whom he expects to employ during the fiscal year 1923, at the exact salaries fixed by him, and have incorporated them in the amendment which I have offered, and it carries the exact amount that is proposed to be appropriated in a lump sum in the pending bill.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. DOWELL. What is the aggregate of the items submitted in the amendment as compared with the lump-sum appropriation in the paragraph?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The aggregate of the amendment is $2,468,601, and if the gentleman will observe the bill the lump sum sought to be appropriated by it is exactly the same amount.

Mr. DOWELL. This merely itemizes the expenditures for the purposes named?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes; in exact accordance with the explanation submitted with the estimates by the Comptroller General himself. It does not change the name of a single position or the amount of any salary which the Comptroller General fixed for any one of those positions.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH. Are these the salaries that are now being paid?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Not all of them, because the bill increases the appropriation over that for 1922 by $318,000, so there will be more employees under this amendment than there are during the present year.

Mr. WALSH. Has the gentleman given any consideration to the salaries paid under the provisions of this amendment as compared with those paid for similar services in other departments of the Government?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I have not with reference to this particular amendment, but I say very frankly to the gentleman that if I had my way I would reduce a number of these salaries.

But that was not the proposition I had in mind in preparing the amendment. The subcommittee headed by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD], in whom we all have the utmost confidence, and who we know is as anxious to practice economy as any man in this Chamber, decided that the accounting office should have the increase of $318,000, and I am willing to accept their judgment in the matter. What I seek to do by the amendment is to fix these salaries. I do not know of anything that is more objectionable than a lump-sum appropriation. This bill carries a great number of lump-sum appropriations. It carries a lump-sum appropriation for the Federal Trade Commission. It carries a lump-sum appropriation for the Interstate Commerce Commission. We have a lump-sum appropriation for the Shipping Board, and we know what it means in a majority of instances. Take the Shipping Board and, as was said here this morning, they have an average salary for attorneys of over $8,000. Take the Interstate Commerce Commission and run through the list of salaries, and you will find that they are a great deal higher for employees under the Interstate Commerce Commission than for similar employees in other departments of Government. That is not true, so far as I have been able to ascertain, of the Federal Trade Commission; but in nine cases out of ten when Congress makes a lump-sum appropriation the heads of these departments always fix the salary a great deal higher than Congress would fix it if it should undertake to do so.

Why should we make this appropriation in a lump sum? It has never been appropriated in a lump sum. We know that this general accounting office was created by the Budget law. It performs the work of the Comptroller of the Treasury and the six auditors, whose positions were abolished. The salaries of the clerks of these officials were fixed by statute.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The General Accounting Office is now operating with the assistance of the statutory employees provided for the six auditors and the Comptroller of the Treasury. Why should we now place in charge of the General Accounting Office a lump sum of $2,468,601 and permit him to pay such salaries as he pleases to such employees as may be employed?

I am making no attack on the present head of the Accounting Office. We know how he will be besieged by friends and others to increase salaries. I think it is a protection to the Comptroller General's Office, and if you believe that he ought to have $2,468,601 to carry on the work of his office during the fiscal year of 1923, give him that amount, but give it to him in specific terms, with the number of employees and the salaries he says he intends to pay.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. What are the highest grade of salaries provided for in the gentleman's amendment. I think under the accounting act four places were provided for at $6,000 and some at $5,000. Those at $6,000 were outside of the classified service and those at $5,000 were inside.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. This amendment provides for four assistants at $6,000 who under the law are appointed outside of the classified service. The highest salaried position other than these four and the Comptroller General and his assistant are those paid attorneys and the chief clerk at $3,600 and chiefs of divisions at $3,600.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. All of these various positions specified in the gentleman's amendment are in the estimates with the positions which it is desired to fill through the lump-sum appropriation. That being the case, is not it the fact that in the spending of this lump-sum appropriation under the law the commissioner would be limited to these specific situations and positions which are specified in the estimate?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. By no means. We do not make the explanatory statements a part of the law. They may be bound by it morally.

Mr. BLANTON. Under the rules of Congress.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Not at all. They should be bound by it, but legally would not be bound by it. Suppose he comes before Congress a year from now and we find that instead of paying the chief clerk $3,600 he has paid him $5,000. He might say, I felt that those clerks who showed particular aptitude ought to have $5,000 instead of $3,600. Conditions are changed from what they were when I told you that I did not expect to pay more than $3,600. What is there in the law that prevents him from doing it? That is what I want to make impossible. I want Congress, if it will, to fix these salaries, and I have drawn the amendment so as to fix them at the very sum he named and so that he will have no power or authority during the year to increase the salary of any particular man in his office.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. What kind of service is expected to be performed by the four designated assistants outside of the classified service at $6,000 per annum?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. They have very important duties, if the office functions as Congress expects it to function under the law.

Congress specifically provided in the Budget law that there should be or might be four assistants who would draw more than $5,000 a year, and who should be outside of the classified service. I do not want to do a single thing to cripple this office. This office was created by the Budget law. I want to see this office function as Congress expected it to function under the Budget law. I do not want any opportunity given to the Comptroller General or anyone under him to say that they have not been able to function as Congress expected because of a limited appropriation. I am perfectly willing, so far as I am concerned, to appropriate every dollar they think is necessary, but with the express understanding that they are to function and are to perform the duties prescribed under that law, but which have not been performed, I may say to the gentleman, up to this time, but which I hope will be performed hereafter.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Are these four expected to be selected with respect especially to their legal and accounting ability, or some other special service?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That is a matter which must necessarily rest in the discretion of the Comptroller General. He is charged with responsibility for the conduct of his office. Of course, the question as to their qualifications—that is, with respect to those outside of the civil service—must necessarily rest with him, where I think it properly belongs.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. My purpose in asking the question was this: It occurs to me that when we fix a salary at that grade there ought to be some definite understanding on the part of Congress as to the nature of the services to be rendered and the qualifications to be secured.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I agree with the gentleman as a general proposition, but the law has already fixed their salaries.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. MANN. We abolished the auditors, who received $5,000 a year. Do not these four assistants practically take the place of the six auditors?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. They do.

Mr. MANN. We decreased the number and increased the pay.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes; and, as I say, I have no objection to that, if they perform the services required by the law.

Mr. MANN. That was one of the great reforms of the Budget law which I failed to appreciate.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. We decreased the number and increased the pay, because we believed four men could do the work if we could get the right kind of men.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. We decreased the number of assistants from the number of auditors and then increased the number of clerks.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I do not think the gentleman from Illinois is entirely correct in that statement. We cut out six auditors who were drawing, two of them $5,000, four of them $4,000 each, which would make $26,000. We supplanted them with four officials who draw $6,000 each. There is, therefore, a reduction of $2,000.

It is expected that these four will perform more important service than the six did under the old law, because something more is required of them under the Budget law than the mere auditing of expenses. They are expected to advise Congress, they are expected to make suggestions as to legislation with regard to expenditures and things of that sort. It is to be hoped that this will be done, although it has not been done up to the present time.

Mr. MANN. I hope it will recommend something that will decrease expenses outside of its own office, because we know that all of its recommendations with respect to its own office will be to increase expenses there.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I did not rise so much for the purpose of discussing the amount of the appropriation. My object was this: Accepting the amount that was suggested and recommended by the committee—and I am not prepared to defend that particular amount nor am I prepared to dispute it—I do believe that if we are going to allow any such sum as two and a half million dollars we ought not to begin the administration of this office by placing it at the disposal of the head of the office as a lump sum, no matter who the official may be. Therefore I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I have such a high regard for the good judgment and the fairness of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] that I am loath to oppose the amendment that he has suggested. I wish, however, to point out some objections which I think will appeal to him.

The appropriation, as stated, is a lump-sum appropriation. I agree with the gentleman from Tennessee that there has been much abuse of lump-sum appropriations, and there is none who will hail with more delight than I the time when this can be reduced to a statutory roll. We have made several attempts to have that thing done, without success. There is a project now on foot, with evidences that it is to be carried out in good faith, that in all of these activities where there is a lump-sum appropriation they will be classified and determined according to an efficiency survey now being had under the Executive order of the President. Gentlemen will remember that I called attention to that the other day.

Here is a particular item or two I wish to call attention to concerning the general accounting office. The appropriation, as stated by the gentleman from Tennessee, this year, in round numbers, is $318,000 more than it was last year. The appropriation last year was $675,000 less than the previous year. Some things have developed within the last year, in which we are all interested, requiring this additional appropriation. I fear if the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Tennessee should be agreed to, it might result in additional expenditure rather than a reduction. The additional $318,000 was asked by the general accounting officer for the purpose of completing a work which has been undertaken by him which should have been completed in many respects a long while ago. All of the checks, all of the accounts, all of the things material to a general accounting of all of the creditors and debtors of the United States are under the control of this general accounting officer. Many of these records are almost worn out. Something must be done to preserve them, if we are to preserve them at all. There are more than 4,000,000 checks coming in each quarter for payment of interest on United States bonds issued during the war. In addition to that, there can not be found an accurate account of a single soldier who served in the World War, a single soldier who served in the Civil War, in the Mexican War, the War of 1812, or the Revolutionary War without recourse to this accounting officer.

They are scattered, as I said the other day, in 15 different buildings all over this city. It requires, if you please, immediate attention that they may be preserved, else there will be great loss and great embarrassment eventually coming to this Government. Now, it is the purpose of the general accounting officer out of this $318,000 additional to get these records in such a state of preservation that they may be had for all time. To complete these records which have been undertaken, and which should be completed, in his opinion, this $318,000 can be employed in the payment of cheap clerks that can do this sorting just as well as higher paid clerks. Now, it may take the entire year or it may not. But in the event it does not take the entire time we are fixing a salary here that is compiled upon this lower priced labor that might be better used for the doing of some other kind of work.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I will.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Is it not a fact that in submitting his estimate for $2,318,240 as a salary roll, the Comptroller General stated to the committee in explanation the exact number of positions, the exact number of clerks he was expected to employ at the salaries for the entire fiscal year 1923?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That is absolutely correct.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I can not understand the point made by the gentleman that he might employ somebody at a cheaper compensation. I have not found anything in the hearings to substantiate that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The general accounting officer, appearing in person before the committee, entered into great detail with reference to this thing, and he explained to us that because of the uncertainty of this work he did not know, and therefore submitted this as his best estimate. He may be wrong. It may require all of the estimate that he has made; it may not require quite so much. Possibly he may fail in this estimate and not complete the work required to be done which we all think should be done. We are in this position: We are all wanting a reclassification of the salaries of the civil service of the United States. We do not, I think, want to interfere with the Executive order of the President that is now being worked out, whereby through this survey there shall be fixed salaries of the various civil-service employees in these estimates where they have a lump-sum appropriation in the general accounting office.

Mr. WALSH. Does not the gentleman think that this paragraph ought to be a little more specific than the general language that is carried for this particular activity?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. In what respect?

Mr. WALSH. As to how the money is to be spent. We require it all through governmental departments. Why should not the department which has the supervision of the accounting be required to specify how they are spending the money and have their authority regulated the same as the other departments?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I think it is just as specific as any other lump-sum appropriation that is made. It is just as specific as that of the Federal Trade Board or the Interstate Commerce Commission. The head of the general accounting office has submitted an estimate in detail as to what he believes the work will be like these other gentlemen have submitted an estimate with reference to what their expense may be.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. Of course, if the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] is adopted and the reclassification measure becomes a law, it would not in any way interfere with the operations of these departments? They could be reclassified, could they not?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes; so far as the reclassification is concerned, and if it was passed it would be the last expression and the last law of Congress. Suppose that it does not, and the Executive order that is now being worked out, and which we understand will be worked out, is put in force, what position will we be in then?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield for another inquiry?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman knows that in practically every case where Congress has made lump-sum appropriations for new activities it has been practically impossible to get away from the lump-sum appropriation. That is true of the activities to which I referred a while ago, like the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Federal Trade Commission, and many others to which I could refer. Now, Congress has always insisted that it should keep its hand upon the salaries paid, and it should have something to say about the accounts that should be paid for various services. Now, why should we put the general accounting office, which is under the Budget law, and which is supposed to be in a position to set an example for the various departments, under a different sort of procedure? Why not hold it down, as we do the others, to the statutory roll?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Admitting there is force in it, the same thing should be applied to every institution that has these lump-sum appropriations. I think it would be a very great mistake to single out one of these activities and fix fast the salaries of that particular activity and let the others go. If this thing is to be done with reference to the general accounting office, it ought to be done with reference to the Federal Trade Commission, and we should do it with reference to the Interstate Commerce Commission and all other bureaus receiving lump-sum appropriations.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Is there any reason why it should not be done with all these commissions?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The only reason why I should suggest it should not be done is the possible interference with the Executive order of the President. Now, it is a completed scheme, has been worked out, and duly considered, and I think and I believe would appeal to the conscience and reason of every man here, if he gave the time to examine it. But we have not the time to consider it. We have not the opportunity. But suppose this thing were done. What position will we be in with reference to that thing?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. My judgment is that unless you do that you will not reduce the expenses of the Government, and the creation of the Budget will result in great disappointment and failure.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I have reason to believe and I know from what information I have that the application of this general order will reduce the general amount of the salaries paid in each one of these institutions where that lump-sum method is now had.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman has allowed in his opinion only sufficient to take care of this service in the year 1923. In the gentleman's opinion it will require $2,458,601 for all these purposes, or something like $2,318,000 in salaries for the year 1923.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. In addition.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The Comptroller General says that if allowed this $2,318,000, he proposes to employ so many officials in his office and pay them certain salaries, and he sets forth the number of positions and the salaries to be paid. What possible objection can there be to Congress adopting his suggestion as to the number of employees and giving them the exact salaries which he says he proposes to pay them?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. If we were proceeding upon the assumption that there were to be increases of salaries rather than a reduction, or that all of this money was to be expended, whether it was needed or not, then I would say that the gentleman is exactly right.

My main objection is that if we establish this as a precedent we should go through the whole thing. Otherwise we shall simply add confusion to what now amounts to "confusion worse confounded." But in my opinion there should be a reclassification at the earliest possible moment, and for us to do by piecemeal what this would result in having done would be a great mistake and cause more dissatisfaction than anything else.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. What kind of talent does the gentleman expect to be employed under four salaries at $6,000 each?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The act creating this system provides for certain officers. They are expecting to employ experts, expert lawyers and expert accountants, men who are specialists, for these four positions, and I understand that they have already been filled except one. That is a purely administrative matter that I do not know anything about.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the text. The other was a substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLANTON: Page 11, line 17, strike out the words "salaries of officers and employees, traveling expenses," and in line 21 strike out "miscellaneous expenses, $2,468,601."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I am against all lump-sum appropriations, but with regard to this particular amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS], whenever you fix specific positions and salary items in an appropriation bill the chances are they are going to be carried through all the years in the future without any change, whether they are necessary or not. You are going to be called upon to provide for that same number of employees at the same salaries in the future, even though they should be dispensed with, because we shall not be able to get rid of them.

Take, for instance, the items of expense with regard to our Chief Executive. We are still carrying them on every year as they once appeared, whether they are needed or not, and they are expended each year. I called attention to this when my party was in power, so that I can not be accused of partisanship in calling attention to it again. Note the items we are providing for in this bill for the Chief Executive. Besides his salary of $75,000 a year, upon which he pays no income tax, we are giving him 41 employees, at an expense of $80,880. Then we are providing for his contingent expenses, including automobiles, expenses of garage and special services, $36,000, to be expended in his discretion. That is $6,000 more than ordinary. Then for his traveling expenses the usual amount of $25,000 is provided. Then we provide the following:

For ordinary care, repair, and refurnishing of Executive Mansion, to be expended by contract or otherwise, as the President may determine, $50,000.
For fuel for the Executive Mansion and greenhouses, $ 8,000.
For care and maintenance of greenhouses, Executive Mansion, $9,000.
For repair to greenhouses, Executive Mansion, $3,000.
For reconstructing one greenhouse, Executive Mansion, $5,000.
For improvement and maintenance of Executive Mansion grounds (within iron fence), $10,000.
For constructing new iron fence in grounds of Executive Mansion between the mansion and the south lawn area, $4,000.
For lighting the Executive Mansion, grounds, and greenhouses, including all necessary expenses of installation, maintenance, and repair, $8,600.

We have been carrying these particular items with approximately these same particular appropriations every single year in every single one of these appropriation bills. We can not get rid of them. It is this same money that must be expended over and over again year after year.

Now, when Mr. Wilson was in the Executive office I called attention to these same items, and stated that these same imaginary repairs should not be carried on every year. Proper repairs? Yes. I want the Chief Executive of this Nation to live in the style and according to the way that the chief citizen of our land should live, but I say that we are going too far in this lavish expenditure of the public funds.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to have five additional minutes to bring out my point. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, I think if the gentleman is going to get five additional minutes he ought to talk about the amendment he has offered. He has not mentioned it yet.

Mr. BLANTON. I am coming to that now.

I am in favor of discarding lump-sum appropriations and making every item specific ordinarily.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman that his time be extended five minutes?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, the gentleman's amendment strikes out some of the very specific items which are carried in this paragraph, and unless he is going to discuss his amendment I shall object.

Mr. BLANTON. I am going to discuss my amendment.

Mr. WALSH. Very well; I will not object.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. I object.

Mr. BLANTON. I will get time later.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, this bill carries a number of lump-sum appropriations. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] thinks that the lump-sum appropriation for the General Accounting Office ought not to be changed unless the others are changed. I do not know why the Committee on Appropriations has never reported particularly instead of generally for the Federal Trade Commission. Personally, I think it would be a very good thing, and probably that is true about the Interstate Commerce Commission; but when we had an appropriation for the Commission of Fine Arts, carrying the enormous sum of $6,000, not $2,468,000, as is carried for the General Accounting Office, the Committee on Appropriations was very specific, and said that there should be only one man employed at $1,800 a year. They could not employ very many men at $100 a year each out of the $6,000. But here is an item of $2,468,000, and my friend from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] thinks there ought to be no limitation on that. We abolished the auditor's offices by the Budget law. The General Accounting Office takes the place of the auditor's offices. The auditor's offices were specifically appropriated for and the number of employees fixed by the appropriation. I submit that it is a step backward and not a step forward when you abolish an office with a statutory roll, or two offices, or six offices with statutory rolls of employees, and then in place of them substitute an office with a lump-sum appropriation over which no one in legislative authority has any control whatever. I do not see why we should not make the appropriations for the offices and have some control over them, because everyone knows that when these lump-sum appropriations apply to the employment of clerks in the departments, invariably they have led and always will lead to gross extravagances.

Mr. TILSON. Is there not a possibility that a number of these employees have duties quite different from what they were under the old organization, and that it may take some time for them to shake down into their places and find out just the right way to put square pegs into square holes?

Mr. MANN. In the main, the accounting is the same now as it was before. There is no substantial difference.

Mr. TILSON. They have changed from six auditors to one big establishment.

Mr. MANN. They have changed from six auditors to four assistants and a lot of higher-priced clerks than they had before to act as chiefs of divisions. I do not say that it is a bad thing. I do not know. I do not believe anybody here knows.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The gentleman has called out this suggestion: The general accounting officer tells us that if provision can be made whereby he can combine these various auditors' offices that are now scattered all over the town, in his opinion he can reduce the expense of the office from one-third to one-half.

Mr. MANN. There will be nothing in this to prevent him.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. There might be something in this to prevent him.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. For the very reason, as suggested by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON], that this is a new piece of machinery, and while in the main it takes the place of these old auditors, we are hoping that a reformation can come from this new system; and while I am not complaining about the proposition to put these people on the statutory roll, I doubt whether that should be done here until this new piece of machinery can be put into adjustment. I have great faith in the accounting officer, and think that he is trying to save some money. I know that he is, by reason of his advice.

Mr. MANN. I have no doubt of that. I have great faith in him, and he has recommended the specific proposition which is contained in the amendment.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS], for the very reason that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] has just suggested. He says that the Comptroller General may find it possible during the next fiscal year to reduce the number of his employees. If that be true, and we have a statutory roll such as the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] has suggested, then when he drops an employee we save that much money; but if we have given him a lump-sum appropriation and he starts in with a certain number of employees and finds later that he can drop 25 of them during the year he could increase the salaries of the remaining employees so as to absorb all the savings which would result from a reduction in the force and thus use up all of the lump-sum appropriation. We do not have to go any further than page 175 of the hearings to find a concrete illustration of what I have in mind. In the hearing on the appropriation for the Federal Trade Commission the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON] brought out the fact that for the fiscal year 1921 the Federal Trade Commission had estimated an appropriation of $683,000 to be necessary for the pay of 444 employees. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON] asked:

How is it that you have estimated $700,000 for 311 employees for the fiscal year 1923?

I do not want to be unfair to the Federal Trade Commission. Mr. Duganne, the gentleman who was giving the testimony, stated that they had not used 444 employees at any particular time, but that they had employed that many during the whole of the year. But it was also brought out that when employees were dropped from the roll increases had been given to the other employees who were retained, and generally this increase absorbed all the savings which had resulted from a reduction in the force. The gentleman from New York [Mr. GRIFFIN] interrogated Mr. Duganne on that particular point, and I will take the opportunity to read the statements that were made:

Mr. GRIFFIN. Is the increase to $700,000 for 311 employees affected in any way by the increase of salaries?
Mr. DUGANNE. That covers the increases that have been made during the year and salaries for the additional attorneys and examiners necessary to handle the increasing work.
Mr. GRIFFIN. Have those increases been shown anywhere in your report?
Mr. DUGANNE. You mean in the promotions that were made during the year?
Mr. GRIFFIN. Yes.
Mr. DUGANNE. No, sir.

The hearing continues:

Mr. GRIFFIN. Could you indicate what promotions have been made to account for this increase?
Mr. DUGANNE. That is based on the current pay roll, plus the estimated new positions.
Mr. GRIFFIN. What increases in salaries have been authorized since 1921?
Mr. GASKILL. You want a statement of all promotions that were made during the fiscal year 1921 and 1922?
Mr. WOOD. We want a statement showing the difference in the salaries paid now and the salaries during the war.
Mr. GASKILL. Yes, sir.
Mr. WASON. And also the new positions created during the war.
Mr. GASKILL. I do not believe there have been any new positions.

Mr. Gaskill then stated he would insert a table showing the increases, but I have looked through the hearings, and I find no table showing any information on this point. If we want to prevent these increases, the way to do it is to put the employees on the statutory roll. I am not charging that the comptroller will take advantage of Congress, but I have consistently favored the statutory roll method of making appropriations and I shall do so in this case.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

UNITED STATES HOUSING CORPORATION.

Salaries: For officers, clerks, and other employees in the District of Columbia necessary to collect and account for the receipts from the sale of properties and the receipts from the operation of unsold properties of the United States Housing Corporation, the Bureau of Industrial Housing and Transportation, property commandeered by the United States through the Secretary of Labor, and to collect the amounts advanced to transportation facilities and others, $60,000: Provided, That no person shall be employed hereunder at a rate of compensation exceeding $5,000 per annum and only one person may be employed at that rate.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to ask the chairman of the committee having the bill in charge how much property has been disposed of, owned by the United States, during the past year as a result of the Housing Corporation's activity.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Does the gentleman mean pieces of property or dollars?

Mr. WALSH. How many tracts of land, including houses and property, have been sold?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. They have submitted a statement to the committee showing that they have sold in amount $19,555,082, and have received payment for that to the amount of $3,505,501, leaving a balance due, the difference of $16,044,000.

Mr. WALSH. Are these figures in the hearings?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. They are.

Mr. WALSH. In the tabulated list?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes; on page 266.

Mr. WALSH. Is there some property yet to be disposed of?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes; and the showing made as to the disposition of property was very encouraging. There are some pieces of property yet unsold in other parts of the country.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman an innocent question?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The gentleman may ask me a question. I will determine whether it is innocent or not.

Mr. MANN. In the last Congress the House passed a House bill abolishing the housing corporation. The Senate did not pass the House bill, but passed a Senate bill to abolish the housing corporation. I heard furious assaults upon the housing corporation here in the House. Does anybody know why the House never acted upon the Senate bill and why the Senate never acted on the House bill?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The gentleman's question shows on its face that it is not the character of question that the gentleman was going to submit. He said "an innocent question." [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. I am certainly innocent.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes; the submitter may be innocent, but the question is guilty. [Laughter.] I can not answer it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Contingent expenses: For contingent and miscellaneous expenses of the offices at Washington, D. C., including purchase of blank books, maps, stationery, file cases, towels, ice, brooms, soap; freight and express charges; telegraph and telephone service; printing and binding; and all other miscellaneous items and necessary expenses not included in the foregoing, and necessary to collect moneys and loans due the corporation, $11,000.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 12, lines 13 and 14, strike out the language "miscellaneous expenses at Washington, D. C."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, under that amendment I desire to finish some remarks I attempted to make on miscellaneous expenses in Washington, D. C. I had called attention to the fact that in this bill we are appropriating for the Chief Executive, among other items, the following:

For fuel for the Executive Mansion and greenhouses, $8,000. For care and maintenance of greenhouses, Executive Mansion, $9,000. For repair to greenhouses, Executive Mansion, $3,000. For reconstructing one greenhouse, Executive Mansion, $5,000. For improvement and maintenance of grounds, $10,000. For lighting the Executive Mansion, grounds, and greenhouses including all necessary expenses of installation, maintenance, and repair, $8,600.

With regard to the Executive's greenhouses I want to call attention to an item that appeared in the New York Times for Thursday, January 19, 1922. It reads as follows:

[Special to the New York Times.]

WHITE HOUSE DEMAND FOR FLOWERS HEAVY—"HARD TO MAKE ALLOWANCE MEET CALLS," COL. SHERRILL TELLS HOUSE COMMITTEE.

WASHINGTON, January 18, 1922.

It is difficult even for Mrs. Harding to realize the cost of flowers nowadays, testimony before a congressional committee reveals. In asking for an appropriation of $3,000 for the White House greenhouses, Col. Sherrill of the office of Public Buildings and Grounds and also aid to President Harding, testified before the House Appropriations Committee that he found it hard to make the demands fit the allowance.

"In all these cases we simply give the White House everything that the money provided will afford," he said. "Mrs. Harding, of course, is doing a great deal more entertaining, and we are having a hard time to make ends meet and get enough flowers, because a lady does not appreciate how much money is involved. They see the White House decorated, and so on, and they just call for flowers, and so on, and we must provide them.

"The position is such that I am criticized if I do not provide all of the flowers and decorations called for. It does not make any difference whether I have the money or not. I have got to get the flowers, that is all. So sometimes we have had to send 15 or 20 miles out in the country and get decorations from places like Camp Humphreys to take the place of flowers—leaves and branches of trees, and so on."

Col. Sherrill also said that at a recent dinner for the arms conference delegates the flowers at the White House cost $300 or $400, but if they had been bought on the open market they would have cost $1,500, according to the head gardener at the Executive Mansion.

The value of the bulbs and plants cut during the year is $42,000, said Col. Sherrill.

I merely mention these items, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, for this reason: If there is to be economy—that economy which President Harding seeks and which this Budget Committee and Gen. Dawes seek—every officer of this Government from the Chief Executive down must practice it and Congress must practice it. We are spending too much money on greenhouses and flowers. I want to see the White House properly decorated, I want to see plenty of flowers at important receptions, but study the items in this bill. All of the sums necessary to provide for additional repair and for this, that, and the other with respect to greenhouses. Every year we are providing for them. Of course, we must make repairs. Father Time insists on repairs being made, but should we incorporate the same items in the bill every single year when estimates are sent in to the Appropriations Committee whether they are necessary or not? I am afraid our Appropriations Committee does not study the items that are provided for the Chief Executive. We do not mention the Mayflower, which the people of this country imagine is a little yacht, when as a matter of fact it is a luxurious seagoing vessel. We do not mention the fact that we provide for nearly 200 men to man that vessel and that we keep them on the yearly pay roll so that the vessel may be run for the pleasure of our President and certain Representatives and Senators who enjoy the privilege of it once in a while. We have also to pay for the manning of a destroyer down there merely to dock the Mayflower whenever she comes in. These are items we ought to study carefully in making up these appropriations.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I just want to remind the gentleman from Texas that, unlike conditions under the previous administration, the gates of the White House premises are now open and the public roam unrestricted through those grounds. These flowers are not solely for the President. They are for the people of the United States. The people of the United States use them also for the entertainment of these foreign guests, and the people of my district, I know, would not grudge the money, when such an important conference is present in Washington as the arms conference, to see to it that the dinner provided for members of that conference at the White House was properly decorated, so far as flowers are concerned.

Mr. BLANTON. They are for the public; but I notice the gallery to-day was filled most of the time with colored people. How many of them have ever gotten the benefit of the White House flowers?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Oh, they went through there New Year's Day.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; but probably through the back gate.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Oh, no; they did not.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Collections: For the collection of money due from the sale of real and other property under the provision of the act approved July 19, 1919, the collection of rentals from unsold properties, including necessary office and travel expenses outside of the District of Columbia, $33,700.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word to get some information about this item. I notice in the first item, under "United States Housing Corporation," on page 12 of the bill, provision is made for certain clerks and other employees in the District of Columbia to collect and account for receipts from the sale of property and receipts from the operation of unsold properties of the United States Housing Corporation, and that the amount of $60,000 is appropriated therefor. Under the item just read, on the same page lower down, under the subheading "Collections," provision is made for the collection of money from the sale of real and other property under the provisions of the act approved July 19, 1919, the collection of rental from unsold property, and so forth, and $33,700 are appropriated. This looks like a duplication. What is the difference?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. There is no duplication. One item refers to the work that is performed within the District of Columbia and the other to that performed outside of the District of Columbia. There are a great many properties scattered all over the country, from coast to coast almost, outside of the District of Columbia, which need attention, and the last item is for the purpose of looking after that unfinished business.

Mr. STEVENSON. I could not make out that either one of them is restricted to the District of Columbia. The first item does not so state, does it?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes; it does.

Mr. STEVENSON. And outside of the District of Columbia seems to be for necessary traveling expenses.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. STEVENSON. It does not say that the properties are outside of the District.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It is for the purpose of looking after the properties outside of the District of Columbia.

Mr. STEVENSON. And the gentleman asserts that it is not a duplication?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No; it is not.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Washington, D. C., Government hotel for Government workers: For maintenance, operation, and management of the hotel and restaurants therein, including replacement of equipment, personal services, and printing, $925,000: Provided, That no person shall be employed hereunder at a rate of compensation exceeding $5,000 per annum, and only one person may be employed at that rate.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I was not present when the gentleman referred to this matter during general debate. What is the status with reference to these Government hotels? Are they self-supporting at the present time?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes; they are self-supporting. The amount of the appropriation asked for the maintenance of these hotels this year is $925,000, against an appropriation of $949,000 last year. The receipts from the institution last year amounted to $1,013,000.

Mr. WALSH. Is it expected that these properties will be maintained and operated as long as they can show they are self-supporting?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I do not know that they will be operated as long as they can show that they are self-supporting; but, in the opinion of the committee, we thought they ought to be conducted at least until such time as ample provision is made to care for those occupying them now some place else in the city.

Mr. WALSH. Why should a thousand or two thousand clerks in the city have the advantage of the low rates which these hotels charge just because they happen to have been accepted there as tenants and boarders while the vast majority of Government clerks have to seek quarters, rooms, and accommodations elsewhere in the city at much higher rates?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. There seems to be some little hardship in that, but the best answer to it is that if it were not for these buildings the clerks who are now housed in private buildings would be subjected to the profiteer more than they are subjected now, and this reservoir that takes care of 1,800 of these girls, if empty, and the girls were thrown out into the city, would mean that the girls would have to find other places and would be subject to incredible hardships, as they were subjected to prior to the time when the Government buildings were erected.

Mr. WALSH. Is there some particular class living in the city of Washington that is not subjected to the profiteer at the present time, outside of these Government clerks?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I do not know that I have ever heard of any particular class of that character, but I guess all are pinched when the chance is offered to pinch them, but these people would be pinched a great deal more if it were not for the fact that we are providing, temporarily at least, for these extra clerks now housed in these buildings. There are 1,800 of these girls.

Mr. WALSH. They occupy all of these buildings now?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Are they running to capacity?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes; and there is a long waiting list.

Mr. WALSH. Of course, the total number of clerks and employees in the District has been very greatly reduced since 1919?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes; it has been considerably reduced. There were 117,000 here during the war; there are now about 75,000, in round numbers, but there still seems to be a very great demand for accommodation for clerks.

Here is the situation that prevailed here during the war. Rooms that owners were glad to rent to clerks for $15 a month were suddenly raised to $60 a month, or they would provide for four clerks at $15 a month each. The housing condition in this city was most deplorable, and it was exposed here time and time again; and in my opinion and, I think, in the opinion of the committee, we thought that until some sort of an arrangement is made whereby these girls may be protected from profiteers of this kind there is some reason why these buildings should be operated, so long as they are operated without any expense to the Government.

Mr. WALSH. And the gentleman thinks the operation of these buildings has a sort of a beneficial effect upon those who are operating rooming houses and boarding places?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes; I do. I believe that if it were announced to-morrow that these buildings were to be closed up and these 1,800 girls turned loose to find other places, the profiteers would be increasing their rents and turning those out of rooms who are now in them, in order that they might get a better-paying class of roomers.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. If that is true, why the law against profiteering? If it is necessary to keep up a Government hotel in order to protect from profiteering in rent, let us repeal the rent law.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The trouble is that the Ball rent law would not apply to the necessity that would be occasioned by the abolishment of these hotel houses.

Mr. KREIDER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words for the purpose of asking one question. I notice the bill here says, "For maintenance and operation and management of the hotel and restaurant therein," etc., $925,000. Does the Government run the restaurant and serve meals?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It does in a way; yes.

Mr. KREIDER. And is the cost of those meals included in the expenditure of $925,000?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. All of the expenses included in this item, and I will state to the gentleman that all of the receipts are covered into the Treasury.

Mr. KREIDER. This is a question I wanted to ask. The total receipts, I think you stated, are a little more than $1,000,000?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That is covered into the Treasury and used next year.

Mr. KREIDER. Including food?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield until I can give him some of the figures in reference to this? For the two fiscal years preceding this one I see that the total receipts that were covered into the Treasury from these hotels was $2,024,710.94, and the total expenses of their operation were $1,964,175.37, leaving a surplus for those two fiscal years of $60,535.57. That shows that there is no loss in the operation of these hotels, but, rather, a small surplus in the Treasury.

Mr. KREIDER. The loss will come when it comes to disposing of the property.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph for the purpose of asking a question.

Does the chairman of the committee know anything about this Government hotel doing a regular outside hotel business?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No; the chairman does not know that. He knows, to the contrary, that they are not doing it.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to state to the chairman that I can cite him to two or three parties who are in the hotel business who have come to me and represented the fact—of course, I do not know whether their representations are true or not—that this Government hotel has runners go down to the station and solicit people to come over and stay all night, and that they rent rooms to them at 75 cents a night. They seem to be reputable citizens of the District of Columbia who have been to my office and made that complaint.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I must state to the gentleman that those reports came to the committee and that we made a special examination into the truth or falsity of them, and found that they are absolutely untrue. We also heard that some of the employees there were boarding their families at the expense of the Government. We inquired into that and we found that was not true.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to give the gentleman a concrete case, of a good woman from my own State, who lives at El Paso and who came here to Washington to see about her son, who had been in the service, and who later on was an applicant for a Government position. During the summer months of this last summer, when a certain young lady employed by the Government had gone home on leave, this lady took that young lady's room and occupied it, and paid the money herself to the person who was running the Government hotel for the rent of the room and for her meals, the same as the Government employee had been doing. I know that to be true, because the lady told me about it.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I do not think there is any doubt but that is correct. I understand that there is a practice there, that where a woman is occupying a room and goes away on leave, for sickness or other reasons, the expense goes on against her and she has a right to get somebody to occupy that place during the interim, otherwise she would lose her room. That is what occurred in your case.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to proceed out of order for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, there appears in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of January 12, 1922, the extension of remarks of the Hon. LESTER D. VOLK, my colleague from New York. In the speech which I have referred to the distinguished gentlemen, who is a doctor by profession, undertakes to make a severe personal attack on the honesty of purpose and the integrity of the following gentlemen: Dr. Royal S. Copeland, health commissioner of the city of New York; Drs. E. Eliot Harris, S. Dana Hubbard, and Alfred C. Prentice, and Mr. Alfred C. Greenfield, a member of the bar.

I gather from the remarks of this gentleman that in his professional capacity—and he is a doctor by profession—and not as a Member of Congress he disagrees with the views held by these gentlemen as to the solution of the drug-addiction evil, and that he is opposed to the Harrison law as interpreted and administered by the Internal Revenue Department. But I do not purpose at this time to become involved in any technical discussion as to the merits of the respective theories. I do, however, take serious exception to the following statements which have nothing whatsoever to do with the merits of the controversy but seek by innuendo to attack the motives, the integrity, and the honor of honorable men of high standing in the community, and who have rendered genuine public service. My colleague from New York states:

> Reliable records, reports, scientific information, and experience have been swept aside by these men and in their place has been set up a campaign of publicity intended in the end to benefit this small coterie who seek to control the avenues of narcotic treatment throughout the country.
> Apparently it takes but a twist of the wrist of the Revenue Department at the bidding of ignorant and egotistic, self-centered, and perhaps criminally involved professional men and administrators to put in force in these United States a set of regulations, drastic in their inception, unethical in their administration, and calamitous in their effect.
> From this point on in the discussion of addiction as a disease or as a habit I proceed with extreme care, because I realize that there stands against me a ring of self-seeking sanitarium aggrandizers, physicians, and administrators whose misrepresentations of addiction subjects has brought sorrow and shame, suffering, and mortality upon a great section of our American public.

The only possible conclusion to be drawn from these statements is that these men, in advocating what they believe to be the proper solution of the drug-addiction evil, are actuated by a desire for personal profit, either through their personal connection with sanitariums or sanitarium cures.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLS. I have only five minutes, and I desire to make this statement.

On behalf of these gentlemen, I desire to deny categorically that any one of these men has any interest in any sanitarium, has benefited or could possibly benefit personally in any way through measures taken by the New York City department of health and by the Bureau of Internal Revenue.

I desire, furthermore, to call the House's attention to an article which appeared in the Brooklyn Daily Eagle of January 18, 1922, in which the gentleman from New York admitted that he could not prove any connection between the gentlemen mentioned and sanitarium owners. I challenge the gentleman to produce proof to sustain the charges which he has publicly made, or, if he has not such proof, to withdraw those charges. The fact that the Constitution provides that no Member may be questioned in any other place for a speech made on the floor of this House places on him a great responsibility. Surely it was never intended that that privilege should authorize a Member of Congress to blacken the character and impugn the integrity and honor of his fellow citizens without proof of any kind to sustain the charges, while denying to his victims adequate opportunity of refuting them. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

> In all, $1,050,000: Provided, That no part of the appropriations heretofore made and available for expenditure by the United States Housing Corporation shall be expended for the purposes for which appropriations are made herein.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa is recognized.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I do so for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee in charge of the bill a question in reference to the item on the preceding page, on line 7 of page 13, Nine hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars is to be appropriated there. Do we get back any portion of that amount?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes. I stated a while ago that against the appropriation $900,000 last year we got something over $1,000,000 back.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Does this cover all the overhead?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes; all that there is to cover.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No charges, of course, are made for interest or depreciation?

Mr WOOD of Indiana. No; no charge is made for depreciation. This is for the actual expense in the conduct of the institution.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman withdraws the pro forma amendment. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

> For all other authorized expenditures necessary in the execution of laws to regulate commerce, including per diem in lieu of subsistence when allowed pursuant to section 13 of the sundry civil appropriation act approved August 1, 1914, $2,150,000, of which sum there may be expended not exceeding $50,000 in the employment of counsel; not exceeding $3,000 for necessary books, reports, and periodicals; not exceeding $100 in the open market for the purchase of office furniture similar in class or kind to that listed in the general supply schedule; and not exceeding $75,000 for rent of buildings in the District of Columbia: Provided, That this appropriation shall not be available for rent of buildings in the District of Columbia if suitable space is provided by the Public Buildings Commission: Provided further, That the Interstate Commerce Commission may employ by contract or otherwise expert stenographic reporters for its official reporting work: And provided further, That the commission shall sell, at a rate per page equivalent to the cost of making them, copies of transcripts of its proceedings.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against the second proviso of the section. I do so for the purpose of securing information from the chairman of the committee. Is this provision authorized by any existing law?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No; it is not authorized by existing law, and it would be subject to a point of order. But I believe that when I have explained it to the committee it will not be interposed.

Under the present arrangement they let their stenographic work out by contract. They have not been realizing enough from the returns to cover the expense. They are of opinion, after investigation, that if this is done they would save to the Government about $90,000 a year, according to the estimate of these gentlemen.

Mr. BANKHEAD. How much is the Government at the present time paying for the service of these reporters?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It is costing between $80,000 and $85,000 a year.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Is it the gentleman's opinion, after a careful investigation of the evidence submitted, that this proviso, if enacted, would result in real economy to the Government?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. We are of that opinion, or we would not have recommended it. We have done it after the fullest hearing and the examples given by the gentlemen who have been observing this thing, and they tell us that if the legislation is had it will result in the saving of this entire amount, which they think next year will amount to $90,000.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Well, with that explanation, Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my reservation.

The CHAIRMAN. The reservation of the point of order is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Valuation of property of carriers: To enable the Interstate Commerce Commission to carry out the objects of the act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to regulate commerce,' approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof," by providing for a valuation of the several classes of property of carriers subject thereto and securing information concerning their stocks, bonds, and other securities, approved March 1, 1913, including per diem in lieu of subsistence when allowed pursuant to section 13 of the sundry civil appropriation act approved August 1, 1914, and including not exceeding $20,000 for rent of buildings in the District of Columbia, $1,300,000: Provided, That this appropriation shall not be available for rent of buildings in the District of Columbia if suitable space is provided by the Public Buildings Commission.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I should like to make an inquiry as to the status of this valuation work. I have asked the question every year heretofore and have always been told that it is just about to be brought to a close within a short time. Is it still in that situation?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes; it is still in that situation; and perhaps a little nearer to the close than it was last year.

Mr. WALSH. That is the stock answer.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The field work has been completed. They are now tabulating and reducing to form all of the results of the field work, which brings the entire activity to the city of Washington; and we are told that within the coming year, if my memory serves me right, they expect to have this general valuation work completed, so that hereafter the only appropriation necessary for a continuation of this work will be in order to keep it current. If that is correct, this appropriation will be very materially reduced the next time.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman state what he means by "keeping it current"?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Under the legislation passed here recently the Interstate Commerce Commission is required, in fixing rates, and so forth, to base it upon the valuation of these roads. In order that they may do that in a given case either 5 or 10 years from now, they must have the valuation at that particular time, and in order that they may have the constant, present valuation of these roads, if it is to be kept up, it will require a force of men for that specific purpose.

Mr. WALSH. For field work?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Some field work, but not so much of that. But it will be just like a finished house. There will have to be certain repairs to bring it down to date. If an addition is made to a railroad, that will enter into its then present valuation; or if no addition is made, the depreciation with reference to that particular time will have to be inquired into in this branch of the Interstate Commerce Commission's work.

Mr. WALSH. Can the gentleman state without much research or delay how much we will have expended upon this work if this appropriation of $1,300,000 is allowed?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. In round numbers it will amount to $25,000,000.

Mr. WALSH. Of what value is this information at the present time?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That is speculative. If I were expressing my personal opinion I should say that we had wasted more than half of this amount of money in a valuation that was made at a time when true valuations could not be had; but we do not gain much by talking about the water that has gone over the wheel. We are more interested now in saving the water behind the wheel.

Mr. WALSH. I see. Of course, this valuation work was begun six or seven years ago, as I recall it.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Longer ago than that.

Mr. WALSH. And it was continued rigift through the war. Now, as a result of the use which was made of these railroad properties during the war, when they were overburdened necessarily, their equipment, as a result of our participation in the war, has become depreciated, and the roads well-nigh ruined. We have a lot of information as to the valuation, based upon their condition previous to that. What particular use can be made of this work that has been done both in the field and here in Washington?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. This work was begun in 1913. The original appropriation was $100,000, and I think a two-years' limitation of time was put upon it. It has been extended from time to time, until it has dragged its weary length along to this time. Never before have they been able to report that they have completed the field work. I say I think there has been a waste of more than half of this $25,000,000, and that all of the work that was done during the war, when inflation was so great, was an utter waste. But it is now nearly completed, and they claim they have sifted or squeezed out all of the inflation and false values, until now they think they have a practical valuation of the railroad systems of the country. If they have that it is a good thing.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. WALSH. I ask for three minutes additional time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks that his time be extended three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WALSH. How much was the recommendation of the Budget bill for this activity?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The recommendation of the Budget was $1,500,000, and we thought that they might get along with a little less, so we appropriated $1,300,000.

Mr. WALSH. And saved $200,000 as a sort of nest egg for another million-dollar appropriation next year?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. We did not save it for a nest egg for next year. We saved it in the hope that it would be of lasting benefit to the country, and that if these gentlemen were pinched a little they could get along with a little less money.

Mr. WALSH. Have they reduced the number of employees?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Very materially.

Mr. WALSH. And now they will increase the clerical force to tabulate this information?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. They are not increasing the clerical force. The fact is they have reduced their clerical force, and they think it is necessary to have this additional amount of money for the purpose of closing out this field work in the District offices.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman believe that the work of the Interstate Commerce Commission would be at all interrupted or interfered with if this $1,300,000 was stricken from the bill?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Well, I think it would be. We are now in the midst of a revolution of rate fixing that must be based upon the valuation and upon the earning capacity, and unless they have the valuation and earning capacity they are at a loss to know how to fix the rates.

Mr. WALSH. They could not take this much into consideration, in view of the present wages being paid to railroad employees. When they come to the question of revising the rates, they do not get very much further than the wages that have been paid, and these gentlemen do not make much inquiry into the valuation of the property.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I will give you a sentence from the hearings by Mr. Artaud, the gentleman who has charge of this business, with reference to the purpose:

I am firmly convinced that this valuation will throw more true light upon and do more to restore the financial stability of the railroads than anything I know, and I think that the public will have a much clearer conception of the railroad problem, and expenditures will be more clearly explained and scrutinized than has heretofore been possible. Congress will have available all necessary facts on which to base further legislation.

That is the estimate of value of this service by the man who is in charge of it. We have trusted him in the discharge of this duty and we must rely, to some degree at least, on his judgment.

Mr. WALSH. He has only come in recently, has he?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I do not know.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to ask the chairman a question. What was the appropriation for the fiscal year just passed?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. For this item, $1,750,000.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I understood the gentleman to say that the field work has been practically completed?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That is correct.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The remainder of the work to be done under the original authorization of this service consists of a recapitulation or summary and the drawing of conclusions of the work that the field agents have been gathering as to the physical property.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That is the opinion of the committee.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I want to express the hope that these facts will be of real value to the people of this country. I regard this question of excessive freight rates now charged by railroads as the most depressing influence, the most paramount influence paralyzing the business of this country. [Applause.] I was not here when this measure was passed, but I understand the purpose was to get the real basis of facts, the value of the assets of the railroads, so that the roads, instead of paying dividends upon fictitious or watered values, might be appraised at the legitimate rate of earnings, based on the real value of the property, and I hope now that this survey has been completed the Interstate Commerce Commission will make it the basis of a substantial relief to the shippers and consumers as to the freight rates which now paralyze the business of the Nation. [Applause.]

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I want to ask the chairman a few questions in relation to the present status of this valuation. How soon is it expected that the Interstate Commerce Commission will complete it? The gentleman says they are working now on tabulations.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It is the estimate of the gentleman having charge of this particular work that it will be completed in 1924 or within a year after the expiration of this bill. He said:

In 1924 the initial valuation will be absolutely finished.

Mr. BRIGGS. Is it the purpose of the Interstate Commerce Commission to continue the fixing of rates based on the present tentative valuation of the service under the system now employed, without regard to this special completed investigation, until the actual value of all the roads has been found and tabulated? Are they going to fix the rail rates upon the basis of the actual valuation in those cases where the work has been completed, and leave the rates in other cases based upon the tentative valuations now used?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. They expect to use the information they have in fixing the rates on all sorts of earning capacity and all sorts of overhead and if this is of any avail in fixing the rates to take into consideration the value fixed by this valuation board.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. If the gentleman will yield, I may add that they are using such information as they have already obtained, according to the information I have received in talking with members of the commission. Some time ago the valuation of one large system, the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific, was completed, and I think there are some others now. I know at that time there was only one large system and some small systems completed. They make use of that in a comparative way as well as of the roads for which the valuation has been furnished. They seem to think it gives them some help.

Mr. BRIGGS. I would like to ask how does the value differ with respect to these investigations that have been completed and the tentative value—whether or not the tentative value is greater or less than the actual value?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I do not know.

Mr. BRIGGS. I have heard that the system employed by the Interstate Commerce Commission in fixing the valuation upon which to make a basis for rates in certain territory is by sections or zones of the country, rather than with respect to individual States—that is, the commission has divided the country into large sections or zones, instead of State areas, and then determines what it conceives to be a fair and reasonable rate for all territory in each of such zones or group areas, embracing often a number of States, and establishing the same level of rates with respect to intrastate traffic, irrespective of the fact that such a practice or system often results in the gravest injustice by making shippers using the railroads within some States for intrastate traffic pay a higher charge than is justified by the cost of construction, maintenance, replacement, or operation of a railroad within such States.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I do not think that is true.

Mr. BRIGGS. I have heard it charged that the result of that is to increase very much the rail rates by reason of the fact that the expense of building and maintaining roads is very much greater in certain territory than in others, and by averaging such costs and expenses it raises the average cost of maintenance, as well as of construction and operation, and therefore saddles a higher level of rates upon the users of railroads in some of the States of this country than would otherwise obtain.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. If they were fixing an equitable rate, they would have to take into consideration the cost of construction. It costs more to build a road on a mountain than it does on a prairie, consequently the rates are higher on the western roads than in the Central West.

Mr. BRIGGS. My inquiry particularly relates to the employment of a rate system, with reference to States, which does not take into consideration the distinction just made by the gentleman from Indiana. It can not be fair to include in the intrastate rates in a State of great rolling prairies, the higher costs of building, operating, and maintaining in a mountain State, with which the other State is grouped for rate making. The Interstate Commerce Commission under the transportation act is approving and authorizing rates intrastate and controlling those as well as interstate rates. They are basing rates with reference to intrastate rates—that is, rates on traffic wholly within a State—largely upon the zone system; that is, the commission is alleged to be fixing rates on intrastate traffic not based upon the cost of construction or operation or maintenance of railroads wholly within the State.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRIGGS. But, based upon the cost of construction, maintenance, and operation of one or several of them in the zone area, which generally embraces other States, where the cost of construction may be higher, therefore fixing on some individual State higher intrastate rates than would otherwise legitimately obtain.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The gentleman is mistaken with regard to fixing it with reference to State and zones, except as those zones may be practical in fixing rates. There is no discrimination as between States, one as against another. They are trying as best they can equitably to fix these rates with reference to all these things that must enter into the cost of construction, present value, cost of maintenance, which would enter into a fair and equitable determination of that proposition.

Mr. BRIGGS. The gentleman will understand that I am not charging that the Interstate Commerce Commission is guilty of willfully making any such discrimination. I am asking for information, because the information has come to me that that is really the effect of the action of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and it increases the rail rates within the States higher than they otherwise legitimately would be and very much higher than would be sanctioned by the State railroad or public service commissions within such States.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I think that is just like other samples of misinformation that come from those who desire to criticize.

Mr. BRIGGS. Did the chairman of the subcommittee hold any hearings on that phase of the question?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. In a general way. Whatever we have are in the hearings. We did inquire into the basis of this examination and manner of fixing rates.

Mr. BRIGGS. Do the hearings show anything with reference to the zoning question?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. There is nothing with reference to the zoning question. That is an entirely new proposition to me.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRIGGS. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I think the misunderstanding to which the gentleman refers arises out of the fact that the making of rates is extremely complex. Ordinarily no rate can be made without affecting rates elsewhere, and in making rates the Interstate Commerce Commission is always obliged to take into consideration not only the road for which it is making the rate but also other rates. Some roads could operate and make a profit under certain rates, under which certain other roads in competition would show a deficit.

Mr. BRIGGS. I understand that. The point I am making is not with reference to interstate rates but intrastate rates.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That has to be taken into consideration also.

The Clerk read as follows:

For printing and binding, $150,000, including not to exceed $10,000 to print and furnish to the States at cost report-form blanks; and including not to exceed $1,500 for printing orders of the Interstate Commerce Commission, other than that done at the Government Printing Office.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out after the semicolon in line 3, page 17, all of the language included in lines 3, 4, and 5.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STEVENSON: Page 17, line 3, after the semicolon, strike out all the remainder of the paragraph.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, this is a small item. I do not see the majority members of the Joint Committee on Printing here. This is one of the ways the departments have of attempting to run around the Joint Committee on Printing, to which they must come when they want to have printing done outside of the Government Printing Office.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. We inquired into that. They are given this in the discharge of the duties of this office when it is very essential that their orders be printed. We modified the language submitted by the Budget, confining this entirely to orders. It might be necessary to issue an order over night, and it would be not only inconvenient, but almost impossible to have the order printed under the rules of the Printing Committee. It was limited to these emergency cases. If the gentleman will read the hearings, I think he will agree with us that this latitude should be given to them.

Mr. STEVENSON. I understand it is confined to orders, and, as I stated, it is a very small matter. I wanted to direct attention to it, because they can always, when they can show an emergency, get an authorization from the chairman of the Joint Committee on Printing. That is always backed up by the committee. That authorization will permit them to have something printed that is absolutely necessary outside of the Government Printing Office. That is frequently abused. Within the last two weeks they got out a hurry call from the Shipping Board that they wanted authority to have $50,000 worth of printing done outside of the Government Printing Office. I was not well at the time and was not able to be here. I was phoned to know if I would agree to it. I declined to agree to it, but I am inclined to think they got that order for the $50,000 worth of printing.

I am inclined to think that they were using that $50,000 worth of printing when they printed the advertisement which the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SEARS] read here the other day about the people going to Europe and elsewhere. And, so far as I am concerned, I propose to direct attention to these short cuts that they take to run away from the regulation of the Printing Committee.

So far as this matter in question is concerned here, I think it is reasonable. Sometimes they have to have an order over night, and can not wait. But I think, generally, this printing business is very much abused.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the amendment if I may do so.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TOWNER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 9981 and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. REAVIS (at the request of Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska) was granted leave of absence indefinitely, on account of illness in his family.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL (REPT. NO. 598).

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported the bill (H. R. 10101) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered printed.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Indiana if he can inform the House what the program for to-morrow will be?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I am informed that if the calendar for Wednesday is set aside we will go forward with the anti-lynching bill to-morrow.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. That is definitely determined?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Wednesday, January 25, 1922, at 12 o'clock noon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, January 25, 1922.

The Chaplain, Rev. J. J. Muir, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father, as the recipient of Thy mercy we desire to thank Thee this morning and to look to Thee for all guidance through the duties of the day. Remember all upon whom there have come great responsibilities in these days of anxiety. So regard the President, we beseech of Thee, and his official family, and all those in this Chamber who have to do with the great issues of the Nation and of the world, and guide us, we beseech of Thee, with the understanding of Thy wisdom and of Thy will. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

INVESTIGATION OF EXAMINING DIVISION, CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Pursuant to Senate resolution 199, to appoint a special committee to investigate the proceedings of the Examining Division of the Civil Service Commission, agreed to January 19, 1922, the Chair appoints the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT], the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR], and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL].

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

H. R. 1318. An act granting to certain claimants the preferential right to purchase certain alleged public lands in the State of Arkansas, and for other purposes;

H. R. 1459. An act for the relief of Charles R. Powell;

H. R. 1460. An act for the relief of the William Gordon Corporation;

H. R. 2865. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to sell and patent to J. D. Calhoun, of Lincoln Parish, La., certain lands;

H. R. 4598. An act to provide for the exchange of Government lands for privately owned lands in the Territory of Hawaii;

H. R. 6262. An act to add certain lands to Mount McKinley National Park, Alaska;

H. R. 7290. An act to confirm private land claim of the widow and heirs of Joseph Etier;

H. R. 7600. An act authorizing the adjustment of the boundaries of the Deschutes National Forest, in the State of Oregon, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 9050. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Pamunkey Ferry Co. to construct a bridge across the Pamunkey River in Virginia.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. WARREN presented a letter, in the nature of a petition, from Hilliard S. Ridgely, of Cheyenne, Wyo., praying for the imposition of a protective tariff duty on potash, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented resolutions adopted by a meeting of the Douglas Stock Association, at Buckeye, January 8, 1922, and the Laramie Rotary Club, of Laramie, both in the State of Wyoming, protesting against the enactment of legislation to transfer the Forest Service from the Department of Agriculture to the Interior Department, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. ODDIE presented a petition of sundry citizens and corporations of Reno, Fallon, and Yerington, Nev., praying for the enactment of legislation extending the life of all prospecting permits of oil and gas for a period of one year, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

RESTRICTION OF IMMIGRATION.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, an Associated Press dispatch in the morning Post reads as follows:

SEVENTY-FIVE THOUSAND EX-SERVICE MEN AMONG NEW YORK JOBLESS—MORE THAN 200,000 UNEMPLOYED IN CITY—UNITED STATES AND STATE ARE URGED TO PROVIDE WORK.

[By the Associated Press.]

NEW YORK, January 24.

The worst unemployment situation of the winter has descended on New York, Bird S. Coler, commissioner of public welfare, told directors of the welfare bureau at a conference to-day.

A census of the jobless taken by the Industrial Aid Bureau and the American Legion, he said, reveals that there are more than 200,000 unemployed in the city. Seventy-five thousand of the job seekers are listed as former soldiers. To-day, he added, the bureau received 800 applications for work, nearly all from high-class men and women skilled along professional or technical lines.

As remedies the conference decided to urge stimulation of the United States Shipping Board building program in New York Harbor, seek a part of the $11,000,000 Federal appropriation for road building, speed city repair work and new construction, appeal to the Government to do the repair work on the steamer Leviathan at this port, and call on Gov. Miller to authorize immediate beginning of State road work.

I have a letter signed by a number of ex-service men in my State in which they say:

We as a class are without funds, as the conditions that confront us to-day are very far from good. Some of us are without employment and have been for a long time, and there is no immediate prospect for us.

These ex-service men have unjustly been denied by Congress the adjusted compensation to which they are entitled. I desire to call attention to the fact that there have been before the Committee on Immigration bills to prohibit immigration. Most of the army of unemployed is in the large cities, principally in the East, where the emigrants coming to this country usually go for work. The farmers' bloc, of which I am a member, is not directly concerned in the matter of foreign labor, as very few go to the farms after landing in this country. The manufacturers' bloc is responsible for the defeat of the measure prohibiting immigration to this country for a period of five years. Members of the Senate from the manufacturing section of the country voted against the measure. The men who are coming to this country from Europe—the pauper labor—are competing with our labor, with hundreds of thousands of ex-service men and others out of work.

I wish to call the attention of the Senate to a statement in the newspapers from the head of the leading Negro college of the South, Prof. Moton, the successor of Booker Washington, of Tuskegee, in which he stated that although the farmers in the South were suffering more than almost any section, there was not one instance in which a Negro farm laborer or tenant had been discharged, although the farmers were having to mortgage their lands and other belongings to pay their debts and to keep from going into bankruptcy. Mr. President, no labor is treated with more consideration anywhere than the tenants on farms in the South.

I do not see the chairman of the Committee on Immigration present in the Chamber at this moment, but I have already discussed with him the matter of calling the committee together to consider this matter. The American Legion had a meeting here recently and went on record as being opposed to emigration to this country during the next five years as provided in the bill I introduced some time ago. In New York City, where there are 75,000 ex-service men out of work, they are bringing in every day or two from Europe thousands of foreigners to take the places which these men are entitled to work and make a living for their families. I shall urge that the committee be called together to consider these measures to shut out emigration for five years, and if the committee declines to recommend relief along this line I shall bring it to the attention of the Senate. The present act limiting immigration expires June 30, 1922, and unless something is done by Congress the steamship companies only interested in the profit in their business will flood this country with foreign pauper labor to compete with our labor. We already have several million idle men, many thousands of them ex-service men, and we should do everything possible to help and encourage these men instead of bringing in pauper labor from Europe to compete with them.

THE TOBACCO INDUSTRY (S. DOC. NO. 121).

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I am directed by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to which was referred a communication from the chairman of the Federal Trade Commission, transmitting, in response to Senate resolution 129, a report on prices, profits, and competitive conditions in the tobacco industry, to present the report to the Senate and ask unanimous consent that it be printed as a Senate document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS PRESENTED.

Mr. SUTHERLAND, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on January 24, 1922, they presented to the President of the United States enrolled bills and a joint resolution of the following titles:

S. 1099. An act to amend section 2372 of the Revised Statutes;

S. 2133. An act adding lands to the State of Texas and ceding jurisdiction to the State of Texas over certain lands or bancos heretofore or hereafter acquired by the United States of America from the United States of Mexico; and

S. J. Res. 124. Joint resolution to prohibit the exportation of arms or munitions of war from the United States to certain countries, and for other purposes.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. McKINLEY:

A bill (S. 3071) to extend the benefits of the employers' liability act of September 7, 1916, to Edward N. McCarty; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. STERLING:

A bill (S. 3072) providing for the placing of Government employees engaged in the enforcement of national prohibition under the civil service; to the Committee on Civil Service.

By Mr. ODDIE:

A bill (S. 3073) granting a pension to Harry J. Martin; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. POINDEXTER:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 158) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, to furnish water to applicants and entrymen in arrears for more than one calendar year of payment for maintenance or construction charges, notwithstanding the provisions of section 6 of the act of August 13, 1914; to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation.

WORK OF UNITED STATES SUPREME COURT.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I ask leave to introduce a bill, and I would like to make a brief explanation of it after it is read by title.

The bill (S. 3070) to relieve the congestion of the docket of the Supreme Court of the United States and the Chief Justice and Associate Justices from all duties concerning the United States Circuit Court of Appeals and the district courts of the United States, was read twice by its title.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I would like to make a brief explanation of the object and purpose of the bill. The statute sought to be repealed by the measure requires that the Chief Justice and the eight Associate Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States shall attend the Circuit Court of Appeals of the nine judicial circuits, one of them being allotted to each circuit, and sit in those courts, and also requires the Chief Justice to consider applications for the assignment of circuit and district judges from one circuit to the district court in another circuit for the purpose of relieving or assisting the district judge in disposing of accumulated business.

These are all duties inconsistent with the jurisdiction and, one might say, the dignity of the Supreme Court of the United States and the Chief Justice and Associate Justices thereof. If the duties are discharged as provided by law, it will require much of their attention and time. They should be relieved of these duties so that they may devote their entire time to the hearing and consideration of cases pending in their own court.

While conditions are somewhat improved in the Supreme Court there were, according to the report of the Attorney General for the fiscal year 1921, 975 cases upon the docket of that court, of which 608 were disposed of, leaving undisposed of at the close of the 1920 October term 367 cases. These cases or most of them are of great importance, many of them involving great constitutional questions affecting the validity of legislation and the powers and limitations of the other two coordinate departments of the Government.

The duties required of the Chief Justice and of the Associate Justices must, under the provisions which my bill seeks to repeal, require some time which could be devoted to the disposition of cases in the Supreme Court. If the justices do not attend the Circuit Court of Appeals or do not render any service there, then the law requiring them to do so should be repealed. There should be no duties imposed upon judges or courts which they do not discharge, because a dereliction of duty in such high offices will necessarily cause criticism of the judges and the courts.

Mr. President, I introduced a resolution some three or four weeks ago seeking to get information in regard to the condition of the docket of the Supreme Court, setting forth in the resolution the object of affording some relief, if it could be afforded, so that cases in the Supreme Court could be disposed of expeditiously and with promptness and in order that there would not continue long delays in reaching a decision in that court.

Unquestionably, from the information which seems to have been submitted by the Attorney General, the court is considerably behind with its work.

The object of the bill I have introduced is to relieve them of certain duties connected with the circuit court. There is no necessity and there is no reason, in policy or otherwise, why they should be assigned to sit in the circuit courts. By relieving them of that duty we will then give them a greater amount of time to attend to the business that is before their own court, and in that way I hope to bring about some relief, at least, toward having cases more promptly disposed of in our courts.

It is for these reasons that I have introduced the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, in reply to the statement of the Senator from Florida in regard to the resolution introduced by him, I beg leave to state that the resolution was brought to the attention of the Committee on the Judiciary, and that committee directed me to communicate with the Chief Justice and get the information desired. This I did, and I have the communication which has been received from the Chief Justice in response to the matter contained in that resolution. I ask leave to read the letter, which is as follows:

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., January 23, 1922.

Hon. KNUTE NELSON,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR NELSON: I inclose herewith a letter from Mr. Stansbury, clerk of the Supreme Court, which gives the information sought by Mr. TRAMMELL in his resolution. It is partly contained in an extract from the report of the Attorney General for the fiscal year 1920. I hope this will furnish all the information you desire. With a view of facilitating the dispatch of business, the court has had prepared a bill revising the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court by review, in order that, by enlarging the certiorari jurisdiction of the Supreme Court and reducing the obligatory jurisdiction, the dispatch of business in that court will be much facilitated. I should like to confer with you about the bill in the course of a day or two.

With best wishes,
Sincerely, yours,
WM. H. TAFT.

This is the letter of the clerk of the court to which he refers:

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., January 21, 1922.

Hon. WILLIAM H. TAFT,
Chief Justice of the United States.

MY DEAR MR. CHIEF JUSTICE: As directed by you, I submit herewith such data and information as may be necessary for you in giving the Judiciary Committee the information called for by Senate resolution 198 requesting the Chief Justice to furnish certain information as to the status of litigation in the Supreme Court, introduced by Mr. TRAMMELL, December 20, 1921, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary January 4, 1922.

I inclose herewith extract from the report of the Attorney General for 1921, showing the work of the court from 1910 to 1920. An examination of this table shows a steady decrease in the number of cases on the docket. Only five cases argued and submitted at the last term were brought over undecided to the present term; 705 cases were on the docket January 19, 1922, of which 227 had been disposed of at that date, leaving 478 cases on the docket yet undisposed of.

At the present time it takes from 15 to 18 months to reach a case on the docket in the regular call. This time would be much reduced if it were not for the large number of cases entitled to advancement which take precedence over the regular call. An examination of the cases reported in volumes 254, 255, and 256 of the United States Reports shows that the average time between the argument and submission of cases contained in those reports and the decision thereof is about 60 days. Of course, a number of cases are decided in much shorter time, and only a few cases are held longer before decision.

Very respectfully,
W. R. STANSBURY,
Clerk of the Supreme Court of the United States.

The report of the Solicitor General is as follows:

REPORT OF THE SOLICITOR GENERAL.

[William L. Frierson, Solicitor General until June 30, 1921. James M. Beck, Solicitor General since July 1, 1921.]

THE SUPREME COURT.

The following table shows the result of last year's work of the Supreme Court of the United States, so far as the number of cases present it. There was a decrease of 25 cases listed on the appellate docket and a decrease of 4 in the number of cases disposed of. The number of cases remaining undisposed of decreased from 386 to 343.

	Appellate docket—October term.
	1910	1911	1912	1913	1914	1915	1916	1917	1918	1919	1920
Cases at close of previous term not disposed of	586	640	671	604	535	524	522	532	495	408	386
Cases docketed at the term....	509	530	509	524	528	545	647	582	582	580	555
Total.....	1,095	1,170	1,180	1,128	1,063	1,069	1,169	1,114	1,077	988	941
Cases disposed of at the term..	455	499	576	593	539	547	637	619	669	602	598
Cases remaining undisposed of.....	640	671	604	535	524	522	532	495	408	386	343

A reference to the foregoing table shows a total of 988 cases on the appellate docket during the 1919 term. The number decreased during the 1920 term to 941.

At the close of the October term, 1919, there remained undisposed of on the appellate docket 386 cases and on the original docket 24 cases, making a total of 410. The number of cases docketed at the October term, 1920, was 565, of which 555 were on the appellate docket and 10 on the original docket. These, with the 410 cases remaining undisposed of, make the total number of cases pending at the last term 975, of which 941 were on the appellate docket and 34 on the original docket. Of this number 608 were disposed of during the term, 598 of which were on the appellate docket and 10 on the original docket, leaving undisposed of at the close of the October term, 1920, 367 cases, 343 being on the appellate and 24 on the original docket.

The number of cases actually considered by the court was 574, of which 227 were argued orally and 347 submitted on printed arguments. Of the 598 appellate cases disposed of, 139 were affirmed, 92 reversed, 83 dismissed, 47 were settled by the parties and dismissed, in 7 questions certified were answered, and 230 were denials of petitions for writs of certiorari.

I wish to add that I think this gives a complete answer to the resolution of the Senator from Florida.

MAILING PUBLICATIONS OF AMATEUR JOURNALISTS.

Mr. MOSES submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 3020) to classify as second-class mail matter periodical publications published by amateur journalists, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and ordered to be printed.

ADJUSTMENT OF FOREIGN LOANS.

Mr. DIAL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 8762) to create a commission authorized under certain conditions to refund or convert obligations of foreign Governments owing to the United States of America, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

AMENDMENT OF DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ODDIE submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $150,000 for the acquisition of a site and erection and construction thereon of an 8-room public school at the intersection of Rittenhouse Street and Blair Road NW. and adjoining land for a school playground, District of Columbia, intended to be proposed by him to House bill 10101, the District of Columbia appropriation bill, which, with accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia and ordered to be printed.

PROSECUTIONS UNDER ESPIONAGE AND OTHER WAR ACTS.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I have here a resolution of inquiry directed to the Attorney General which I desire to submit and for the immediate consideration of which I ask unanimous consent. The information called for by the resolution, I think, will not require any extra effort upon the part of the Department of Justice, for, as I understand, the information is already available.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask that the resolution may be read before unanimous consent is given for its consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution submitted by the Senator from Idaho for the information of the Senate.

The reading clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 226), as follows:

Resolved, That the Attorney General be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish the Senate with the following information in regard to persons prosecuted by the Government under the espionage act or for conspiracy to violate war laws, where such persons are either in prison or on parole or whose cases are still in the courts, either untried or on appeal:

1. The names and home addresses of each of the defendants.
2. The statutes under which each indictment was brought, with synopsis of the offense charged.
3. The date and place of each conviction wherever trials were had.
4. The sentence, showing the time of expiration.

5. The appeals taken, if any, and the result thereof.

6. Action taken by the Executive in commuting sentences and by the pardon board in paroling defendants, or any review of the case resulting in unfavorable recommendations for commutation or parole.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the resolution?

Mr. STERLING. I do not know that I understand the first part of the resolution. I inquire does it relate to those persons who are at present confined under sentence?

Mr. BORAH. Yes.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

THE SOLDIERS' BONUS.

Mr. BORAH. I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD the letter of Mr. Mellon, the Secretary of the Treasury, on the question of the soldiers' bonus. I had supposed it had been inserted in the RECORD by some Senator on the other side of the Chamber, but I do not find that to be the case.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY,
January 24, 1922.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: I received your letter of January 21, 1922, and am glad, in accordance with your request, to present the latest figures as to the probable receipts and expenditures of the Government for the fiscal years 1922 and 1923, and to indicate in that connection what public-debt operations the Treasury will have to carry on between now and June 30, 1923, in order to finance its current requirements and provide for maturing obligations. I am at the same time transmitting for your information the four attached statements as to receipts and expenditures and the public debt.

It appears from these statements that for 1922 the Budget estimates indicate a deficit of over $24,000,000, and for 1923 a deficit of over $167,000,000. These figures make no allowance for expenditures not covered by the Budget, as, for example, $50,000,000 already requested by the United States Shipping Board for the settlement of claims, $7,000,000 to be spent by the United States Grain Corporation on account of Russian relief under the act approved December 22, 1921, $5,000,000 to be paid as the 1923 installment under the treaty with Colombia, and a possible $50,000,000 on account of additional compensation to Government employees—a total of $112,000,000, chiefly for 1923.

The results of the first half of the fiscal year 1922, after making due allowance for extraordinary items, indicate that the Budget estimates for the year are substantially correct. It is still too early to say whether deficits can be avoided, but it is almost certain that in neither 1922 nor 1923 will there be any surplus.

MORE ECONOMIES NECESSARY.

At any rate, it is clear that in order to balance the Budget expenditures must be still further reduced, rather than increased, and that the net reductions below the Budget figures within the two years must aggregate about $300,000,000, in order to overcome the indicated deficits. At the same time the Government faces a heavy shrinkage in receipts, and internal-revenue collections in particular are subject to great uncertainty. As a matter of fact, in view of the depression in business, there is grave doubt whether the estimates of receipts which appear in the Budget can be realized, and up to date the shrinkage has rather more than kept pace with the shrinkage in expenditures.

It is clear that under these conditions there is no room for new or extraordinary expenditures, and that if new items should be added which are not included in the Budget it would be necessary to make simultaneous provision for the taxes to meet them.

One of the chief factors in the gradual return to normal conditions throughout the country has been the marked reduction in Federal expenditures which has already occurred, and this has in turn permitted the lightening of the burdens of taxation. What has been accomplished along these lines within less than a year, through the cooperation of the Congress and the Executive, makes a concrete record of achievement in economy which is worthy of our highest efforts to maintain.

The economies effected, moreover, have been made without stinting in any way the relief of disabled veterans of the late war, for the figures show that the Federal Government spent for this purpose in the fiscal year 1921 about $380,000,000 and will spend for the same purpose in the fiscal year 1922, and again in the fiscal year 1923, about $450,000,000 a year, or more than will be spent for any other one purpose except interest on the public debt.

VAST REFUNDING OPERATIONS.

The overshadowing problem of the Treasury at this time, of course, is the handling of the public debt, and particularly the conduct of the refunding operations which will be necessary within the next year and a half on a scale unprecedented in times of peace. Some progress has been made in these operations, but the great bulk of the refunding still remains to be done.

The gross public debt of the Government on December 31, 1921, on the basis of daily Treasury statements, amounted to $23,438,984,351, of which almost $6,500,000,000 falls due within the next 16 months, over $3,500,000,000 of it in the form of Victory notes, which mature May 20, 1923; about $2,200,000,000 in the form of Treasury certificates, which mature at various dates within a year, and nearly $700,000,000 in the form of war savings certificates, which mature January 1, 1923, or may be redeemed before that time.

The refunding of this vast maturity will require the Treasury's constant attention from now on. Altogether it makes up an amount almost as large as the fourth Liberty loan, and considerably more than the first and second Liberty loans combined. The Liberty loans were floated during the stress of war through great popular drives and with the help of a country-wide Liberty loan organization that comprised perhaps 2,000,000 persons. To conduct refunding operations on a similar scale in time of peace, to the amount of $6,500,000,000, is a task of unparalleled magnitude; and it is of the utmost importance to the general welfare that it be accomplished without disturbance to business or interference with the normal activities of the people. This can not be done if the refunding is embarrassed by other operations.

VICTORY LOAN GREATEST PROBLEM.

The greatest problem is the Victory Liberty loan, which amounted to $3,548,000,000 on December 31, 1921. A maturity of this size is too large to pay off or refund at one time. And it is accordingly necessary that the Treasury should adopt every means at its command to reduce the outstanding amount in advance of maturity. To this end it will be the Treasury's policy to continue to issue short-term notes from time to time, when market conditions are favorable, and to use the proceeds to effect the retirement of Victory notes, accomplishing this, if they can not be had otherwise, through the redemption of part of the notes before maturity. It will likewise be the policy, so far as possible, to apply the sinking fund and other special funds available for the retirement of debt to the purchase or redemption of Victory notes.

The $2,200,000,000 of Treasury certificates outstanding and the $700,000,000, or thereabouts, of war savings certificates raise similar problems and will likewise require refunding operations on a large scale during the next year and a half. The Treasury has already placed on sale, on December 15, 1921, a new issue of Treasury savings certificates, which are designed to provide in part for the outstanding saving certificates to be redeemed. It is clear, however, that an important part of the maturity on January 1, 1923, will have to be refunded, at least temporarily, into other obligations.

The bulk of the Treasury certificates of indebtedness will also have to be refunded, probably into other Treasury certificates, for it is almost necessary, while Government expenditures are so large and tax payments so heavy, to float a substantial amount of Treasury certificates in order to carry current operations without money strain.

If the situation continues to develop in an orderly way and no complications are introduced in the form of extraordinary expenditures which would force new borrowings, the Treasury expects to be able to proceed with the program already outlined and such other refunding operations as may prove to be advisable within the limits of its existing authority and without interference with the business of the country or disturbance to the investment markets. The time is coming, perhaps in the near future, when it will be possible to undertake refunding operations for a longer term, with a view to the distribution of the debt among investors on a more permanent basis.

It is important in this connection, however, not to overlook one special characteristic of the Treasury's debt operations since August 31, 1919, when the gross debt reached its peak, namely, that the operations since that date have been accompanied by gradual but steady debt retirement, and that even the refunding operations now in prospect will not increase the public debt. Generally speaking, the Treasury has been floating a constantly decreasing total volume of securities, and its borrowings have accordingly not taken new money or absorbed funds that would otherwise go into business.

If the Government, on the other hand, were increasing the public debt, quite different problems would arise. Treasury offerings would then take up new money, and there would be danger of inflation, of higher rates for money, and of strain on the investment markets, with consequent prejudice to the Government's own inevitable refunding operations and to business and industry generally. The whole character of the operations would be altered.

ESTIMATES DO NOT PROVIDE FOR BONUS.

The estimates which have been given as to the prospects for the fiscal years 1922 and 1923 and the program which has been outlined for the refunding of the short-dated debts do not make allowance for any extraordinary expenditures within the next few years for a soldiers' bonus, or so-called adjustment compensation for veterans of the World War. The figures show that there will be no available surplus but more probably a deficit, and that with the enormous refunding operations which the Treasury has to conduct it would be dangerous in the extreme to attempt to finance the expenditures involved in the bonus through new borrowing. The position of the Treasury remains unchanged, but if there is to be a soldiers' bonus it is clear that it must be provided for through taxation and through taxation in addition to the taxes imposed by existing law.

ESTIMATES BONUS AT $3,330,000,000.

It is difficult to estimate how much additional taxation would be necessary, for the last bonus bill considered was S. 506, reported by the Committee on Finance of the Senate on June 20, 1921. From the report of the committee and the estimates of the Government actuary it would appear that the total cost of the bonus under this bill would be about $3,330,000,000, of which at least $850,000,000 would fall in the first two years of its operation, with varying amounts over intervening years and an ultimate payment in the twentieth year of over $2,114,000,000.

The minimum cost would apparently be about $1,500,000,000, in case substantially all the veterans should take the cash plan, and the maximum cost about $5,250,000,000 in case substantially all of the veterans should elect to take the certificate loan in lieu of cash. If an unexpectedly large proportion of the veterans should choose cash, the cost within the first two years might run well over $1,000,000,000. It would seem reasonably certain, however, that at least one-half would elect the cash payment plan, in which event the cost in the first two years would be about $850,000,000, and the total cost would fall between the two extremes, or at about $3,330,000,000.

These estimates take no account of expense of administration or the possible cost of vocational training aid, farm or home aid, or land-settlement aid to veterans who elect such benefits, which would involve substantial additional cost. The expenditures involved, moreover, would be in addition to already substantial expenditures on account of veterans of the World War, chiefly for relief to disabled veterans, which amount to about $450,000,000 a year, according to the estimates for 1922 and 1923. The Government's obligation to the disabled veterans is continuing and paramount, and heavy expenditures for their relief will be necessary for many years to come.

On the most conservative estimates, therefore, the cost of a soldiers' bonus in the first two years would probably be not less than $850,000,000. This would necessitate additional tax levies to a corresponding amount during the same period. The taxes already in force are too onerous for the country's good, and are having an unfortunate effect on business and industry. The field of taxation, moreover, has already been so thoroughly covered, owing to the extraordinary revenue needs growing out of the war, that it is exceedingly difficult to discover new taxes that could properly be levied to yield as much as $850,000,000 within two years.

In these circumstances, should Congress determine to adopt the policy of paying a soldiers' bonus, it would become necessary to impose general taxes on broad classes of articles or transaction in order to pay it.

For such taxes, in their nature of wide application, much might be said as substitutes for existing taxes, but the Treasury would hesitate to recommend them as additional taxes, except to meet some extraordinary purpose.

Whatever additional taxes might be levied, provision for them would have to be made in the same bill with the bonus. The Budget system is now firmly established, and the Budget already submitted has pointed out the relation between receipts and expenditures for this year and next year. If the Congress decides to authorize large expenditures outside of the Budget it is fundamental that it should make simultaneous provision for the additional taxes necessary to meet them.

TAXPAYERS MUST PAY ANY BONUS.

It is also well to keep in mind that no indirect means of financing the bonus could make it any less an expense that will have to be borne in the long run by the taxpayer. Thus it would be futile, as well as unwise, to attempt to provide for the bonus through the use of the principal or interest of the foreign obligations held by the United States or through the sale of any such obligations to the public. For the most part, the foreign obligations are still in the form of demand obligations, and it is impossible in the present state of international finance and in advance of funding arrangements to estimate what may be collected on them in the near future by way of principal or interest.

The obligations are not in shape, moreover, to sell to the public, and to offer them to investors with the guaranty of this Government would seriously interfere with our own refunding operations, upset the security markets, and in the long run prove more expensive to this Government than would the sale of its own direct obligations. At the same time, it would enormously complicate the international situation and certainly embarrass the funding negotiations. Even if enough could be realized on the foreign debt in time to pay the bonus, it would accomplish nothing to set it aside for that purpose. As the law now stands, and in justice to the millions of Liberty bondholders, the Government is bound to apply any principal payments by foreign Governments, as well as any proceeds of sale, to the retirement of outstanding Liberty bonds, about $10,000,000,000 of which were issued in the first instance to provide for the advances to foreign Governments.

Interest collected on the foreign obligations should likewise go to provide for the interest on Liberty bonds, and it has been the Treasury's plan in the funding to adjust the dates and amounts of the interest payments as nearly as may be to the interest payments on our own bonds. In any event, it is clear that if the proceeds of the foreign obligations should be applied to different purposes, the Government of the United States to that extent would have to provide for payment of the principal and interest of the Liberty bonds from other sources, which means that the people would have to pay taxes for this purpose that would otherwise be unnecessary. The plan to use the foreign obligations to pay a soldiers' bonus, therefore, would still leave the burden on the shoulders of the American taxpayers.

I have made this extended analysis of the country's financial position and of the Treasury's plans and prospects for 1922 and 1923 in order that the Congress may have before it in definite form the facts as to what financial consequences the soldiers' bonus would entail and what added burdens it would inevitably place upon the country.

I am sending a copy of this letter to Senator McCUMBER for the information of the Committee on Finance of the Senate.

Very truly, yours,

A. W. MELLON,
Secretary of the Treasury.

MEAT PACKERS IN UNRELATED LINES OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, on January 16 I presented a resolution (S. Res. 211) with the request that it be printed and lie on the table. I wish this morning to present an amendment intended to be proposed by me to that resolution, which I ask to have printed and lie on the table with the resolution. I give notice that if opportunity presents I shall call up the resolution to-morrow morning.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be printed and lie on the table.

COOPERATING MARKETING OF FARM PRODUCTS.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, on yesterday the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] introduced a bill (S. 3067) to create a Federal cooperative marketing board, to provide for the organization of cooperative marketing associations, and for other purposes, and asked that it be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Some observations were submitted by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] and by myself concerning the propriety of that reference. I have since examined the bill and my study of it convinces me that there is no necessary conflict between the measure proposed by the Senator from North Dakota and the bill which was pending before the Committee on the Judiciary and is now on the calendar. So far as I am concerned it is perfectly agreeable that the bill should be referred as requested by the Senator from North Dakota to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill will be so referred.

ADJUSTMENT OF FOREIGN LOANS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Morning business is closed.

Mr. McCUMBER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 8762, being the refunding bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8762) to create a commission authorized under certain conditions to refund or convert obligations of foreign Governments owing to the United States of America, and for other purposes.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the pending bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 1, line 4, after the word "created," it is proposed to strike out the remainder of section 1 and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

Consisting of the members of the War Finance Corporation and the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall serve as chairman.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. McCUMBER. I desire to ask if the Senator from South Carolina desires the amendment which he has offered to be acted on at the present time?

Mr. DIAL. No; I do not care for action on the amendment now.

Mr. McCUMBER. As I understand, the Senator has simply presented the amendment in order that it may lie on the table and be voted on later?

Mr. DIAL. I desire that the amendment may lie on the table and be subsequently considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, toward the close of the able address of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] on yesterday he advanced the idea that the bill under consideration is beyond the power of Congress to enact and falls within a domain over which Congress, as such, has no authority under the Constitution. I fully concur in that view. Indeed, it is to me so perfectly plain that I can not understand how the bill can be either justified or defended. In fact, Mr. President, I can not see any reason why legislation of this character should be enacted at all. In my mind full power now exists in the President of the United States to carry on such negotiations and to make such adjustments as he may see fit, submitting the result of his investigations, whatever it may be, to the Senate of the United States for confirmation, exactly the same as any other arrangement he may care to make with any foreign power.

That this question may be understood, Mr. President, attention should be given to exactly what this bill provides. As the bill has been revised it provides for the appointment of a commission, which is called a World War foreign debt commission, consisting of five members, one of whom shall be the Secretary of the Treasury and the other four of whom shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. It is then provided that the commission so created shall have power either—to refund or convert, and to extend the time of payment of the principal or the interest, or both, of any obligation of any foreign Government now owing to the United States of America, or any obligation of any foreign Government hereafter received by the United States of America (including obligations held by the United States Grain Corporation, the War Department, the Navy Department, or the American Relief Administration), arising out of the World War, into bonds or other obligations of such foreign Government.

That is to say, Mr. President, that this commission is authorized and directed to enter into negotiations with foreign Governments severally and to arrange for the exchange with them of bonds and obligations due from them now to the Government of the United States and to accept in exchange for such bonds or obligations other bonds and obligations, the rate of interest of which may be reduced and the time of payment of which may be extended beyond the limits of those obligations with respect to interest and time of payment as they now exist.

It is clearly disclosed in the report of the committee of the Senate, as well as in the report of the committee of the House of Representatives, that it is intended to extend toward these foreign Governments thus owing us these various obligations, aggregating some $11,000,000,000, some leniency; that is to say, to accept obligations or bonds less onerous upon the debtor than those now held by the Government of the United States. Of course, that is the meaning of the language "to refund." If the bonds or obligations are refunded, it necessarily implies at least that the time of payment may be postponed. The language is "refund or convert."

Then it is expressly provided that the commission shall be empowered "to extend the time of payment of the principal or the interest, or both" and to accept in lieu of the same "bonds or other obligations of such Government in such form and of such terms, conditions, date or dates of maturity, and rate or rates of interest, and with such security, if any, as shall be deemed for the best interests of the United States of America."

You will observe, Mr. President, that in these negotiations the commission may insist upon and may accept security for any obligations or they may not do so, as they see fit and as they agree with the foreign Governments. It will be recalled that during the World War the Governments of Great Britain and France came over to this country and borrowed from private parties, before loans were made to them by the Government of the United States, large sums of money, which, strange to relate, in the case of independent Governments, were secured by collateral of one kind or another.

This proposed legislation, Mr. President, of course, contemplates the exchange of views between the commission to be created under it and the foreign Government and eventually arriving at a contract with the foreign Government in relation to the matter intrusted thus to the commission. The bill touches, however, so far as I have read, only the obligations that are apparently evidenced by some kind of writing. The language of the bill is "bonds or obligations of such foreign Government." Then further provision is made in relation to indebtedness of one kind or another not represented by bonds or obligations, for—note the language which gives the commission authority—to adjust and settle any and all claims, not now represented by bonds or obligations, which the United States of America now has or hereafter may have against any foreign Government and to accept securities therefor.

So, Mr. President, it will be observed that power is being given to this commission not alone to make provision for the payment of the indebtedness due us on account of money loaned to foreign Governments, with respect to which they are given power only to refund, convert, and extend, but with respect to all other obligations of foreign Governments to the Government of the United States, whether those obligations now exist or whether they may exist in the future. Authority is given not alone to refund, convert, or extend, but to adjust and settle those obligations.

Of course, "to adjust and settle" means to arrive at some arrangement through which some portion, and, for that matter, any portion, of the indebtedness may be forgiven and a less sum accepted. Bear in mind that the commission are to have authority not alone with reference to obligations arising out of moneys loaned to foreign Governments or obligations or indebtedness which may arise by reason of contracts of any character which may be made with foreign Governments, but they are to have power to adjust and settle all claims which we may have against foreign Governments, from whatever the source the claims may arise, such as claims for depredations upon our territory, for instance, or for the confiscation of ships belonging to our citizens, or any of the multitudinous claims which may arise in favor of our Government on behalf of its citizens or on behalf of itself against the foreign Governments. As a matter of course, that means the power to accept very considerable sums less than the amount which is justly due, or, at least, which we claim is justly due.

For instance, Mr. President, I am not quite sure but I assume that in the case of every dollar that was advanced under the Liberty loan act to foreign Governments some kind of a written acknowledgment was taken. The schedule which appears in the report of the committee, at pages 3 and 4, of the sums thus due would so indicate, because it gives a list of—

Obligations of foreign Governments * * * received from the Secretary of War and from the Secretary of the Navy—

And also—

Obligations of foreign Governments held by the Treasury.

So I assume that the foreign Governments gave some kind of a written receipt or a promise to pay. In the case of a number of the foreign countries, Great Britain and France, for instance, the obligations are due upon demand, and that is also true in the case of other countries.

But I was speaking about the significance of the terms "to adjust and settle," as used in the bill before us. Take the case of Russia, for instance. Loans were made by the Government of the United States to what was known as the Kerensky government. The existing government of Russia, if we may so call it—that is to say, the soviet government—recognizes no obligation on its part for obligations which arose during the Kerensky government; but our Government insists upon the principle, as it often has, that each succeeding government, although it comes into power by reason of revolution or other uprising, becomes responsible for the obligations of the government which preceded it. Soviet Russia, however, may insist, for instance, if we shall eventually recognize that government or some other government which may displace it, that the Kerensky government never did really exist; that it was a paper affair; that it never represented the people of Russia, and so on; and therefore they refuse to acknowledge the obligation. In that situation of affairs the commission would be entitled to sit down with representatives of the Russian Government and arrange with the Russian Government as it shall exist in the future that, instead of the entire obligation, we shall content ourselves with one-half of the amount which was advanced, or one-fourth of the amount which was advanced, or 10 per cent of the amount which was advanced; or they may say, Mr. President, that the amount thus advanced to the Russian Government was advanced to certain persons who had therefore represented or attempted to represent the Kerensky government in this country, but that a large amount of money was advanced after the Kerensky government was overthrown; and, from information which was brought to the Committee on the Judiciary, I am inclined to think that that is the case. It is perfectly well known that until at least very recently the gentleman who was accredited to this country by the Kerensky government occupied expensive quarters in this city, the maintenance of which cost no inconsiderable sum of money, and he continued to occupy that embassy here for many months after the Kerensky government was entirely overthrown.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. Is it not a fact that our Government still recognizes as the ambassador from Russia the gentleman who came here to represent the Kerensky government?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I am not advised as to that.

Mr. BORAH. It seems very difficult to obtain accurate information with regard to it, but sometimes we acquire information which leads us to that conclusion. For instance, at the reception given a few nights ago to the representatives of foreign Governments accredited to Washington, I observed among the list of those present the ambassador from England, the ambassador from France, and the ambassador from Russia, Mr. Bakhmeteff. So I presume that he is still recognized as the ambassador from Russia, for I can not imagine the social authorities of the Government making a mistake and recognizing him unless he actually is recognized by the State Department. Whether any of the money thus advanced was utilized for the payment of expenses in the maintenance of that embassy I do not know, but let us assume that some Russian Government may claim that to be the situation and that they ought not therefore to pay the entire sum which was thus advanced by the United States, the proposed commission would be authorized to settle and adjust those differences and take whatever, in their judgment, would be proper under the circumstances, being the amount which the Russian Government might be willing to pay.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Some effort was made in the investigation conducted by the Judiciary Committee to ascertain whether any portion of the amounts thus loaned to the Russian government were being utilized in the manner I have indicated for the maintenance of the ambassador appointed in this country under the Kerensky government and his entourage here; but it did not yield very satisfactory results. I speak of it, however, simply as illustrating the extent of the power and authority granted to the commission under this bill.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. McCUMBER. If the Senator will yield, I think it but proper to say that as far as I know there is no one recognized here at the present time as representing the government of Russia, either the eastern republic or the western soviet section of it. I suppose that the persons sending out invitations to attend a reception may send for anyone they see fit or call him by any name they see fit; but I have not heard at any time that we have recognized anyone as representing the Russian government.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, of course they may send out invitations to whom they see fit; but it would be a most extraordinary matter if, in giving a reception to the foreign ambassadors, they should include, unless it was intentional, a man who has not actually represented a government for four years.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator from Montana yield to me?

Mr. McCUMBER. May I add just one word? It is very easy, if anyone wants to ascertain, even to telephone down to the Secretary of State and ask him whether or not this Government has recognized anybody as representing the Russian government or any part of the old Russian government, and I think undoubtedly a correct answer would be received.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator says it is very easy to ascertain. If he had experienced as much difficulty as some of us have in finding the relations of Bakhmeteff to this Government, he would find that it is not easy to ascertain. I know that he was dealt with and recognized to all intents and purposes as an ambassador long after the Government which he represented had disappeared from the face of the earth, and long after he had been rejected by the people who purported to represent Russia.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, it will not be necessary even to telephone. Ever since our Government entered the Great War and until this date, including the most recent issue of the Congressional Directory—the one issued in December, 1921, page 397—there has been carried and is now carried the following:

Embassies and legations to the United States.

RUSSIA.

Mr. Boris Bakhmeteff, ambassador extraordinary and plenipotentiary.

With the residence, and the various members of the entourage given. That has been published; and I am amazed that Senators should believe that there was ever, in the diplomatic world, any idea that the recognition of Mr. Boris Bakhmeteff was withdrawn.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, this is altogether aside from the argument. I speak of this matter merely for the purpose of illustration. It may be followed in this way:

There are others of these nations to which loans have been made which are, as it is perfectly well understood, in the direst financial straits, if not verging upon complete bankruptcy; and it is not a strained thing at all to say that in that situation of affairs, even though the indebtedness were acknowledged by the foreign Government, the commissioners would be authorized to deal with countries in that situation in exactly the same way that an ordinary creditor would deal with a failing debtor or a bankrupt debtor. That is to say, he would be willing to take something less than the amount of his obligation, particularly if it were secured; and I dare say that that was the reason for inserting in the bill the power to the commission to take security.

Enough has been said to disclose that the bill purports to give the commission thus created the power to deal with and to make contracts with foreign Governments in relation to these obligations; in other words, to make treaties with those Governments.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I should like to ask the Senator if there is any difference in principle between making a contract relating to financial obligations between a foreign Government and this Government and a contract relating to political obligations?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Constitution makes no difference and the authorities make no difference whatever. Clearly, Mr. President, this kind of transaction falls within the treaty-making power. If the President of the United States, for instance, having in mind the condition in Russia which I have assumed to exist, whether it does or not, should enter into an agreement with a perfectly stable Russian government which shall come to rule over that country, and which shall be recognized by this country, and which shall deny its obligation to pay the indebtedness represented by loans made to the Kerensky government—if the President of the United States, I say, should enter into an agreement with that government to the effect that we will accept 50 per cent or 75 per cent of the amount which we thus loaned, which amount shall be secured by obligations satisfactory to the President of the United States, and if the President should then submit that agreement for ratification to the Senate of the United States, certainly no one could be heard to say that he had acted without his powers or without his authority, nor could anybody say that the Senate of the United States was not acting strictly within its rights in either ratifying or rejecting that agreement, as it saw fit.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BORAH. Speaking now exclusively of the question of indebtedness, here, we will say, is Great Britain, which owes the United States between four and five billion dollars. Does it require an exercise of the treaty-making power for our Government to take the bonds of Great Britain in lieu of the evidences of indebtedness which now exist, and may not that be done without a treaty?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, there is no doubt that the President of the United States may carry out the law as it now exists, namely, to accept payment of the obligations upon exactly the terms upon which Great Britain secured the loan; but if those terms are to be modified in any particular the President of the United States has no authority to modify that contract. It is not claimed that he has. It becomes necessary, in order to change the terms, to enter into a new contract with Great Britain.

Mr. BORAH. That is true; but may we not pass a statute authorizing him to do that?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I do not see how we could pass a statute authorizing him to do it. In fact, I shall call attention presently to a veto message of President Jackson, expressly declaring that Congress has no such power.

Mr. BORAH. I am not taking a position in the matter. I am asking for information.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That is my view about it.

Mr. BORAH. I presume that one of the objects in passing this statute is to give authority not only to negotiate but to conclude the negotiation.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Undoubtedly.

Mr. BORAH. I take it that the view of the Senator is that it can not be concluded, that we can not give authority to conclude it, because it comes under the treaty-making power.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator has expressed my view exactly—that no matter what arrangement is entered into by the President of the United States, or anybody purporting to represent him, it is not a binding obligation in any way until it is ratified by the Senate of the United States.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. McCUMBER. Does the Senator question the constitutionality of the law under which the loans were made to these foreign Governments and their obligations taken?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Not at all.

Mr. McCUMBER. Then if we could at that time, without bringing into force the Executive power alone, through its treaty-making functions, make an arrangement whereby we would loan money to a foreign Government and accept the obligations of a foreign Government, what is there, then, to prevent us in the same way now either extending that loan by a law and a provision of the same character or making further arrangements with reference to its payment?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The question is a very simple one. It is very easy. Of course, the loans could not be made except by an appropriation made by Congress, because the Constitution expressly provides that no money shall be paid out of the Treasury except in pursuance of an appropriation by law; so that Congress made the appropriation and laid down the terms upon which the foreign Government could take it or let it alone, as it saw fit. When the foreign Government took it, it took it upon the terms prescribed by Congress, and the obligation thereupon arose. There was not any necessity of any negotiation at all. The foreign Government had to take it upon the terms laid down by Congress.

Mr. McCUMBER. But, independently of the appropriation feature, Congress had authority at that time to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase these foreign obligations——

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Exactly.

Mr. McCUMBER. And to convert them into long-time obligations carrying a rate of interest not less than the highest rate of interest borne by our bonds.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. There was not any opportunity for negotiation. If the act had authorized the President of the United States to enter into arrangements with foreign Governments upon such terms as he saw fit in relation to the loans, I should say that the Congress had no such authority. It did not purport to do so at all. It made the appropriation of the money, and it said to the foreign Governments, "You can take this money upon these terms. If you take the money, you have obligated yourself to us to that amount."

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; but the terms were to be fixed, and they were to be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The terms are fixed.

Mr. McCUMBER. The interest was to be fixed and the time in which the bonds were to be paid was to be fixed, of course limited by whatever time the Secretary of the Treasury should fix in the matter of the interest and the maturity of our own bonds; but, nevertheless, the power lay there to accept those foreign obligations and fix the time of maturity and the rate of interest. If that could be done without a treaty, I fail to understand why we have not the same power to do the same thing over again, or, that which is similar, to fix different terms for the payment.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. It is perfectly simple to anybody who wants to see. The Secretary of the Treasury said, "Here are the terms. Take this or leave it, just as you see fit." He was not called upon to enter into any negotiations whatever with respect to the matter.

Mr. McCUMBER. I shall not take any more of the Senator's time. I will answer him in my own time.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, may I call to the attention of the Senator a thought which he may develop later if he thinks it is of any importance?

During the war we exerted, as a Congress, a great many powers that we recognized we would have no right to exert under normal conditions or under peaceful conditions. We did that under the authority of Congress under the Constitution to conduct war; and in many of those cases, if I remember correctly, there was an apparent conflict between the act of Congress under the authority of the Constitution and other limitations or restrictions of the Constitution. We acted as though the superior authority in case of war allowed us to perform those acts. Even if the purchase of these bonds or the lending of this money by our Government was in the nature of the negotiation of a contract, it was done under the conditions that I have named. Congress was acting under the constitutional authority to carry on war. That condition does not now exist. If the purchase of these bonds and the lending of this money was a contract, then that contract was completed during the war. If there is to be any change in that obligation, it would be a change in the contract, or the making of a new contract. Does the power now exist in Congress to make a contract that did exist in Congress under war conditions?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I think the observation of the Senator from Nevada is altogether pertinent, and it might even be considered as a grant of war power to the President; but that is not the proposition altogether. It need not rest upon that basis at all. One can very readily understand many circumstances and conditions under which an implied obligation of a foreign power to this country may arise other than by virtue of any negotiations in the nature of a treaty. For instance, if a foreign Government should appropriate in the most perfect good faith some of the property of the United States abroad, an implied obligation would arise that that Government pay this country, and that is substantially what took place here; but here, Mr. President, is a proposition in time of peace to make contracts with foreign Governments to the extent at least of something like $11,000,000,000, and to negotiate with those foreign powers and Governments in relation to the terms upon which payment is to be made, the time for which the bonds are to run, and the rate of interest which they are to bear; and moreover, Mr. President, with respect to claims that are not bonds or obligations evidenced by some writing, evidently entire power is given to adjust and settle those claims. That this is a contract between our Government and the foreign Governments no one can undertake to deny; and so it falls clearly within the definition of a treaty.

Let me read, briefly, some of the definitions of a treaty:

An agreement between two States is a treaty.

This is the language of Butler's Work on Treaties, 193, note.

Treaties are contracts between States.

Crandall on Treaties, section 4.

A treaty is a contract between nations.

Thirty-eighth Cyclopedia, 962, the article by Associate Justice Day and Mr. Butler.

A treaty is primarily a contract between two or more independent nations.

This is the language of Whitney v. Robinson (124 U. S., 194).

It differs from an ordinary contract only in being an agreement between independent States instead of private parties.

Fourteen Diamond Rings v. the United States (183 U. S.).

Every agreement between them—

That is, two nations—

regarding any obligation whatever is a treaty.

Oppenheim on International Law, 501.

And according to Halleck, an American writer, in his work on International Law, at page 284, public debts are a proper subject of treaty.

Mr. President, it can not be disputed that being a contract between two independent Governments it must of necessity be a treaty between those Governments arising through negotiations. That is to say, the different Governments must treat with respect to the matter. It must of necessity be a treaty and fall within the treaty-making power.

That it can not be delegated, of course, is indisputable. The treaty-making power is vested by the Constitution of the United States in the President of the United States, subject to ratification by the Senate.

The House of Representatives has absolutely nothing whatever to do with the making of a contract with a foreign Government, nor can power be delegated by it to any commission or body created by it.

This is not a new question in the history of this country, nor is the attempt to legislate on this matter now before us for the first time. A similar attempt was made during the administration of President Jackson. Certain claims were urged by citizens of the United States against the Kingdom of The Two Sicilies arising out of the confiscation of American ships during the Napoleonic war. Those claims were referred to a commission by virtue of a treaty between the two nations, and the amount of the claims adjusted. A bill was then introduced in Congress authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury, with the consent of the claimants, to adjust, settle, and compromise those claims. The bill went to the President of the United States, Andrew Jackson, for his approval. The bill is brief, and I will read it.

Mr. SWANSON. Was that a public claim or a claim of private individuals?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. These were private claims which were preferred by the Government of the United States on behalf of private individuals against the Kingdom of The Two Sicilies, and they were adjusted. The bill reads, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered to compromise with the King of The Two Sicilies, or to dispose of to any other person or persons, for a sum of money to be paid presently, the rateable proportions of the amount allowed and found due to the several claimants by the commissioners appointed under the treaty aforesaid, on such terms and conditions as may be thought just and reasonable: Provided, The claimants shall signify to the Secretary of the Treasury their assent thereto.

JOHN BELL,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.
M. VAN BUREN,
Vice President of the United States and President of the Senate.

That went to the President of the United States. Perhaps this might interest the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER], if he will kindly give me his attention.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. We are dealing with a question involving $11,000,000,000, one of the most important questions before the Senate during the present session. We are now discussing a very important aspect of that question, namely, whether it involves the treaty-making powers of the Constitution or not. I think we ought to have a quorum call and have a larger attendance to hear the discussion. Yesterday when the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] was presenting his views, after studying the question and considering it for months, there was a mere handful present. There is only a handful here to-day. I think, under the circumstances, I ought to ask for a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LADD in the chair). The absence of a quorum is suggested, and the Secretary will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hale	McNary	Smith
Ball	Harreld	Moses	Smoot
Borah	Harris	Myers	Stanfield
Broussard	Heflin	Nelson	Sterling
Capper	Johnson	Norris	Sutherland
Caraway	Jones, Wash.	Oddie	Swanson
Culberson	Kellogg	Page	Trammell
Curtis	Kenyon	Pepper	Wadsworth
Dial	Keyes	Phipps	Walsh, Mass.
Dillingham	Ladd	Pittman	Walsh, Mont.
du Pont	La Follette	Poindexter	Warren
Edge	Lenroot	Ransdell	Watson, Ind.
Ernst	McCumber	Reed	Williams
Fletcher	McKellar	Robinson
Glass	McKinley	Sheppard
Gooding	McLean	Simmons

Mr. CURTIS. I was requested to announce that the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], and the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] are detained on official business.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I wish to announce that the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY] and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] are absent on account of illness.

Mr. HARRIS. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. WATSON of Georgia] is absent on official business.

Mr. MCKELLAR. I wish to announce that the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] is detained by illness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-one Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The Senator from Montana will proceed.

Mr. MCCUMBER. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Montana asked me a question while my attention was diverted.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I did not ask the Senator a question, but I was about to refer to a document of some considerable historic importance which I thought reflected some light upon the question before us, and I imagined very likely the Senator would like to know about it. I observed that his attention was being diverted by some other Senator.

Mr. McCUMBER. I thank the Senator for calling my attention.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I was calling the attention of the Senate to the bill which went to President Jackson which, like the pending measure, sought to empower the Secretary of the Treasury to settle and adjust claims against a foreign Government. The bill went to the President of the United States and was vetoed by him in a brief message under date of March 3, 1835, which I find in the twenty-fifth volume of the Senate Journal, as follows:

WASHINGTON, March 3, 1835.

To the Senate:

I respectfully return to the Senate, where it originated, the act to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to compromise the claims allowed by the commissioners under the treaty with the King of The Two Sicilies, concluded October 14, 1832, without my signature.

The act is, in my judgment, inconsistent with the division of powers in the Constitution of the United States, as it is obviously founded on the assumption that an act of Congress can give power to the Executive, or to the head of one of the departments, to negotiate with a foreign Government. The debt due by the King of The Two Sicilies will, after the commissioners have made their decision, become the private vested property of the citizens of the United States to whom it may be awarded. Neither the Executive nor the Legislature can properly interfere with it without their consent. With their consent, the Executive has competent authority to negotiate about it for them with a foreign Government, an authority Congress can not constitutionally abridge or increase.

ANDREW JACKSON.

President Jackson has been criticized about many of his official acts, and a great many people do not like his politics, but when it comes to a question of interpretation of the Constitution of the United States his words command respect in this body and before any tribunal where that great document is the subject of consideration. He lays down the proposition with perfect clarity that so far as negotiation with foreign Governments is concerned in relation to obligations due from them to this Government the Legislature can neither add to nor detract from the power of the President of the United States.

If the Senator from North Dakota will pardon me, I should like to address this inquiry to him: If the President of the United States did enter into negotiations with Great Britain, for instance, and made an agreement with that Government by which the obligations now represented by demand obligations from that Government and other obligations in the nature of bonds maturing 25 years hence, bearing interest at 4 per cent or 4½ per cent, payable annually or semiannully, as the case may be—if he made such an agreement as that with them and submitted it to the Senate for ratification, I inquire of the Senator if the President would be acting within his rights and within his powers under the Constitution?

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, there are two methods provided by the Constitution for enacting laws which shall become the laws of the land. The first method is by acts of Congress. The second method is by treaties made pursuant to the Constitution of the United States. There is no strict line of delimitation between those two characters of law. I can not conceive at the present time, nor have I in mind at present, any law that we could make by a treaty that we could not also make by an act of Congress in harmony with the other government if it also provided a like act to meet ours. I can not for a moment believe that while we could do that which the Senator says we ought to do through the treaty-making power, that is the exclusive method.

Take the settlement of any claim or set of claims between two Governments for arbitration. We may have a treaty between the two nations that each shall select an arbitrator and those two may select a third and the Governments will abide by whatever their decision may be; or we may pass an act of Congress which will provide that this Government or the President, for instance, shall select arbitrators without any treaty, and if the other nation acquiesces and also appoints its arbitrators the results will be exactly the same, and we have accomplished the same purpose.

As the Senator has stated, we may have trouble with a nation like Russia. Of course when we finally settle a claim with Russia, we will have to settle it with a government whose bonds we will receive, and undoubtedly before that is done the President of the United States will be compelled to recognize some particular government. That is one of the difficulties, of course, that we will have to deal with. If we had the power in the first instance to create these obligations without a treaty, I can not for the life of me see why we have not the same power to extend or to modify the old obligations without any additional treaty. In other words, it can be done by law now, in my opinion, exactly the same as it was done by law without a treaty when the obligations were first created.

I have answered the Senator, as I understand his question.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. No; the Senator has not even tried to answer me. I put a perfectly plain question. I asked if the President of the United States should enter into negotiations with the Government of Great Britain and should enter into an arrangement for the extension or conversion and refunding of its obligation, and we should submit that to the Senate of the United States and the Senate should ratify that agreement, whether the President of the United States would be acting within his powers, and whether the Senate would not be acting within its power.

Mr. McCUMBER. Why, certainly. I thought I answered in the affirmative when I stated the two methods.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Now, I desire to comment on what the Senator has said. The Senator said that exactly the same result which can be attained by a treaty can be attained by cooperative legislative acts of the two Governments concerned. I am astonished to hear such sentiments avowed by so able a lawyer as the Senator from North Dakota.

Let us understand, Mr. President, what that means. The President of the United States can not make an agreement with a foreign Government under the treaty-making power unless he can get the assent of two-thirds of the Senate of the United States. He can not get that assent.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Just a moment, and then I shall be glad to yield.

The Senator from North Dakota proposes that under those circumstances he would suggest to the foreign Governments that the parliament and Government of that country pass a certain law in substance the same as the treaty contemplated, and he will get the same law passed through the Congress of the United States by a majority of both Houses, and therefore he will beat the Constitution in that way. That is the contention made by the Senator from North Dakota. I deny, Mr. President, that the treaty-making power confided by the Constitution of the United States in the President and two-thirds of the Senate can be contravened by any such device as that.

I now yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I should like to ask the Senator from Montana a question. I understand that the Senator contends that the Congress of the United States has no jurisdiction and no authority to legislate in regard to this property of the United States, these foreign bonds.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I do not.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It seems to me that that would inevitably be the conclusion following the Senator's statement.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Oh, no.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Because that is all that this bill is. The Senator, as I understood him, was arguing against the authority of Congress to enact this bill.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I was.

Mr. POINDEXTER. This bill is merely legislation affecting the condition of this property which belongs to the United States.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That is quite aside from the argument that I am making. It is not affecting this property. Congress can dispose of this property in any way it sees fit.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is what it is proposing to do by the passage of this bill.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Oh, no; Congress is not proposing to do that at all.

Mr. POINDEXTER. If this legislation is enacted, it certainly does affect this property and fix its conditions and disposition, and I understand the Senator admits that Congress has a right to do that.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Congress undoubtedly has the right to dispose of this property; it has a right to declare war; it has the right to create indebtedness; it has a right to do many things; but when it comes to dealing with a foreign Government, that is another matter. It is perfectly plain to me, although it may be confused to the Senator.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I should like to ask one more question. Did I understand the Senator from Montana to argue that Congress could not pass any law affecting the foreign relations of the United States?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I did not say "affecting." I would not make that argument.

Mr. POINDEXTER. How about immigration laws and tariff laws?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I would not make any such statement as the Senator from Washington has attributed to me.

Mr. POINDEXTER. We frequently pass tariff laws and immigration laws.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Oh, well, those——

Mr. POINDEXTER. Let me complete the question. Either one of those subjects is a very fit and proper subject for a treaty between this country and a foreign country if we choose to deal with it in that way; but this is the first time that I have ever heard it intimated that if Congress as a whole chooses to legislate with reference to our foreign relations it has no authority to do so.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator from Montana is not confused about it; his mind is perfectly clear on the subject. Let us take the subject of immigration, to which the Senator from Washington refers. We may pass exactly such laws as we see fit concerning the admission of foreigners to this country; that affects our own country, and we may keep them out; but if we want to make an agreement with some other country concerning the admission of their citizens to this country, that agreement must be made, as such agreements always have been made, by the President and the Senate of the United States. That was the case as to the treaty with China. We made a treaty with China under which we agreed that certain Chinese should be excluded from this country, and we afterwards legislated upon the subject. The treaty relative to that matter has been abrogated; it does not now exist; but we legislated upon the subject as we saw fit.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Then, does the Senator contend——

Mr. WALSH of Montana. So that, if the Senator will pardon me, Congress may pass laws which in some way or other affect foreign countries, but when it comes to making an agreement with a foreign country, such agreement must be made by the President and the Senate and not by the Congress.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator has just stated that a treaty could be made, if both countries agreed to it, between this country and some foreign country with reference to immigration or with reference to a tariff?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. We have done so.

Mr. POINDEXTER. But the Senator admits at the same time, in so far as our own rights in those matters are concerned, that we may proceed by the enactment of legislation. Now, why should not the same rule apply to these foreign bonds? We could deal with them, as the Senator has just stated, by treaty, but we may also deal with them by legislation. The same rule applies to this foreign matter which applies to immigration and to the tariff or to any other foreign question.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Reiteration is not argument. It is perfectly plain that when we make an agreement with a foreign Government we make a treaty with it, and it falls under the treaty-making power. If we proceed without an agreement with it, as a matter of course, we may legislate as we see fit.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator from Montana is undoubtedly familiar with the fact that the Supreme Court of the United States has decided time and time again that treaties may be modified or repealed by an act of Congress?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The law as it affects the people of this country, as it is construed by the courts, of course, may be modified by a later statute; but the Senator from Montana, although perfectly familiar with the principle, does not see that it has any application to the matter which is now before us.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It seems to me it has a very immediate and a very direct application to the matter before us, because the Senator is arguing that this relates to a foreign question which can only be dealt with by treaty. I am suggesting to him that if it were dealt with by a treaty, the treaty could be modified by an act of Congress unless the act of Congress should affect some contractual relation and interfere with a moral obligation. If Congress sees fit to act before the treaty is negotiated or before any obligation is entered into limiting the conditions which might be dealt with in any such treaty, it certainly has the right to do so.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Of course, the Senator from Washington has a right to his opinion.

Mr. McCUMBER. If the Senator will yield to me, I desire to say that I understand the Senator admits that the law under which the obligations were created was properly passed by the Congress without the aid of the Executive in negotiating a treaty?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I do not care to enter into a discussion whether it was or was not; but I had expressed my view about it, that it could be justified upon the ground of an obligation arising from a mere statement of the conditions by the Congress, or it might be justified under the war power of Congress. However, we are not discussing the validity of the law now.

Mr. McCUMBER. The point I would make is this: Outside of the mere matter of appropriation the Executive could have accomplished exactly the same result through the aid of a treaty, could he not?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. He could not without the appropriation.

Mr. McCUMBER. I have said outside of the matter of the appropriation.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Undoubtedly, if Congress had appropriated $4,000,000,000 and had authorized the President of the United States to loan that money to foreign Governments, he could then have entered into negotiations with foreign Governments with respect to the loan and have reported his proceedings to the Senate and said that he had loaned that money to the Government of Great Britain, for instance, upon terms that they were to deliver bonds payable in 25 years at 4 per cent and ask for the concurrence of the Senate.

Mr. McCUMBER. I can hardly agree with the Senator that if we take the shorter method of dealing by law with a foreign Government and the foreign Government accepts that method by such action we are avoiding the constitutional provisions relating to a treaty. I do not think that President Wilson at the time he made the recommendation felt that he was avoiding the constitutional provision respecting treaties and escaping the provision making it necessary to have a two-thirds majority in order to ratify a treaty in the Senate. If we take the same method of accomplishing the same result now in extending the time or in fixing a different time when these foreign obligations shall be due or in fixing a higher rate of interest, I do not think we are avoiding the constitutional provision relating to treaties by so doing.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Of course, I think it quite likely, if the Senator will pardon me, that President Wilson did not enter into any consideration of the subject at all; neither did the Congress of the United States. They simply assumed, exactly as the committee has done at the present time, that both of them had the power; that there was entire power to enact the law; and until now at least there has not been any serious question about it; but that does not establish that such power exists by any means.

Mr. President, if the Senator will give me his attention a little further I want to submit a further observation as well. I called attention to the obvious impossibility of the doctrine being created, which was stated by the Senator from North Dakota, that by concurrent action of the two Governments the requirement of the assent of two-thirds of the Senate may be obviated in the case of any treaty whatsoever that the President of the United States cared to negotiate, merely by the passage of reciprocal legislation of the two Governments involved. Mr. President, bear in mind that the Senator from North Dakota agrees that the President of the United States, if he negotiated a treaty with Great Britain for the refunding of this indebtedness and submitted it to the Senate, would be entirely within his rights; but if this question falls within the legislative power of Congress at all we can get rid of the participation of the President of the United States, for he may refuse to give his assent to this legislation; and yet it may be passed by a two-thirds vote of both Houses, and, according to the contention of the Senator, it becomes a law, the objections of the President of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding. Bear in mind that in the case of a treaty the President of the United States has his say about it, and no man and no body of men can take it away from him.

Moreover, Mr. President, not only does he participate in the original negotiation of the treaty, but after the treaty is ratified by a vote of two-thirds of the Senate, if it is not satisfactory to him, he may put his veto upon it, and no man can gainsay his action.

So, under the scheme of legislation which is now proposed, we are not only outside of the domain of legislative action, as I shall show directly from the Federalist, but we are placing the power to enact legislation of this character in the hands of Congress, where it may carry out its will in defiance of the President of the United States, who is charged with the whole power and duty of taking care of our foreign relations.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, that was the doctrine of President Wilson, and that was disputed——

Mr. WALSH of Montana. It does not make any difference as to that; I do not want to enter into a dispute with the Senator; but, if it was, it was just as erroneous if entertained by President Wilson as though it were entertained by the Senator from Washington.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Probably more so, but the views entertained by the President in that respect were not approved by Congress and did not prevail and were not approved by the country.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. So, conceding now, as it is conceded, that this matter does fall within the treaty-making power, if it likewise falls within the legislative power, the President of the United States may be robbed of his absolute veto in relation to a matter of agreement with a foreign power.

But there is another view, Mr. President, and that is that it does not fall within the legislative power at all; it is not legislation. The question of the treaty-making power had some little consideration from Alexander Hamilton at the time the Constitution was before the country for ratification, and he laid down the doctrine, which I think has never been controverted, that the legislative power deals with domestic matters exclusively—that is to say, laws passed by Congress have no power or effect beyond the jurisdiction of the United States, while those things which fall within the treaty-making power and are crystallized into treaties extend beyond the limits of the United States and are effective as well within the country with which the treaty is made.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, as I am compelled to leave the Chamber in a few moments, will the Senator allow me to ask him a question at this point?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think the question is pertinent. Let us suppose that we pass this bill and that the commission appointed under it negotiates an agreement with a similar commission appointed by the French Government; they settle upon bonds, and the bonds are issued by the French Government and accepted and received by the United States, would the Senator say that those bonds were void? Would they not be legal obligations of the French Government?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I do not imagine the French Government would repudiate them.

Mr. McCUMBER. But I ask the Senator, irrespective of the French Government repudiating them, would the bonds be legal? Of course, when I speak of "legality" I mean in the sense that they are recognized by the other Government.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I am not an expert on the French constitution and can not answer that question; but I will say to the Senator that if the situation were reversed and the obligations were due from this country to France, I should say that, under the Constitution of the United States, those bonds of the United States would not be legal, although, as a matter of course, the Government of the United States would doubtless not repudiate its obligations.

But, Mr. President, I want to follow this matter just a little further. Assume, for the purposes of the discussion which we are pursuing, that the President of the United States vetoes this bill; that it comes back and is passed by two-thirds of both Houses and becomes a law; that the commission enters upon its work and carries on negotiations and makes agreements with the foreign powers against the express desire of the President of the United States, who repudiates the whole transaction. Thus, Mr. President, we would rob the President of the United States of a power that is conferred upon him by the Constitution of the United States.

Now, I will read from the Federalist, at page 500 of Ford's edition:

> With regard to the intermixture of powers, I shall rely upon the explanations already given in other places of the true sense of the rule upon which that objection is founded, and shall take it for granted, as an inference from them, that the union of the Executive with the Senate in the article of treaties is no infringement of that rule. I venture to add that the particular nature of the power of making treaties indicates a peculiar propriety in that union. Though several writers on the subject of government place that power in the class of executive authorities, yet this is evidently an arbitrary disposition, for, if we attend carefully to its operation, it will be found to partake more of the legislative than of the executive character, though it does not seem strictly to fall within the definition of either of them.

So, Mr. President, a matter which falls within the treaty-making power is necessarily excluded, according to Alexander Hamilton, from the legislative power; and legislative powers are all the powers the Congress of the United States possesses.

> The essence of the legislative authority is to enact laws, or, in other words, to prescribe rules for the regulation of the society; while the execution of the laws and the employment of the common strength, either for this purpose or for the common defense, seem to comprise all the functions of the executive magistrate. The power of making treaties is plainly neither the one nor the other. It relates neither to the execution of the subsisting laws nor to the enaction of new ones, and still less to an exertion of the common strength. Its objects are contracts with foreign nations, which have the force of law, but derive it from the obligations of good faith. They are not rules prescribed by the sovereign to the subject, but agreements between sovereign and sovereign. The power in question seems, therefore, to form a distinct department and to belong properly neither to the legislative nor to the executive.

So, Mr. President, when the Senator from North Dakota admits that transactions of this character fall within the treaty-making power prescribed by the Constitution, he confesses that it does not fall within the legislative powers that are confided to the Congress of the United States by the Constitution.

Mr. President, that being the case, I inquire of the Senators what occasion there is for this legislation. Confessedly, the President of the United States has all the power he needs to carry on negotiations with these foreign Governments to make just exactly such arrangements as he may see fit to make. If he cares to do so he may appoint commissioners to carry on negotiations without even submitting the matter to the Senate of the United States for ratification. No one questions that. Indeed, Mr. President, this legislation, which ties down the hands of the President of the United States so that he can not, if it has any force at all, appoint commissioners except they are confirmed by the Senate of the United States, robs him of a power conferred upon him by the Constitution, and a power that has been frequently exercised. In other words, the President of the United States by the Constitution is given the power to negotiate treaties; and he may conduct those negotiations in person, as did President Wilson by going to Versailles, or he may designate our ambassadors abroad to carry on the negotiations, as he did in the case of the treaty of Berlin with Germany, or as was done in the case of the purchase of Louisiana, he may appoint his special representatives to carry on the negotiations; and the Congress of the United States can not take that power from him and say: "You shall appoint no commissioner unless the appointment of that commissioner is ratified by the Senate of the United States." He has the undoubted power to appoint just such commissioners as he may see fit to appoint to carry on these negotiations.

Mr. President, I ask what is the need of this legislation? The President of the United States unquestionably has the power to carry on the negotiations. He has the power to appoint his commissioners to carry on the negotiations. He has the power to make just such arrangements as are satisfactory to him for the adjustment and settlement of these claims.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I see by the news dispatches that the soviet government, if it attends the economic conference, is going to present very large demands upon other governments, including the United States, for the wrongs and injuries inflicted by the United States upon the Russian people. I assume that they have in mind possibly the fact of our sending soldiers into Archangel in connection with the Japanese. If we can authorize a commission to settle this matter without reporting back to the Senate of the United States for ratification, would we not be wholly within our rights if we should authorize a commission to adjust any claims between Russia and the United States without reporting back to the Congress of the United States?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I understand that to be the contention of the Senator from North Dakota—that we can appoint commissioners under an act of Congress, and they can appoint commissioners under an act of their legislative body, and that these two can get together and make an agreement, and that that is strictly in accordance with the Constitution.

Mr. BORAH. A settlement of that kind might involve the transfer of territory, as it often has, in the adjustment of a situation. I take it no one would contend that we might go so far as to authorize a commission either to part with territory or to take territory without the ratification of a treaty.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I do not know why we should not, under the contention that was made. Take the Aleutian Islands: We agree to give the Aleutian Islands to Russia in adjustment of the claims, and Russia passes a statute accepting the Aleutian Islands in satisfaction of the claims, and the Congress of the United States passes a statute granting the Aleutian Islands to Russia in satisfaction of the claims.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I should like to inquire what difference it would make whether this commission dealt with $10,000,000,000 or with territory worth $1,000,000?

Mr. BORAH. There could be no difference so far as the principle is concerned.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, my understanding is, if I may be permitted to suggest it, that one of the express powers of Congress, conferred by the Constitution of the United States, is the power to deal with the territory of the United States.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. And the Senator understands that that means that Congress may cede territory to a foreign government?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I certainly do.

Mr. BORAH. I have not that view of that provision of the Constitution.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, let me add that it is even doubted whether through the treaty making power a thing of that kind can be done.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do not concede the view of the Senator from Montana that the President and the Senate are superior to the Congress of the United States. I think, on the contrary, that the Congress has much vaster powers than have the President and the Senate in the treaty making power, both as to the territory of the United States and as to the finances of the United States, and as to every other vital interest of the United States.

Mr. BORAH. I do not understand, however, that the Congress of the United States could authorize an exchange of territory between this country and a foreign country. That must necessarily come as the result of a contract with the foreign country, and that contract must necessarily be a treaty.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Suppose Congress passed a law ceding certain territory to a foreign country. We have already passed laws appropriating money to pay for territory that foreign countries have ceded to us. I think the Congress is less likely to do such a thing than, perhaps, the treaty-making power would be. Neither one of them is likely to do it, and we are only dealing with supposititious and hypothetical and rather far-fetched cases, but we are talking abstractly about the power of Congress. If we should assume that Congress would convey one of the Aleutian Islands to some foreign country, for reasons that were satisfactory to Congress, and that foreign country, through its proper law-making power, should accept that island, would not the transaction be complete and constitutional in every way?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. It would be exactly the same thing as if they came and took it by force. They would have it, and that would end the transaction.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I think there is quite a difference between an act of Congress and force.

Mr. BORAH. I was only calling attention to this as an illustration, but the thing that interests me, is where the line of demarkation is; in other words, where we are to find it. If we can authorize, through a commission, the settlement of $11,000,000,000 of indebtedness without reporting back for confirmation, I can not understand why we may not go practically all the way with reference to those things which have heretofore been considered as covered by the treaty-making power. I am suggesting this not as concluding my views but thinking aloud, as it were.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I think the Senator is entirely right that no commission would have a right to dispose of or to deal in any way with the bonds of the United States unless it was approved by some constitutional authority, but that approval can be either after the act of a commission that was authorized without definite limits to its powers or it can be approved in advance, and that is what this bill proposes to do—to lay down the terms and conditions under which this commission can act, and it must be confined to those limitations laid down by Congress. If it is confined to the terms that are laid down by an act of Congress, what is the occasion to repeat the act of Congress after the negotiations have been completed? The commission will have already complied with the limitations made by Congress.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the argument of the Senator from Washington would cover every possible power that comes under the treaty-making power. If his argument is good, of course it seems to me, to follow it out to its logical conclusion, that there is nothing that we can not authorize in advance to be done with reference to a treaty, and there will be no necessity for reporting back at all.

Mr. President, we may be approaching a solution of a matter which has been a source of a great deal of difficulty and trouble to some of our foreign friends. It has been stated for months in the foreign press, particularly in England, that one of the reasons why England and other foreign countries could not do business with the United States was because they could not deal directly and alone with the Executive, but must deal not only with the Executive but with the Senate of the United States. The late Viscount Bryce, in his brilliant lectures at Williams College last year—although it was afterwards cut out of his book, I understand, and very properly, I think—suggested that before we could have convenient methods of dealing between foreign countries and this country the Senate of the United States must be shorn of some of its powers with reference to treaty making. He called attention to the fact that when Great Britain made a treaty or France made a treaty through its executive that was the end of it, but that they had had some experience within the last two or three years showing that that was not the end of it in the United States. That was supposed to be a great inconvenience to them. It led to misunderstandings and presented obstacles that were difficult to overcome. We may have reached the solution of it, Mr. President, because if we can authorize this, may we not authorize anything to be done which may be thought proper at the economic conference and make that the end of it, whether it is ratified by the Senate of the United States or not?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Let us go further. Why not pass an act here accepting in its entirety the treaty of Versailles? Possibly some day or other we may again have a President of the United States who is in favor of that treaty, and we may have a majority in both Houses of Congress who are in favor of it. According to the contention now seriously made on this floor, the treaty having been accepted by 41 nations—by all of the nations signatory to it, I believe, except the United States—it would be possible by a simple act of Congress to make that the law of the United States.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Did we not do that? Have we not just done that?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Oh, well, that is all right.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I think it is all right, but I understood the Senator——

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Will the Senator tell us when and where we ratified a treaty by the action of a majority of both Houses of Congress?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Why, by legislation recently enacted by resolution of Congress.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. What does the Senator refer to?

Mr. POINDEXTER. The resolution declaring a state of peace between the United States and Germany and approving and ratifying the treaty of Versailles.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. We made a treaty with Germany ratifying it. We recognized that our resolution was utterly insufficient, and we proceeded to make a treaty; but if the contention now is correct a very easy opportunity is made, if there should be a political revolution in this country and a bare majority of one in both Houses of Congress, to ratify the Versailles treaty under the doctrine now announced.

Mr. President, the treaty-making power is not coordinate at all. It is exclusive. It was so declared by the present Chief Justice of the United States when he was Solicitor General of the United States. His opinion on the subject will be found in the nineteenth volume of the Opinions of the Attorney General. It is to the effect that whenever a matter falls within the treaty-making power the power is exclusive.

Mr. President, I was discussing the need of this legislation, the occasion for it, the full power now being vested in the President of the United States to make just such arrangements as he may care to make with respect to these obligations, subject, of course, to the ratification of the Senate.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I suggest that the need of it arises out of the fact—there is no concealment about it—that the Executive does not desire to report back these contracts for confirmation. Any amendment to this bill submitted for the purpose of requiring the Chief Magistrate to report back will reveal very quickly what the need of it is in the minds of the negotiators.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I understand that an amendment to that effect has been tendered.

Mr. BORAH. Yes; and in my judgment it will be rejected by all who are in favor of this bill.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, three similar amendments were offered in the Committee on Finance, and all were voted down; and the Secretary of the Treasury plainly stated that he did not want to have his power limited so as to be compelled to report back any negotiations that he made, for fear lest the negotiations with one country would interfere with his negotiating with another country.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. But, Mr. President, while in my judgment the bill would be improved by an amendment of that character—it contemplates, as I understand, practically a ratification by the Congress; that is to say, by a legislative act in which the House of Representatives shall participate with the Senate—I insist, as a matter of course, that that, while it would improve it from the standpoint of policy, would be equally without the power of Congress.

Mr. BORAH. The only difference would be that if it comes back in the form of a treaty under the recognized power it would take a different vote.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Exactly.

Mr. BORAH. It takes only a majority vote if it is a legislative act.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Exactly; so it becomes exceedingly important at this time to determine whether this falls within the legislative power of the Government or whether it falls within the treaty-making power of the Government. In the one case ratification, even if a provision for ratification is incorporated in the bill, will come by a majority of both Houses of Congress. In the other case it will come by a vote of two-thirds of the United States Senate. So, from any point of view whatever, it becomes a matter of vast importance, practically and legally.

I was discussing, however, the question of the necessity for the legislation. Whatever may be said concerning the wisdom of those provisions of the bill which deal with the bonds and obligations of these governments now held by our Government evidencing loans of money which are made to them, what shall be said concerning the provision of the bill which gives to that commission, which lasts forever—there is no limit whatever to its life—the power "to adjust and settle any and all claims, not now represented by bonds or obligations, which the United States of America now has or hereafter may have against any foreign Government, and to accept securities therefor"? I wish the chairman of the committee were here to advise us as to the occasion for the enactment of such sweeping general legislation in addition to the powers granted dealing with the disposition of these obligations arising out of the Government loans. What justfication is there? I should like to hear from any member of the committee reporting this bill as to how they can justify that provision of it.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I am unable to answer the question which the Senator has just propounded; but I understood him to state that the powers granted to this commission were unlimited, and did not terminate at a fixed time.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I want to call the Senator's attention to section 4. It says:

That the authority granted by this act shall cease and determine at the end of three years from date of the passage of this act.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Quite right. I had overlooked that in that connection. I am thankful to the Senator; but within that time any and all claims that may arise they may settle and adjust as provided in the bill; and I am curious to know why that provision was inserted in this bill, and what justification there is for it.

Mr. President, I think enough has been said in this connection to impress upon Senators who will give any attention at all to it the very grave nature of the duty that is before us.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The obligation to preserve the Constitution in its entirety must address itself to every Senator in this connection; and a scrupulous effort ought to be made, particularly by us, the present repositories of that power, not in any way to detract from the powers of the United States Senate confided to it by the Constitution.

I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. POINDEXTER. If the Senator will permit me, I would like to call his attention to a few lines in the joint resolution of Congress with relation to the Versailles treaty to which I referred a moment ago and which seems to be very similar, so far as its relation to dealing with the question of foreign relation which also might be dealt with in a treaty is concerned, to the question which the Senator is discussing.

In that joint resolution, approved July 2, 1921, the joint resolution terminating the state of war between the Imperial German Government and the United States of America and between the Imperial and Royal Austro-Hungarian Government and the United States of America, among other provisions which bear out the same principle, is the following in section 4:

That in making this declaration, and as a part of it, there are expressly reserved to the United States of America and its nationals any and all rights, privileges, indemnities, reparations, or advantages, together with the right to enforce the same, to which it or they have become entitled under the terms of the armistice signed November 3, 1918, or any extensions or modifications thereof; or which were acquired by or are in the possession of the United States of America by reason of its participation in the war or to which its nationals have thereby become entitled, or which, under the treaty of St. Germain-en-Laye, or the treaty of Trianon, have been stipulated for its or their benefit; or to which it is entitled as one of the principal allied and associated powers; or to which it is entitled by virtue of any act or acts of Congress; or otherwise.

All of those matters were matters which could properly have been dealt with in the treaty and under which the President undoubtedly could have proceeded to conduct negotiations under his constitutional power of treaty making, but they were dealt with and disposed of by this act of Congress.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. We did not make any agreement with any foreign power.

Mr. POINDEXTER. We are not making any agreement with any foreign power in this bill.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. No; but we are authorizing the commissioners to do it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. So it was in the joint resolution, which I have just read, laying down the terms and conditions of any treaty which might be made.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. No; there is nothing in the joint resolution which the Senator has read which reposes in any body power to negotiate a treaty.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am not speaking about reposing in any body power to negotiate a treaty, neither is there in the bill any provision for negotiating a treaty. There is nothing about any treaty in the pending refunding bill. It simply lays down certain conditions and terms upon which this debt can be refunded. It does not require a treaty.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. It authorizes the commissioners to enter into agreements with foreign powers, which all authorities agree is a treaty.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. A different interpretation, which has been put upon this joint resolution which the Senator from Washington has just read, was the construction placed upon it by the Secretary of State who proceeded immediately, when he came to deal with Germany, to put it in the form of a treaty and send it here for ratification. This part of the resolution which the Senator has quoted fixed the status of the properties supposedly in this country, but in order to have the ratification or the approval of Germany to that it was put in the form of a treaty and sent here for ratification.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Unquestionably.

Mr. POINDEXTER. There was nothing undertaken by the President of the United States in conflict with that joint resolution. I do not apprehend that the President would have undertaken to negotiate a treaty—to carry on any negotiation in conflict with the terms of that resolution which refers to the rights and privileges of the United States acquired under the armistice with Germany, all of which were dealt with in the treaty of Versailles. That treaty included every subject matter which is disposed of in the joint resolution, and the joint resolution is the law of the land. It has not been modified or annulled in any way whatever by any treaty which has been negotiated by the President.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Of course, it is the law of the land, whereas a state of war existed prior thereto, and certain responsibilities and certain liabilities and certain situations arose with respect to our citizens by reason of which we declared that that status no longer existed. Furthermore, we said that we did not waive any rights which we might have under the treaty of Versailles, and it was recognized that no rights accrued to us so far as Germany was concerned without a treaty with Germany, and we then proceeded to make a treaty with Germany.

Mr. President, I have said all that I care to say about this matter. I think it can not be denied—in fact, it is admitted upon the floor—that the power to enter into these agreements or contracts with a foreign Government falls within the treaty-making power; that if the President of the United States entered into negotiations with a foreign Government and made an agreement with such Government and submitted it to the Senate of the United States and it was ratified by the Senate, both the Senate of the United States and the President would be entirely within their power.

Now it is proposed to take that power out from the classification in which it legitimately falls, and to say that the Congress of the United States may legislate upon the subject and appoint a commission by a legislative act, against possibly the veto of the President of the United States, and that such commission can negotiate treaties and agreements with those foreign powers in relation to this indebtedness and thus deprive him of his right under the Constitution to say whether the agreement with the foreign Governments shall or shall not be entered into. I should think the President of the United States, charged with preserving the prerogatives of that office, could not for a moment give his sanction to legislation of that character, any more than Andrew Jackson could when the very same matter was presented to him. He safely guarded the obligations and the duties of that great office which were reposed in him by the people of the United States.

We have a responsibility to the people who have intrusted us with these powers. They have said to us, "Whenever an agreement is made with a foreign power we expect you to have something to say with respect to it, and we insist that it shall not be chargeable as a part of the law of our land until it is ratified by two-thirds of the body to which we elect you as Members." We can not, consistent with our duties to our constituents and to ourselves, not to speak of the obligation of our oaths, give sanction to a measure of this kind which so obviously intrenches upon the limits prescribed by the Constitution.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I desire to submit some observations upon another phase of this question. The consideration of the funding of the foreign debt has brought out again in accentuated form what is supposed to be our duty and our obligations to the people of Europe. We have had in this country from the close of the war until the present time a zealous presentation of our duties and obligations to the people of that continent. The discussion is now renewed, and from many quarters comes the advice of what we should do, which includes everything from feeding the hungry to the cancellation of the foreign debt. I read a single paragraph from a late issue of the Fortnightly Review, published in London, in which it is said:

The time is not yet ripe to attempt to persuade the bulk of the Americans that cancellation of the war debts is not only fair but is good business; that in the long run the noncancellation of war debts is not only unjustifiable but is a luxury that not even America can afford. Europe, for that matter, is not yet ripe for cancellation; it is regarded as pro-German and unfriendly in many quarters even to mention the possibility of cancellation, because Germany might suggest that the corollary is a more cooperative and less unilateral arrangement in Europe. Nor is the time ripe to urge that America should shoulder what are, after all, her ineluctable responsibilities in Europe.

I recognize that it is both our duty and to our interest to assist in all practical ways in the rehabilitation of Europe. If our work is carried on along certain lines and within certain limitations, there is no doubt about either our obligation or our economic and financial interest to take part in the rehabilitation of Europe. But before America can do anything more for Europe, Europe must consent to do something for herself. She must put herself, it seems to me, in the attitude, both politically and economically, where the assistance which we may seek to render may be helpful and beneficial. Nothing is to be gained by withholding plain discussion of the real facts. Europe is not doing her part, and justice to our people requires that facts be stated.

We may continue to pour out vast sums of charity into Europe, and we may postpone the payments of the debts which Europe owes to the United States. We may forgive entirely, if we choose, the interest, but under the present policy and under the present conditions which obtain in Europe by reason of those policies, our assistance will be of little moment. Indeed, in my judgment, it will not reach the great mass of the people at all. Whatever assistance we may seek to render will reach no further than the bureaucracies of Europe and those who are still engaged in building up and maintaining vast armies and military establishments. In other words, to speak concretely, so long as the Versailles treaty remains in its present terms, unrevised, and so long as there is an attempt to execute it, any assistance which we may seek to render will be of little or no avail. Indeed, we can have nothing in common with the nations of Europe so long as the policies and principles embodied in that treaty constitute the law of that continent. The imperialism, the distinctive terms, the manifest purposes, so plainly embodied in the treaty, are not only politically and economically unwise but they are at variance with everything in which we as a people believe.

We are expected, so we are advised, particularly upon the part of certain distinguished individuals abroad, to take part in the conference at Genoa, the economic conference called for the purpose of devising plans for the rehabilitation of Europe. I observe that in the program or the agenda to be presented to the conference under No. 3 it is said:

Conditions necessary to the restoration of economic confidence without endangering or altering existing treaties.

No one has yet undertaken to disclose how it is possible to restore economic confidence or sanity in Europe without changing or altering existing treaties. That is the first and indispensable step to be taken; that is the beginning. Without that we shall do in the future as in the past three years—temporize and go from bad to worse.

Shortly after the Versailles treaty was written a number of economic experts were convened for the purpose of considering economic questions in the light of that treaty. Without division of sentiment or opinion and without conflict of views, they early in the history of that treaty arrived at the conclusion that Europe could not be restored so long as its terms were maintained. That view has continued to prevail, and has been more largely and more generally entertained in late months than ever before. Indeed, outside of a narrow official life no other view anywhere prevails.

The present premier of France in his first address to the French Assembly used this language:

So long as these clauses are not executed we will not only have the right to preserve integrally the penalties which have been provided, but to institute others if need be, and we will be in a position to declare that the time for evacuation of the left bank of the Rhine has not begun to run. That is the point of view which the French Government has constantly maintained. More now than ever is it necessary to maintain it.

I take it, Mr. President, that that has become the settled policy of the French Government for a time at least. It is an announcement of grave concern, and we in the United States may well ponder it in shaping our course. A great many people in this country and in other parts of the world were impressed by the speech of the then premier of France made to the Washington conference. It was thought to be warlike, harking back to conditions which existed three and four years ago. It seems now that it was entirely too peaceful in its import and in its intent to satisfy those who are now in charge of affairs in France. I do not know of anything more discouraging than such a policy as just announced in the address, a paragraph of which I have read.

Of course, as to the internal policy of France or the particular viewpoint which France may entertain with reference to these questions we can have very little to say, but in so far as it bears upon the action or conduct of the American Government or the American people, it is a matter of legitimate discussion and of great concern.

Let us go back, therefore, to-day, Mr. President, and briefly review the facts connected with the making of the Versailles treaty, its attempted execution, and its present effect upon the affairs of Europe.

In the issue of the New York Times of January 15, 1922, is found one of the articles now being written by Mr. Ray Stannard Baker upon what is said to be the contents of the steel box—that is to say, the box in which President Wilson kept his private or confidential papers. This reveals, as it has never been revealed before to my knowledge, the wide conflict of views between the American delegation and other delegates in Paris as to what the Versailles treaty should contain, its terms, and the principles which should be embodied in it. I am happy to say that the facts as disclosed are altogether to the credit and to the honor of the American delegation. This article said, referring to the things advocated by the President of the United States:

Among other things, compulsory military service was to be abolished not only in Germany but everywhere, "all powers subscribing to the treaty of peace." The manufacture of "munitions and implements of war by private enterprise or for private profit" was to be forbidden. "Full and frank publicity as to all national armaments" was to disturb the corner stone of secrecy upon which, under the old system, military preparation had always rested. And, above all, there was a new standard of armament proposed, that of "domestic safety." It was as though Samson had given a first shake to the pillars of the temple.

When one of the French representatives, M. Bourgeois, at one time premier of France—

Introduced the French plan for a league of nations (in the League of Nations Commission two weeks later) it was found to harmonize completely with Marshal Foch's military plan. It filled in the details of the organization behind the line of defense. It provided for an international army and navy with a permanent staff to see that this force was kept up to standard and to prepare plans for its speedy and effective use. So far from forcing the abolition of compulsory military service, it provided for the possible adoption of that principle by the entire world, for it permitted the international body to require a member State to adopt compulsory service on recommendation of the general staff.

This, Mr. President, was the outline of the League of Nations as proposed by the French Government, embodying a general staff in control of an international army and an international navy, with power to regulate and morally enforce compulsory military service upon the nations of the world. The league was to keep the peace by sheer brutal military domination; the world was to be governed by military force. Such were the apostles of peace at Versailles.

Again—and this, Mr. President, is the most vital part of the suggestions there made and here recorded:

In order, therefore, to be absolutely safe, the Allies must not only impose military disarmament upon Germany with the control of the Rhine frontier, backed by an armed League of Nations, but Germany must also be disarmed or crippled economically.

Germany should not only be disarmed by virtue of the destruction of her navy and the disbandment of her army, but the plan included that which was afterwards, in my judgment, to a marked degree incorporated—the economic destruction of Germany. That is the key to the policy of Europe at this time; that is the real policy, the policy which is fast working the ruin of a continent and sacrificing the fortunes, health, and life of millions. It is not a question of security against aggression by a German army, which does not exist, but it is the security which they conceive to arise out of the destruction economically of an entire people.

President Wilson—

Says the article—was vigorous in his expression regarding the findings of M. Loucheur, which Gen. Bliss had also opposed when they were advanced earlier in the supreme war council. He even went so far as to call it a "panic program."

Indeed it was a panic program, and much worse, as subsequent events have disclosed.

Here is his exact comment (secret minutes, Feb. 7):

President Wilson considered the recommendations contained in the Loucheur report to be a panic program. The report not only called for the surrender of big guns, which, in his opinion, should be given up, but it also went into details of aircraft and factory production. * * * He thought that if officers were sent there they would get into trouble and would have to be supported by military force.

* * * * * * *

Two days after the President returned to France—

Quoting further—

when these proposals came up in the council he attacked them vigorously and secured sweeping modifications. He called them "an instrumentality for permanently limiting the sovereignty of Germany," and this he could not accept, for it meant an "indefinite continuation" of the military control of Germany. It also meant constant interference, meddling, and prying into trade secrets, which would certainly lead again to war.

Again quoting from the secret minutes, President Wilson said, on March 17:

If the allied armies were to be maintained forever in order to control the carrying out of the peace terms, not peace but allied armed domination would have been established. His Government would never agree to entertain such an arrangement, and, were he to enter into such an agreement, he would be far exceeding his authority under the United States Constitution.

This discloses, Mr. President, the real object and purpose of the Versailles treaty—not alone to disarm Germany but to go much further and to control all her economic affairs and ultimately lead, it was no doubt hoped and believed, to her dismemberment. I know that these are matters which will give rise to a difference of opinion and criticism, but in the interest of the American people it is time that these facts were being stated. We as a nation pledged the German people during the war that we were not seeking their destruction but the destruction of their masters. But even had we made such pledge, such a policy is so destructive, so fraught with ruin to a whole continent, so inhuman, that we can have no part in it and no sympathy with it.

Mr. Clemenceau, in his preface to Tardieu's book, gives his view of this treaty, and it is not different from the view which I am now expressing. I do not in my views of the treaty do him an injustice. He says:

Bernhardi it is who said that war is only the continuation of the pursuit of peace by other means. I can see in that nothing but the brutal assertion of a fact.

He further says:

I note the fact, and none the less maintain, according to Bernhardi himself, that the treaty of Versailles, like all treaties, is and can only be a prolongation of war activities until complete fulfillment.

And thus the Versailles treaty has been and is to-day a continuation of the war and of war activities in Europe, notwithstanding we have supposedly been at peace since the signing of the armistice. It involves activities which relate to a condition of mind and to a condition of affairs which obtain alone, or ought to obtain alone, with reference to war. I quote from the famous Frenchman, Mr. Cambon, who says:

The situation created in Europe by the various treaties of peace that brought the World War to an end is still so disturbed and so obscure that we scarcely dare to characterize the cessation of hostilities by the word "peace." In the East fighting continues between the nations of central Europe; new nationalities that have been set up on the ruins of the three great Empires have collapsed and are still endeavoring to find their definite foundations.

This, Mr. President, has been the effect of the treaty of Versailles, and this will continue to be its effect so long as it remains unmodified and unrevised. This condition will render utterly useless any attempt upon the part of the American people to serve the cause of rehabilitation in Europe.

The treaty was not only made in contravention of the advice and the principles advocated by the American President and delegates, but the prophecies which he delivered with reference to its effect have been carried out to a certain fulfillment, as revealed in the condition of affairs which now obtains throughout the Continent.

It may be that the political masters of Europe will wish to maintain this treaty just as it is and execute with the zeal of a Shylock. If so, there is nothing left for this country to do but to preserve as best we may our own economic life. I am well aware that while Europe suffers much, we can not entirely escape, but I am also convinced that to join in these policies is to hasten our sufferings and to accentuate them. But whatever we may suffer, if we disown and denounce this ruinous program, we will at least have been no part of a political crime, second only to that of bringing on the war.

I venture to say, Mr. President, that the situation in Europe with reference to human suffering and to the sacrifices which are now being made in order to maintain and carry out this treaty are very little less than those which obtained during the actual conflict up to 1918. Three years have had their toll of misery, their story of searching distress. Is not that sufficient? Shall we go on until the world falls back into barbarism?

I quote from another distinguished person who participated in the making of this treaty. I take some time of the Senate in making these quotations, in order that a mere statement upon my part, having as little weight as it would, may not be the sole evidence of the facts which this record will contain. The quotation which I am about to make is from Gen. Smuts. In an article published in the New York Times of January 8, 1921, which is entitled "An estimate of Wilson's place in history"—and a very friendly article it is—he says:

There were six months of agonized waiting, during which the world situation rapidly deteriorated. And then he emerged with the peace treaty. It was not a Wilson peace, and he made a fatal mistake in somehow giving the impression that the peace was in accord with his 14 points and his various declarations. Not so the world had understood him. This was a Punic peace, the same sort of peace as the victor had dictated to the vanquished for thousands of years.

The late Viscount Bryce stated in regard to this treaty:

Comparing the treaties they framed with those which were made by the Congress of Vienna in 1814–15, European critics observe that the men of Vienna, Alexander and Metternich, Talleyrand and Hardenburg and Castleragh, may have had bad principles and employed despotic methods and misconceived the interests of their people, but they at least knew what they were doing and gave effect to their principles.

Their work bestowed upon Europe a tolerable peace, which lasted for more than 30 years. But there is not one of the treaties of 1919–20 which is not now already admitted to need amendment, while some are seen to lead straight to future wars. One hears people say, "The sort of peace that those negotiations have given us is as bad as was the war."

Viscount Bryce declared further:

There is no blacker cloud pregnant with future storm hanging over Europe now than that which darkens the bank of the Rhine.

Mr. Baruch, in the introduction to his book entitled "The Making of the Reparation and Economic Sections of the Treaty," says:

Not a few among the Allies were so intent upon momentary gains as to imperil the entire structure of world peace, which, after all, was the real purpose of the conference. * * * Americans and others had the charity to remember that the horrors of war were still heavy upon the world. Try as men might—and I submit that they did try—the spirit of vengeance or of selfish advantage could not be entirely eradicated from the minds of the framers of the treaty.

It was perhaps too much to expect of human nature that a treaty should be written under the circumstances there obtaining free from the unwisdom and shortsightedness, of selfishness and vengeance. But it is not too much to expect, after three years of observation and experience, after the dire effect of such a treaty is everywhere apparent and known to all, that a treaty should be now framed upon different lines—upon lines which will admit of world recovery, upon principles which look to rebuilding rather than to destruction, which look to the future rather than to the past. If the powers which control the situation in Europe continue to disregard the principles and policies upon which alone the rehabilitation of Europe can be had, what shall it profit anyone that condign punishment has been administered to a particular people or nation?

Mr. President, what is the present situation in Europe with which we are asked to deal and what is the cause of it—not the sole cause but the dominating cause—a cause which must be removed before any effective rehabilitation can take place? I read a single paragraph from a copy of the last issue of the Outlook which has come to this country, on page 453:

"The interchange of commodities between one nation and another is the lifeblood of modern European civilization," remarks a writer in the Current Round Table. "In the last few months the stream of international trade, dammed here and there, diverted, has steadily dwindled." No survey of economic conditions on the Continent, even when these are compared with what they were six months, or even three months, ago, can leave the observer other than aghast.

Aghast, yes, aghast! The term is not too strong. Only the indifferent and the grossly uninformed stand other than aghast. Not alone over what has happened but over what must inevitably come to pass. How could the situation be otherwise? Throughout centuries, modern Europe, through adaptation and experience, through habit and custom, had been building up her economic system—her system of exchange, of transportation, of trade, of economic units. This treaty runs counter to and athwart the whole structure. It defies even the laws of nature and challenges the geography of a continent. It spurns at the all but divine law of nationality. People heretofore dependent upon or related to one another by reason of economic laws, transportation, and trade are readjusted and rearranged in harmony with no law and no principle, save the principle of destruction. Nothing was permitted to stand against the terms of the treaty. I could read volumes to support the foregoing quotation. Indeed, the whole of Europe seems to know the cause of the evil and perhaps the extent of the evil, but helpless to remedy it.

Mr. President, the people of the United States during the last three years have poured millions of dollars in the way of charity into Europe. Possibly it has postponed for a time the death of some of those people. We have foregone urging the payment of our loans, and it is now proposed to go further in this respect. I venture to say that there is no Senator here but would be very glad to contribute to the restoration of Europe, not only as a matter of humanity but as a matter of enlightened selfishness. I venture further to say that we may continue to pay the taxpayers' money into Europe, and we may postpone our debt or even cancel it, but the condition of the masses of Europe will never be benefited so long as this treaty and kindred treaties continue to be the law of the land. I am not interested in fattening the bureaucrats and militarists of Europe. I am interested in serving the people, the men and women who are being starved and decimated by these policies. When my vote here can serve them it will be a generous vote. But no language can express my disapproval and abhorrence of these policies which are now resting like a blight upon the countless millions who must pay with their lives for the follies and crimes of leaders.

It is time, Mr. President, that we at least act intelligently with reference to our efforts to serve the European people, and before we can be of help to them we must have a change of policies.

We are told, of course, that one of the reasons for the maintenance of the Versailles treaty in its present terms and conditions is that of insuring security from the military aggressions of Germany. That continues to be the slogan in this country of all those who visit us and seek to enlighten us with reference to the conditions in Europe. We remember very well the great speech of the French premier in which he pictured with telling effect the danger under which France constantly lived and the necessity of maintaining vast land armaments in order to protect her.

It has always been difficult to understand why it was necessary to maintain eight hundred thousand or a million men to take care of the military situation against the aggressions of Germany, whose army has been reduced to 100,000. It is still more difficult to understand this since reading a speech made by the same distinguished Frenchman a few days before he left France to come to this country. From this speech I quote a single paragraph. It was delivered before the French Senate. He says:

> All the demands made upon Germany for execution of the terms of the interallied ultimatum have been satisfied to the utmost extent. Thus, at the present moment—and, indeed, I should not be doing my duty if I failed to inform the country of this—France is certainly protected against the dangers of war.

I think comment is unnecessary. It speaks for itself. It carries us back to reflection to the proposal at Versailles to destroy Germany not as a military force alone but as an economic force.

At the meeting of the conference held between the different premiers of the British Empire, in which Canada, Australia, the mother country, and all the different parts of the Empire were represented on June 20 last, Lloyd-George, speaking of the disarmament of Germany, said:

> The disarmament of Germany, I think, may be stated to be a settled problem. The German fleet has disappeared, and so has the Austrian. The German army has disappeared as a great, powerful force. It numbered millions; it now numbers little more than 100,000 men. It had tens of thousands of guns, great and small; it has now got a few hundreds. It had an enormous number of machine guns and trench mortars; these have gone. Millions of rifles—they surrendered about 30,000 rounds of big ammunition—all that has gone. It is true they have still got some rather irregular formations which we have not succeeded in completely getting rid of. It is not so much Prussia that is giving us trouble as Bavaria. That difficulty will, I think, be overcome in a very short time. So that the problem of disarmament, which was a very vital one because so long as Germany had a big army and big armaments there was no guarantee of peace, will disappear.

Gen. Smuts, at the same conference, said:

> The other great advance that has been made—and it is an enormous advance—is the final disarmament of Germany. That the greatest military empire that has ever existed in history should be reduced to a peace establishment of 100,000 men is something which I considered practically impossible. It is a great achievement, so far-reaching, indeed, that it ought to become the basis of a new departure in world policy. We can not stop with Germany; we can not stop with the disarmament of Germany. It is impossible for us to continue to envisage the future of the world from the point of view of war. I believe it is impossible for us to contemplate the piling up of armaments in the future of the world and the exhaustion of our very limited remaining resources in order to carry out a policy of that kind.

If the statement of the ex-premier of France be correct, and if the statements of the premier of England and the premier of the Union of South Africa be correct—and they are certainly in a position to know, and none of them supposed to be prejudiced in favor of Germany—upon what possible basis can it be asked that the American people continue to forego debts and forego interest in order that these people may continue to maintain such armies and such military equipment as the world never before saw? Do you think it is security that is the basis of this policy? I do not.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. It is true, I believe, that the estimated wealth of Germany at the outbreak of the war was about $80,000,000,000; and, as the war was not fought on German soil, that wealth has not been very greatly disturbed. The Allies, those nations that were opposed to Germany in that conflict, propose to collect $55,000,000,000 from Germany, some part of which has already been collected. Out of that $55,000,000,000 is there not a chance for them to take care of their obligations to the United States?

Mr. BORAH. I do not know that I caught the Senator's question exactly.

Mr. FLETCHER. I understand that Germany is required to pay about $55,000,000,000, and, I say, her national wealth is such that she probably can do that. If she does pay the $55,000,000,000 to her former enemies and to our debtors over there, would there not be an opportunity to have some of that $55,000,000,000 go in liquidation of their debts to the United States?

Mr. BORAH. Yes; I should think that if Germany, under present conditions, can be called upon to pay these large sums and take care of the reparations which the treaty provides for, at least these foreign Governments could pay their interest. It would seem that way. But my opinion is, Mr. President, that the sum which has been assessed against Germany is one which Germany can not pay, and that so long as it is insisted that she shall pay, the present economic conditions will continue in Europe.

Germany was the most powerful economic unit in Europe. She was not only powerful within herself but the system which had been built up made her essential to the prosperity and to the life of other nations. If you destroy a great economic unit in the midst of a continent you must necessarily inflict untold misery upon those who are not within the confines of the particular unit which you are seeking to destroy. There may be those—I do not know—who would like to see such punishment and sums put upon Germany as indicated by Locheur at the conference at Versailles; that it would destroy her economically, dismember her, and send her back to her original parts, which Bismarck welded together. There may be those who think that it is a mere matter of justice to enforce that kind of a decree; but the unfortunate part of it is that such a decree can not be enforced without bringing disaster and ruin to all parts of the European Continent, and indirectly to the whole world. It was this suggestion which President Wilson made, in effect, at Versailles, when Locheur made his suggestion—that it would result not only in taking possession of Germany but in destroying her, and thereby inflicting injury and ruin upon other peoples of the world.

It is my opinion—and it is pretty well borne out by the facts, and I think the statements of the public men of Europe justify it—that it is not fear of the German Army, and certainly not of the German Navy, not fear of the fighting forces of Germany, which these nations entertain; but they believe, I shall in charity assume, that their safety and their security in the future depends upon the destruction of Germany as a great economic unit. I am not here to quarrel with their fears. They may be really entertained. It may be that when Germany rebuilds herself as a great power these nations will again be in danger. I do not entertain that belief; but I am not here to quarrel with it. It is too vague a subject to discuss; but I invite the attention of those who have the making of these policies to the consideration of the fact that while they are pulling Germany down to ruin they are pulling the entire Continent down with her, including themselves.

Mr. President, I desire to call attention now to the views of those who have some right to speak of the present conditions in Europe and the cause of them.

Mr. Darwin P. Kingsley, the president of the New York Life Insurance Co., returned from Europe a short time ago and gave out an interview. I have since had the honor of talking with him about this interview. He had some hesitancy in giving it out, because while he said it was in accordance with the facts, he felt that it would be regarded as pessimistic and unnecessarily disturbing in its effect. I take it, therefore, that there is nothing overstated in the mind of this financier with reference to the matter which he was discussing. He would have been disposed to be overcautious rather than to exaggerate.

Mr. Kingsley does not believe that there is any chance of a restoration of the Hohenzollerns.

Germany seems to have made up its mind on that score. No monarchist restoration would appear to be possible. The elements opposed to such a change in policy are too numerous and widely distributed.

Again, he says that the Continent is more or less of a financial madhouse, and he does not see that any concrete move forward in the direction of a new order of international relationship has been effected since November, 1918.

I think the relationships of the principal nations toward one another are worse now than they were before the war. The mental and spiritual attitude of the people is more bitter, more pronounced. That is the most hopeless feature of it. In the essentials that contribute to peace I should say there has been virtually no progress since the armistice. * * * There is nothing new or enlightened about the way in which she (France) is exasperating Germany in the occupied Provinces. She is doing all she can to "Frenchify" this territory. Further afield, her main effort is directed at breaking up the former German Empire. The political advantages of this to her are obvious.

Quoting further along:

For, make no mistake, Germany is working. And she has precious little unemployment—a total of something like 40,000 unemployed, I believe, throughout the country. I remember on entering Berlin at 6 in the morning I saw long lines of workmen tramping to work. It is the same everywhere.

These facts, Mr. President, seem to me, if they be correct—and there is plenty of evidence that they are correct—to constitute a sufficient basis upon which to found a European policy resting in tolerance and upon the theory of peace, and a reconstruction policy which has to do with peace. You may study from day to day the deliverances of the public men of Europe, and you will find nowhere any suggestion of a policy of rebuilding or reconstruction; but they are still fighting over the propositions which arose immediately out of the war, which are war propositions and which should have been buried with the conflict itself.

Mr. Speyer, the New York financier, lately returning from Europe, gave out the following interview. It needs no comment. It speaks for itself:

Europe unfortunately is still in a very unsettled political and economic condition. There are four little wars being carried on now, with a prospect of one or two more. A large part of Russia remains cut off.

We ought to be very grateful, indeed, that we are not members of the so-called League of Nations, and the spectacle that Europe presents ought to strengthen our resolve not to be drawn into this complicated political caldron, and not to assume any guaranties whatsoever, either direct or contingent, for protecting or maintaining any foreign boundaries.

In Great Britain and other countries the policy that France is pursuing toward Germany is not considered a wise one. It is not calculated to allay animosities or to help restore normal conditions in Germany and economic equilibrium in Europe. To this might be added that nothing has been done to correct the Versailles treaty, which ignored the economic interdependence of large sections, so essential to the welfare of their peoples.

FINANCIAL OUTLOOK.

As to the financial outlook, Mr. Speyer said:

"People are beginning to realize what Keynes and other calm observers stated two years ago, that the reparation payments, imposed on impoverished and diminished beaten countries, are beyond their capacity to meet, and that the efforts they are forced to make to comply therewith are largely responsible for their depreciated currencies.

"As the great creditor Nation of the world, we have now a very direct and substantial interest in the economic affairs of Europe. It is rather curious to hear Frenchmen claim that they can not even pay us the interest on what they owe us when at the same time they declare that Germany is able to pay about 10 times the amount of the principal of their debt.

"Of course, we are bound to be affected unfavorably by the depreciation of foreign currencies. Their decreased purchasing power naturally must curtail our export of raw material, like copper, cotton, etc. This is particularly true of the decline in the value of the mark, Germany having been one of our best customers.

"This has the further disadvantage for us that Germany, paying her workmen wages in the low-priced marks, can and must undersell in the markets of the world our manufacturers, who pay higher wages in dollars."

I quote now from an article in the London Nation under date of November 26, 1921:

If Europe is to escape the approaching calamity of a complete and general breakdown of her finances, with an attendant paralysis of industry and commerce, some early and vigorous action must be taken by her. We are all going the same way at different paces. For three years the disease has been spreading.

The lowered productivity from war damage, public extravagance and private recklessness, the inability to balance budgets, the excess of imports over exports, tariffs, embargoes, and blockades to cripple commerce, have all led to inflation, the collapse of exchange, the distrust of money, the shrinkage of credits, the stoppage of industry, and unemployment. Warning has followed warning. Financiers and leaders of commerce in the various countries have pointed out the perils. A year ago an authoritative conference at Brussels analyzed the situation in the plainest and most uncompromising language, and recognized that the effective economic remedies hinged upon the making of a real peace. But the Governments paid no attention to these warnings. They have gone on degrading their currencies, erecting new tariff barriers, stifling enterprise, plastering poverty and discontent with doles, and refusing to pay their way by honest industry and sound finance. Every sane man knows that the trouble lies in the peace treaties and in the treatment of the vanquished Central Powers and of Russia. Nay, in a gathering of business men or of uncommitted politicians in any country there would be substantial agreement, not merely on the nature of the malady but upon the immediate remedies. First and most urgent would be the demand for a drastic reduction of the German indemnity to dimensions which would at once stop the frenzied rush of German exports into foreign markets and check the impending bankruptcy of Germany with its attendant perils to the economic and political life of all her neighbors. So long as the present impossible task is imposed on Germany no peace is possible for Europe, no reduction of military preparations, no recovery of national finances, and no restoration of trade and employment for any of those countries linked with her in a common economic system.

Now, Mr. President, the real matter in controversy here in regard to the pending bill, aside from the very interesting constitutional question raised by the able Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], is a question of whether or not we shall insert a clause requiring the payment of interest semiannually or annually at least. It is said that these nations can not pay their interest, that they will not give the securities if they have interest payments attached, and that therefore we must forego the collection of interest until such time as these nations feel able to take care of their interest, until such time as they feel that they can unquestionably meet the obligations and not default and stand before the other nations of the world as defaulters.

I beg to say that under the present policies and under the existing treaties of Europe, no man can foretell at what time these nations will be in a position where they can meet the interest. They are in more financial distress now than three years ago, many of them. If the Versailles treaty could be revised in accordance with principles which would permit Germany to pay and still exist, and not destroy her economically, and if the other nations would reduce their land armaments and their military forces even to a reasonable degree—not the rule which some of us would invoke, but even to a reasonable extent—they could meet not only the interest payment but they could meet a portion of the principal.

The result of the postponement of this interest and the result of the postponement of the debt in its practical workings is to impose upon the American people the maintenance of the military armaments of Europe, for that is what the money is being used for; that is the manner in which it is being expended. If this money were going into the rehabilitation of those countries and was designed and being used for the purpose of buying the things that enable men to produce, to raise crops, and take care of families, no one would care whether the interest was paid this year or five years from now. But I maintain that it is more or less a challenge to the intelligence of the American people to ask them to postpone a demand which, if not met, will be utilized for a purpose not only destructive of the peace of Europe but of the entire world.

The seriousness of the situation, not only with reference to this matter but others, not only here but elsewhere, is accentuated, because we refuse to look facts in the face. We delude ourselves with theories and placate our souls with anticipations which never happen. We pass laws, or put something down on paper, trusting that by some necromantic power not yet explained these laws and these treaties will start factories, open mills, plant and raise crops, and bring prosperity. We postpone the payment of debts in order to get a little time to create more. We appropriate millions of the people's money and send it abroad to feed the hungry, knowing full well, if we know anything at all, that under present policies it is but an amelioration for a short time only of the situation. Anyone who argues that we can go into Europe and rehabilitate Europe or effectively assist in rehabilitating Europe under present policies and treaties is simply leading the American taxpayer to his utter ruin and in the end not even serving Europe. Anyone who urges the postponement of interest or the giving of charity, without insisting upon the adoption of principles and policies wholly different from those which now obtain, is simply deceiving the American people and also misleading the people of Europe to their ultimate undoing.

I am perfectly aware that I will be met by the suggestion that if the European powers which have signed the treaty want this treaty that it is useless for us to decry against it. I concede it all. But that does not answer the argument that when they come to us asking for relief or asking for time or asking for assistance in rehabilitation it is not only our right but it is our most solemn duty to say to them, "You can have all that is within our power as a prudent people to give, for we recognize both our obligations to humanity and our material interest in the cause, but you must conform your treaties to the law of live and let live; you must subscribe to the principles of reconstruction and not destruction; you, too, must become advocates and apostles of rehabilitation." I think a definite, determined policy upon the part of the United States will lead these powers to reflect, and ultimately to modify and revise their programs.

A most distinguished divine declared a short time since:

In all countries thoughtful men and women are coming to see that the world can not live on hatred. Burying the hatchet is not only right in morals but is also prudent in politics. Every step toward peace and good will between nations and classes will hasten the return of prosperity, for it will bring back confidence, which is the lifeblood of industry.

The most dangerous foe to humanity to-day is the public man who plays upon the fears and passions of the people—the statesman, so called, whose chief capital is hate is a menace to civilization.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I am not going to take up any particular time in the discussion of the constitutional question raised by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH]. I do not claim to be a great constitutional lawyer, nor do I claim to be a constitutional lawyer in the sense in which that term is generally used in the country. My practice before coming to the Senate was in an agricultural section, in which the great constitutional questions which we have before us day in and day out were never alluded to. Our cases were most always those that involved simply the constitution and laws of our State.

I have been in the Senate of the United States for 23 years. During that time I have heard a great many arguments by the constitutional lawyers of the Senate, and during that time I think I can say that without a single exception, in every instance in which the self-styled constitutional lawyers have declared that a proposition before the Senate was unconstitutional, in each and every instance in those twenty-odd years the Supreme Court of the United States has overruled them and held that it was constitutional. If there has ever been an instance in which the Supreme Court has held that a law was unconstitutional which had been enacted by the Senate, it has been upon grounds which the constitutional lawyers did not happen to think of during the time the same was discussed in the Senate.

I think we all understand to a considerable extent the Constitution of our country and the methods by which we obtain the laws that govern the people of the country, both in its international relations and in its domestic relations. I think we all agree, without going into any fine-spun and delicate arguments of the construction of words, that there are two methods by which we secure legislation governing us in our relations, both domestically and in reference to foreign affairs.

We may, under our treaty-making provision of the Constitution, provide for a treaty, and in that treaty, which we make the supreme law of the land, we require a two-thirds vote in the Senate. In that way we may enact a law without the action of the House; the House of Representatives need not intervene in the making of that law. It is equally true that, so far as governs the people of the United States, both in their domestic affairs and in their relations to foreign Governments, we may, by an act of Congress passed by a majority vote, abrogate or set aside a treaty made by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

I know of no law governing us internationally or governing us in our domestic affairs that we can not change, modify, or annul by a subsequent act of Congress. If we can modify it by a subsequent act of Congress, we can initiate the same law which we could modify by an act of Congress.

Let us look at this for a moment from the common-sense standpoint and our everyday method of dealing with affairs. If a warship of France should come into collision with a warship of the United States in the open sea, there might arise a question as to which one of the commanders was guilty of negligence. If the commander of the French vessel was so negligent that he ignored all laws relating to the navigation of war vessels and rammed an American war vessel and sunk it, we could very properly request the French Government to settle for that. But the French people might have entirely a different version of the cause of the collision. Then we might meet the situation in one of two ways. We might enter into a treaty with France whereby we agree to submit the matter to arbitration, the United States to select an arbitrator, France to select an arbitrator, and the two to select a third. That treaty would require a two-thirds vote in the Senate in order to become a law. Is there any conflict of authority if, instead of going through the process of a treaty, we provide by an act of Congress, reciting the fact of the collision, that we will settle the matter by arbitration and that we will instruct the President of the United States to appoint one arbitrator on condition that the French Republic will appoint another, those two to select a third, and that we will agree to abide by the result and findings of those arbitrators?

Suppose that we so act and pass that law, and the French Government, in accordance with the provisions of the laws of France, concede that it is a question which she may properly arbitrate, and she answers our legal proposition by appointing a French arbitrator. Does any one in the world contend for a single moment that we could not pass a law of that kind and that the Governments would be just as morally obligated to settle whatever those findings were as though it had passed through the other method of obtaining the same results by a treaty which would be ratified by the Senate? I do not think there can be any possible question in that respect.

The French Government owes us about $2,350,000,000. Does anyone question for a moment that it is not as clear a legal obligation as any Government can make with another? How did she come to owe us that sum? She became our debtor, not through a treaty, but through a law passed by the Congress of the United States, which authorized the Secretary of the Treasury to give a credit and provided that he could determine the amount of the credit which might be given France, as well as the amount that might be given Great Britain or Italy. He could fix the terms of payment, limited in the matter of interest and the length of time according to the law, and yet both the interest and the length of time were still discretionary with him because his authority to issue and sell our bonds was not limited in reference either to the rate of interest or the time at which those bonds should become due. Therefore, entire authority was extended to the Secretary of the Treasury, with the approval of the President of the United States, to determine what sum of money should go to any one of these nations, what interest that debt should bear, and when it was to be paid.

The Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] does not for a moment question, if I understand him correctly, that this was a constitutional law. I think, perhaps, one of his expressions later on in his argument would indicate that he had some doubt about it, and that it might be a power which could be exercised as a war power.

Mr. President, we either had the power or we did not have it. If we had the power to enact a law of that kind during the war, I think every Senator must agree that we have the same power to-day. If we had the power to create a debt in that form and to fix the terms of payment entirely through a congressional act, then who can doubt for a single moment that we have the same power to-day to extend the time, fix a different rate of interest, or make any other arrangement that we may see fit to make by the law itself?

To-day France owes us $2,350,000,000. She owes us unpaid interest. Suppose she says that she can not pay any interest at the present time. We pass a law to-day, a congressional act, declaring that notwithstanding the fact that we have the French obligation of $2,350,000,000, signed by the French Government, by its duly authorized representative, and bearing 5 per cent interest, nevertheless, if France will give us her obligation to-day which will be due in 10 years instead of on June 15, 1947, we will accept that and give her a rate of interest of 3½ per cent and authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to receive the French bonds, if they will accede to our request, and to cancel their other obligation. Why, the Congress of the United States has complete control over the property of the United States. If we saw fit, we could by an act of Congress release the French Government entirely. I do not think anyone would doubt that, and we would not need a treaty to do it. We can make different terms with them.

Another question that may arise soon is this—and let us see if it is absolutely necessary to have a treaty. We have still some unsettled claims with the German Government for our citizens, where the German Government took their property. Germany, of course, in her treaty agrees to settle these claims, but we do not know what the claims are. Is there any question in the mind of any Senator that we could pass a law instructing the President to appoint an arbitrator to act in conjunction with an arbitrator appointed by the German Government, and that those two could determine what the claims of our citizens were? Is it necessary to go through the forms of a treaty in order to accomplish that result? I do not think, Mr. President, there can be anything whatever in the contention that we are forced to go to the Executive department in order to secure a treaty before we may obtain from foreign Governments obligations which would be binding.

I do not care to take any further time, except to answer what I understood was a question asked by the Senator from Montana with reference to one portion of the bill. I think he stated he did not exactly understand what was meant by these words:

and to adjust and settle any and all claims, not now represented by bonds or obligations, which the United States of America now has or hereafter may have against any foreign Government and to accept securities therefor.

Mr. President, the view that is taken by the majority, at least, of the Committee on Finance, the view that is taken by the Secretary of the Treasury and by the administration, is that the interest as it falls due will of itself be an obligation, and whenever six months elapse, and the interest has not been paid for those six months, the interest will be a demand obligation at that time. Interest will be falling due from time to time upon these obligations before they are settled, and therefore, in order that there should be no question about the right not only to settle for past-due interest but for any interest that may accumulate prior to the time when the final settlement is made, it was thought proper to use words covering the interest which may become due.

Now, Mr. President, I am ready to go on with any amendments which Senators may desire to offer.

Mr. McKELLAR. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Glass	McKellar	Robinson
Borah	Gooding	McKinley	Sheppard
Brandegee	Hale	McNary	Simmons
Broussard	Harris	Moses	Stanfield
Cameron	Heflin	Nelson	Sterling
Capper	Johnson	Nicholson	Sutherland
Caraway	Jones, Wash.	Norris	Swanson
Cummins	Kellogg	Oddie	Trammell
Curtis	Kenyon	Overman	Warren
Dial	Ladd	Page	Watson, Ga.
Ernst	La Follette	Pepper	Watson, Ind.
Fernald	Lenroot	Phipps	Weller
Fletcher	Lodge	Ransdell	Williams
France	McCumber	Reed	Willis

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce the absence of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES] on account of illness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-six Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senate to several matters in connection with the pending bill. Speaking generally, I think that the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] is greatly preferable to the bill as reported by the committee. Under that bill it is left in great doubt as to what is going to be done with the accrued interest.

In answer to a question which I asked, the chairman of the committee stated that it might be deemed wise by the commission which is to be created by the proposed act to increase the interest rate on the bonds to be taken so as to absorb in whole or in part the past due interest. I think that would be a very unwise thing to do and it ought not to be permitted. It would be violative of the contract under which we loaned the money. For that reason I do not think that this bill without amendment should be passed, and I am going to offer an amendment at the proper time prohibiting that from being done.

Again, Mr. President, I call attention to the time that is allowed within which interest payments shall begin to be made and to the full power which is proposed to be given to the commission to extend at will the interest payments. If that authority shall be given and shall be exercised, then the debts will be in exactly the same condition as they are now. The Government has the authority now to take bonds; indeed, under the acts of Congress already passed, it is the duty of the executive department to take bonds. The Secretary of the Treasury was directed under the law to take bonds for these debts, and that action should have been taken long ago. For years in this body I and others have been demanding that this indebtedness be placed in the form of bonds as directed by the law.

Under the late Wilson administration efforts were made under existing law to put this indebtedness into the form of bonds, but the effort was not completed during that administration, and since the advent of the present administration no step has been taken by the Secretary of the Treasury under existing law to put this great indebtedness into the form of bonds.

It is now claimed that the Secretary of the Treasury would have no authority to cover the back interest into bonds. That may be true, and if it is true then we ought to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to put the back interest into bonds; but surely, Mr. President, we should not go beyond giving the necessary authority for that purpose. We ought not under any circumstances to give to anyone the authority continuously to extend the interest payments on this debt. I wish to submit to the Senate that if the Secretary of the Treasury, without authority to extend the interest on the debt, extends it for three or four years, indeed, for five years as to a part of it, how long will it be extended if we allow unlimited time in which the interest may be extended? Instead of giving further time during which the interest on this indebtedness may be extended, we ought to fix a definite time when the interest shall begin. If we leave it to the proposed commission to fix the time when the interest on this indebtedness shall be collected, we need not expect the collection of any interest.

Mr. President, the Senator from North Dakota says that it is not intended that this commission will extend the time for the payment of the inferest after the interest is once started. Whether that is true or not, I do not know. They certainly have the power to do it under this law; and if they have the power I see no reason why they can not proceed to exercise it, and I think that if it was the intention of the committee not to let this commission have the power to extend the interest we ought to say so in this bill.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STERLING in the chair). Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. REED. I am not certain that it is recorded in the hearings, because a part of the hearings were taken down, and then there were a number of colloquies which were not recorded; but I can say to the Senator that the very purpose of the language to which he is now referring is to do the very thing he anticipates might be done. The purpose is to leave it in the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury to extend the interest payments at will; and the bill as once agreed upon by the Senate committee, if the Senator can have access to it, will disclose that the change made was made for the purpose I have indicated and could have had no other purpose. If the bill remains in discussion over to-morrow, I shall have something to say about that myself.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. McKELLAR. I do.

Mr. SIMMONS. I wish to say to the Senator from Missouri that the proviso to which he refers as having been agreed to was presented to the Senate by me on yesterday.

Mr. REED. The Senator did present it?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes.

Mr. REED. Very well.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I shall not agree to any such provision. That will leave this indebtedness precisely as it is. It will be just as badly muddled as it is now. The only difference will be that we will have a lot of bonds the interest on which will or will not be payable, according to the directions of this commission; and if the Secretary of the Treasury has postponed the collection of the interest for nearly five years without any authority, what will the commission do when it has full authority to postpone it? The result will be that it will be in such a muddled condition that nothing will be done, and we will have a lot of bonds that are bearing no interest, a lot of securities that are not salable, that are not usable, that will not be of any practical value to this Government. What we ought to do is to go along and do what the law now provides.

We are under a moral obligation on this debt matter. We borrowed this money from our own people to be loaned to these foreign Governments. We made a contract with our own people that we would lend it to these foreign Governments on exactly the same terms on which we borrowed it from them. If we change those terms so as to make better terms to our creditors, then we violate our moral duty to our own people, from whom we borrowed the money. On the other hand, if we make those terms harder upon our creditors, then we violate our moral duty to those creditors as stated in those acts. The result is that we can morally do nothing in this matter except to settle this indebtedness strictly in accordance with the contracts we made at the time of lending it, which consisted of the two acts, and further to provide that we will take bonds of similar tenor and effect for the past-due interest already accumulated, for the debts brought about by the sale of Army and Navy property, for the debts brought about by the sale of property of the Food Administration, and of some other organizations of our Government. That is the only thing that we can in honor do; and therefore I think that the substitute offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] is the only proper provision that we can put into the law at this time. I am going to read it right here. It is to strike out the whole bill and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to refund or convert the principal and interest of any obligation of any foreign Government now owing to the United States of America (including obligations held by the United States Grain Corporation, the War Department, the Navy Department, or the American Relief Administration), arising out of the World War, into bonds of such foreign Government in accordance with the law in force at the time such obligation was incurred.

That is the sum total of our duty; and, as a matter of fact, if we go beyond that all that we do is to violate our solemn pledge, either to our own people or to those who borrowed the money from us. I take it that no one wants to violate a contract that we have made. I can not understand why we should want to do it.

Mr. President, it has been suggested that the reason why it is desired to do it is that the international bankers have arranged the wording of this particular bill so that under it we can, in substance, remit the past-due interest on these debts. I am wholly opposed to any such remission of that interest. I am wholly opposed to the remission of these debts. I know that there has been a propaganda going on in this country for years to remit these debts.

There are some gentlemen who honestly believe that it will add to our own prosperity to remit these debts. I am not one of those. I do not believe that we ought to remit them. I do not believe that we ought to be asked to remit them. I do not believe that it would do these European countries any good if we did remit them. I know that it would do the taxpayers of this country incalculable harm if we did do it; and I do not believe that any patriotic American citizen, if he will think about the matter, will for a moment believe that these debts ought to be remitted.

Why this peculiar wording if there is not something behind this bill such as has been suggested, if it was not intended to put these bonds in a nonnegotiable state? When you have a commission to say when the interest shall fall due, you have a nonnegotiable bond; you have not a bond that you can sell on the market. As long as a commission has in its power the right to postpone the collection of interest on the bond you have a nonnegotiable bond. Why do that? What is the object of it? What is the purpose of it? It has not been explained. Why did you change your bill? Why did you take out of the bill the part of it that would make these bonds negotiable and put into it a provision which will make them nonnegotiable? What is the purpose of dealing with the matter in such a way?

In some respects you have improved this bill as it came from the House; but you still have it in such a shape that it will produce a nonnegotiable security, even when it is taken, if you give this commission the authority that it now has under the bill.

Mr. President, we do not want to be hard on these people. If anybody connected with the Government has verbally agreed that they are to have two years' time or three years' time from the close of the war, then let us give them that time, but let us not take a nonnegotiable bond.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, why does the Senator say that the bonds which will be taken will be nonnegotiable?

Mr. McKELLAR. I say that for the reason that they will be not only nonnegotiable but nonsalable. If you take a bond from Great Britain and leave it in the power of the commission to extend the interest on it at will, even for the entire length of time that the bond runs, you have a nonnegotiable bond, because nobody will buy it.

Mr. McCUMBER. But who on earth has ever contended that that power would be granted to the commission?

Mr. McKELLAR. The Finance Committee has granted it.

Mr. McCUMBER. Oh, no; the Senator is mistaken. There is nothing of that kind in the bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let us see what your language says. I will read just what you have done:

That, subject to the approval of the President, the commission created by section 1 is hereby authorized to refund or convert, and to extend the time of payment of the principal or the interest, or both, of any obligation of any foreign Government now owing to the United States of America—

That is absolute authority to the commission to extend the interest not only to 1947 but to any time that it sees fit; and if the commission were, with the approval of the President, to come in here and say that it had agreed with any foreign Government under this act to extend the payment of the interest until the maturity of the bonds, we could not interfere with it, and it would be a perfectly good act under this authority.

Mr. McCUMBER. Does the Senator contend that under that authority, after the commission had settled and received a bond with interest beginning to be paid at a certain time and paid annually or semiannually thereafter, there is any authority in the commission to provide that afterwards they can change that and fix a differet rate?

Mr. McKELLAR. Why, absolutely. There is no such limit. I know that the Senator, as he stated yesterday or day before, thinks that after the commission acts, that ends its authority; but this bill does not limit the authority in any such way. This bill is absolute authority to the commission. I read again:

To extend the time of payment of the principal or the interest, or both.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. It does not limit the commission up to the time that it actually takes the bonds, but at any time during the life of the commission it has the right to extend the interest. Even though it may have made a contract with the foreign Government, even though it may have taken the bonds, the commission would still have a right to exchange those bonds and extend the interest to any time it saw fit.

Mr. McCUMBER. If the Senator will allow me——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CARAWAY in the chair). Does the Senator from Tennessee further yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. McKELLAR. I shall be delighted to yield.

Mr. McCUMBER. The only authority that is given is the authority to extend the time at which the principal shall become due—now the principal must become due in accordance with the terms of our own national obligations——

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; there is a limitation on that.

Mr. McCUMBER. Also to extend the time of the payment of the interest, not the interest on the new bonds that may be taken but the interest that shall be due and become due prior to the time that they accept the new bonds. The moment they accept any new bonds those bonds then, in their new form, become the property of the United States and can not be changed except by an act of Congress. I did state to the Senator that that was the intention and that it did not mean anything else, but that if any Senator thought it meant anything else I was not averse to agreeing to any amendment that anyone thought would be at all necessary to make that definite and certain. I think it is definite and certain now, and I simply wanted to disagree with the Senator on the proposition that they had such power under the proposed law.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator so stated on day before yesterday; but I am compelled to believe under this broad language that the Senator is mistaken in his view of the matter, and I am glad to know that he will accept an amendment which will make it certain. There can not possibly be the slightest doubt, legally speaking, that this commission has the absolute power to extend the payment of the interest until 1947. There are no limitations upon its extension of interest. The Senator says that it may extend the principal but not the interest. The words are:

And to extend the time of payment of the principal or the interest.

Language can not make a thought plainer than that; and this commission could take these bonds and postpone the payment of any interest or all interest until 1947, and it would be a valid contract.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me——

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator did not even read the entire contents of the section which bears on that matter.

Mr. McKELLAR. No. I am going to read it, though, in a moment.

Mr. McCUMBER. Let me make clear what I think the Senator has omitted.

Mr. McKELLAR. All right.

Mr. McCUMBER. Let us take section 2:

SEC. 2. That, subject to the approval of the President, the commission created by section 1 is hereby authorized—

To cut out any possible construction such as the Senator has given, the committee recommended an amendment there. The House had inserted the words "from time to time." We cut out the words "from time to time"——

Mr. McKELLAR. That is wholly immaterial.

Mr. McCUMBER. So that there would be only once that they could take those bonds—is hereby authorized—

Not "from time to time to refund," but just to refund once.

Mr. McKELLAR. It does not say so.

Mr. McCUMBER. Let me finish it—

to refund or convert, and to extend the time of payment of the principal or the interest, or both, of any obligation of any foreign Government now owing to the United States of America—

An obligation now owing to the United States of America—or any obligation of any foreign Government hereafter received by the United States of America (including obligations held by the United States Grain Corporation, the War Department, the Navy Department, or the American Relief Administration) arising out of the World War—

Into what?

into bonds or other obligations of such foreign Government—

In other words, we can take the interest and the principal of those obligations and give an extension, and take new bonds or other obligations of such foreign Governments—in substitution for the bonds or obligations of such Government now or hereafter held by the United States of America.

It simply authorizes us to include that interest, to extend the time of interest, to extend the time of the principal, and to substitute these new bonds, including the interest and the principal and what other time is given, in lieu of old obligations, and when we receive those new bonds there is no authority whatever given to do anything with them or with their interest other than to hand them over to the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. McKELLAR. If that is the case then the Senator will certainly accept this amendment to go at the end of that section. The proviso reads as follows:

Provided, That nothing contained in this act shall be construed to authorize or empower the commission to extend the time of maturity of such bonds or obligations due the United States by any foreign Government beyond June 15, 1947, or to fix the rate of interest at less than that fixed by existing law.

I propose to add immediately thereafter the following:

Or to extend the time of payment of the principal or of the interest after the bonds, with interest coupons attached, are once taken.

Mr. McCUMBER. I have not the slightest objection to putting that in proper language at the proper place, if it is thought necessary, because there is no question that that is the meaning.

Mr. McKELLAR. With the understanding that such an amendment will be accepted, I will pass on to something else.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator can offer it.

Mr. McKELLAR. We will agree on the language.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think that we can agree on an amendment of that nature, because that is what we all understand the present language to mean.

Mr. McKELLAR. The wording of the amendment just proposed by me is not accurate anyway, because the word "coupons" is in it, and that ought to be stricken out.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. SIMMONS. I introduced an amendment, which I commented upon to some extent on yesterday. The proviso reads:

That nothing contained in this act shall be construed to authorize or empower the commission to extend the time of maturity of any such bonds or obligations due the United States by any foreign Government beyond July 15, 1947.

That is the language of the bill. At the end of that I proposed to add this:

Or, without the consent or approval of Congress, to fix the rate of interest at less than 5 per cent payable semiannually.

On yesterday, after I had concluded my argument, the Senator from North Dakota offered an amendment to that same provision and at the same point at which I offered my amendment, adding these words:

Or to fix the rate of interest at less than that fixed by existing law.

That is satisfactory to me, as I stated yesterday.

Mr. McKELLAR. It is satisfactory to me.

Mr. SIMMONS. I care nothing about the 5 per cent. I would just as soon, so far as I am concerned, have the interest 4½ per cent, but the Senator left out the balance of my proposed amendment. I am going to suggest to the Senator now the balance of it, which I wish to add to the amendment which was agreed to yesterday. The amendment offered by the Senator yesterday and agreed to was as follows:

Or to fix the rate of interest at less than that fixed by existing law.

Now, I wish to add to that the following:

Or, without the consent and approval of Congress, extend the time of payment of interest.

Mr. McKELLAR. It would be entirely satisfactory to me, and I hope it will be satisfactory to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think that is substantially what the Senator has in mind, though I have not examined his amendment.

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no; that is quite different. I favor the Senator's amendment, but it is quite different from the one I have offered and which has been virtually accepted.

Mr. SIMMONS. I desire to say that if the Senator from North Dakota will accept as an addition to his amendment that part of my amendment which he did not include in his, I will personally make no further objection to the passage of the bill, although I would like to amend it in some other respects.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Mr. President, will the Senator state the amendment which he has in mind, which, if incorporated in the bill, will cause him to vote for it? Some of us did not clearly understand it.

Mr. SIMMONS. I meant that the bill would be acceptable to me, but, of course, I did not include in that my bonus amendment, which I should also insist be added. I meant as to the bill itself, if that amendment were put in, it would be satisfactory to me. Now I will state what it is.

The amendment which I offered and which I said yesterday, in substance, was the only subject of controversy that I had to discuss, was to add, after the words "June 15, 1947," the time at which we fixed the maturity of these obligations and said it should not be extended any further, the words:

Or without the consent and approval of Congress, fix the rate of interest at less than 5 per cent.

The Senator from North Dakota amended that and accepted part of it by fixing the rate of interest at not less than that fixed by existing law. That is satisfactory to me, and I so stated to him yesterday. But he left out that part of my amendment which provided for the semiannual payment of the interest. I am suggesting that it will be satisfactory to me if the Senator will add after the amendment which he offered yesterday and which was agreed to—that is, fixing the rate of interest at not less than that fixed by existing law—the following:

Or without the consent and approval of Congress, extend the time of payment of interest.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is the only difference. The Senator is correct. I think we practically agreed on everything but that, and at one time, as between the Senator from North Carolina and myself, as a compromise matter we even agreed upon that proposition. But the whole question arises as to whether we shall say to the commission that no matter what the political condition or the financial condition of any country may be they must compel that country to issue a bond and to provide that it will begin to pay interest at the end of six months from the date of the issue of that bond.

While that might be all right if we had only one of the most important countries to deal with, we are certain that we could not make that arrangement with all of the countries. If we provide for an extension of time not to exceed one or two years, then every one of the countries would want the same extension. I believe that it is quite essential that some discretion be given to the commission with reference not so much to the amount of interest or whether it is due annually or semiannually, but when it shall begin to be paid.

Mr. McKELLAR. The difficulty about the Senator's proposition is that whenever we leave that discretion in the commission we have a nonsalable bond. I called it a nonnegotiable bond. It is not nonnegotiable in the legal sense that it can not be negotiated, but it is a nonsalable bond, because no investor would take such a bond.

Let us for a moment consider a railroad company issuing a bond which has a provision in it that it has appointed a commission which can defer or extend the time of the payment of the interest on the bond. How many purchasers of that kind of a bond could be found? Yet that is what we propose to do here. It is proposed here to put it in the discretion of the commission to extend the interest payments on the bonds. The Senator will see that by accepting the amendment I have suggested it will remedy that defect. It will remedy that defect if the bonds are once fixed, but suppose this commission before it acts agrees to postpone the collection of the interest for 10 years, then we have a nonsalable bond for 10 years, and that is all there is to it.

The Senator from North Carolina wanted me to yield for him to reply just a moment, and I am glad to do so at this time.

Mr. SIMMONS. I was simply going to call the attention of the Senator to that because of his remarks a few moments ago. The language that I used was "without the consent or approval of Congress" they shall not have the power to extend the payment of interest. Under that language the Secretary would have power to go ahead and make a final and conclusive settlement of the indebtedness of such of these foreign Governments as were willing to agree to begin paying interest at once. But if he found it was necessary in some instances to extend the time of payment of interest that would not interfere with his going ahead and making a contract, but that contract would have to be approved by the Senate.

Mr. McCUMBER. I understand the position of the Senator from North Carolina, but the Senator from Tennessee always gets back to his first proposition that under the bill as it now reads, after the bond has been taken the power is still in the law for the commission to change the time for the payment of interest fixed in the bond accepted by the commission.

Mr. McKELLAR. That part has been corrected by the Senator's agreement to incorporate the amendment which I suggested, but the Senator does not fully understand me. My proposition is this: I understand that Italy is not in funds and would like to have an extension of time. Suppose the commission comes back with a lot of Italian bonds for the entire amount owed us by Italy, with the interest payment on those bonds to begin in 1932, on the 1st of January 10 years hence. The commission under the bill has complete authority to do that very thing. It could make it 1943 when the interest payments should start if it so desired. During that time of either 10 or 20 years the United States would have locked up in its vaults some $2,000,000,000 of Italian bonds, that would be nonsalable and, of course, nonnegotiable, because the Government could not sell them under any circumstances. That is what I meant to say.

Does not the Senator concede that this commission would have the authority to defer the payment of interest by Italy until 1932? I would be very glad to have the Senator's opinion about that.

Mr. McCUMBER. I will answer the Senator if he will give me time.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am glad to do so.

Mr. McCUMBER. The provision of the bill as it now is laid before the Senate fixes no time limit in which the interest must begin to be paid.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is true.

Mr. McCUMBER. That may be true. Now, the Senator can say, "Why, they could grant until June 15, 1947."

Mr. McKELLAR. That is true; and they can do so under this power.

Mr. McCUMBER. We will say that they grant until June 15, 1947, and then provide that all the interest and principal should be paid on the same day. If they made such a bond as that I will agree that they would have a great deal of difficulty in selling it unless they sold it extremely below par, and so low that it would be equivalent to a discount for the rate of interest and then something in addition to that.

Mr. McKELLAR. It would be a nonsalable bond.

Mr. McCUMBER. It would not be nonnegotiable.

Mr. McKELLAR. No; it would not be nonnegotiable in a legal sense, but it would be a nonsalable bond.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; at least for any price within reason.

Mr. McKELLAR. It would be a mere equity.

Mr. McCUMBER. Suppose Italy said to the commission, "I am willing to pay 5 per cent; I am willing to give my bonds to-day, but I do not want the interest to begin to run or the first interest to be paid until July, 1924. I can meet it by July, 1924, and if you will give me that time before the first interest begins to run I will execute the bonds now." The commission can answer one of two things. It can say, "We will accept that and will make the bonds accordingly," or it can say, "Very well, we will do that provided you will compute the interest up to the time that you say you can begin to pay and let us put that into the bond itself, so that we will not be losing any of the interest in those two years."

I assume that that would be more liable to be the kind of an agreement that any sensible set of men would make, and I must assume that the President of the United States, who must approve these agreements, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the four other good, intelligent, patriotic American citizens who will be confirmed by the Senate of the United States, will not make a ridiculous agreement, but will make one that the Senate of the United States undoubtedly would feel to be the right one if they knew all of the conditions that influenced the commission.

So we must look at this proposed legislation from a reasonable standpoint as to what the commission would probably do. The Senator sees as well as I do the dangers of fixing a particular time at which the first interest must be paid, knowing that if it were put two or three or four years ahead every nation would ask for the privilege and we would not want to grant it to every nation.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator appeals to what good, sensible, business men would do. We are in that attitude to-day. The United States Senate in dealing with this matter is to deal with it in a good, sensible, businesslike way. We have been elected here for that very purpose.

Here is what is proposed to be done by the pending bill: We give an unnamed commission, composed of five men to be hereafter appointed, the power to extend the interest on $11,000,000,000 of indebtedness until 1947. The Senator says that as sensible men they are not likely to do it. If they are not likely to do it, why give them the authority to do it? Why ought the Congress to give this commission the authority to extend this interest until 1947 on this entire indebtedness?

The Senator said they are not likely to do such a thing. There are a great many people in this country who want to yield up the entire indebtedness, and if we give this commission such authority, immediately there will be a propaganda in the country urging the commission, as the only safe way to handle the matter, to extend the interest payments until 1947.

I say with such authority as that this indebtedness will be in an infinitely worse condition than it is to-day. We have their simple obligation to pay the principal that is due. We have no specific bond. We have no specific agreement to pay interest. They owe us the interest and it is accumulating all the time; but that is better than to surrender the matter to a commission of undesignated men.

We are delegating to that commission the authority of Congress to extend the time of payment for the whole term until 1947. That ought not to be done. We would not be sensible business men if we did it. We would not be doing what our constituents have sent us here to do if we were to grant any such authority as that in reference to this enormous indebtedness, and it ought not to be granted. There ought to be safeguards placed around the matter.

I am willing as to some of the debtor nations that their interest payments be extended for a reasonable time, but we ought not permit the proposed commission to extend the interest payments for the entire life of the bonds. If we do so we shall not be doing our duty by the American people. That is all I have to say about that.

Now, Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from North Dakota a question. The committee has embodied in this bill the language "including obligations held by the United States Grain Corporation, the War Department, the Navy Department, or the American Relief Administration." There are nearly a billion and a half dollars of past-due interest to be dealt with. Why did not the committee include that past-due interest as a part of the obligations for which bonds should be taken by the commission?

Mr. McCUMBER. That is included.

Mr. McKELLAR. Why not include it specifically?

Mr. McCUMBER. The bill speaks of these obligations, both principal and interest, and then it includes the other obligations referred to; so, of course, it includes both interest and principal.

Mr. McKELLAR. Would the Senator from North Dakota be willing to have the bill amended, beginning in line 4, page 2, so as to make it read in this way:

hereafter received by the United States of America, including past-due interest, obligations held by the United States Grain Corporation—

And so forth. In other words, only a few hundred million dollars are owing to us on account of the Grain Corporation and for the supplies sold by the Army, the Navy, and the American Relief Administration; but there are a billion and a half dollars of past-due interest. Why not specifically include that interest as a part of the outstanding obligations that shall be converted into bonds?

Mr. McCUMBER. The bill is not framed in that way for the reason that it is desired that it shall be properly phrased, so as to avoid the ungrammatical method of stating the same thing twice in the same sentence.

Mr. McKELLAR. But there is no reference at all in any place in the bill to the billion and a half dollars of past-due interest.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; there is.

Mr. McKELLAR. Not at all; there is no specific reference to it; there is no place in the whole bill in which the billion and a half dollars of past-due interest is referred to, nor is there any specific authorization to fund that interest into bonds such as we propose to take for the principal indebtedness.

Mr. McCUMBER. Let me read the language of the bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. I shall be very glad to have the Senator point out any such provision as that to which I have referred.

Mr. McCUMBER. Let us get back to section 2 of the bill, which reads:

SEC. 2. That, subject to the approval of the President, the commission created by section 1 is hereby authorized to refund or convert and to extend the time of payment of the principal or the interest, or both, of any obligation of any foreign Government now owing to the United States of America, or any obligation of any foreign Government hereafter received by the United States of America (including obligations held by the United States Grain Corporation, the War Department, the Navy Department, or the American Relief Administration).

The very first line on page 2 provides for the "time of payment of the principal or the interest, or both," not only of the obligations, funds for which were provided out of the proceeds of the sale of Liberty bonds, but also including the obligations, both principal and interest thereon, arising out of the other obligations which are mentioned.

Why indulge in repetition when it is provided clearly and definitely that the past-due interest to which the Senator refers is included?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I am sure the Senator from North Dakota if he will examine the language embodied in the bill will not make that argument about it. Reading from section 2 of the bill, it provides:

Authorized, to refund or convert, and to extend the time of payment of the principal or the interest, or both, of any obligation.

The words "the principal or the interest" there do not refer to the refunding or converting, but refer solely and alone to the extension of the time of payment.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator is mistaken. The language is set off by commas, and the very purpose of the punctuation marks is to indicate exactly the opposite of what the Senator contends.

Mr. McKELLAR. That may be the purpose, but, if it be the purpose, the provision it so poorly phrased as not to express it at all, because the power is confined to the extension of time in this language:

And to extend the time of payment of the principal or the interest, or both.

That relates merely to the extension of the time of payment and has nothing in the world to do with the refunding under the language "to refund or convert."

Mr. President, I judge from the statement that was made on yesterday or the day before by the Senator from North Dakota that it is the purpose to increase the rate of interest on some bonds in order to make the bonds more salable, as I understood the argument of the Senator——

Mr. McCUMBER. On the contrary, I stated that that could not be done under the bill as it is now presented.

Mr. McKELLAR. I understood the argument of the Senator two days ago to be to the effect that under this authority the commission could receive bonds of a higher rate of interest than provided under the acts of 1917, some of the rates being as high as 8 per cent, so as to make a salable bond, and in that way also to absorb some of the past-due interest. Did I misunderstand the Senator?

Mr. McCUMBER. Now, let me make that clear.

Mr. McKELLAR. I shall be very glad to have the Senator do so, if I misunderstood him.

Mr. McCUMBER. I desire to make it plain to the Senator, if I possibly can, but because of my difficulty in following the Senator in his construction of the language of this bill, I am afraid that I shall have some trouble in agreeing with him even as to what my position was.

Mr. McKELLAR. I shall be very glad to have the Senator restate his position, in order that we may have no misunderstanding about it.

Mr. McCUMBER. There is no question that while the amount of interest fixed on the foreign bonds may not be less than that provided for in existing law, it may be more. It is equally clear in another portion of the bill that the commission can not accept any payment and can make no contract which would authorize the payment of less than the actual amount due. Therefore, I said that it might have been a good policy to have given the commission the authority to provide for a greater rate of interest, so that the past-due interest might be absorbed into that, to the end that we could probably then sell the bonds at a higher rate of interest without a guaranty, provided there was a stipulation in the bonds that would require that they should run for the full time, or, if they were redeemed before that time, that the country redeeming them would have to pay the entire amount, including the past due interest which was included; but I distinctly stated that, under the provisions of the bill which require the commission in entering into contracts to provide for the payment of the entire principal and entire interest, they could accept no bonds which would give the right to the debtor nation to include in the bonds the past-due interest in a higher rate and then redeem them and prevent this country from obtaining the full amount that was actually due. Under the bill as it now stands the commission could not make an agreement of that kind.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I am quite sure that that is the Senator's opinion, but I am just as sure that under the provisions contained in the bill the proposed commission could do the very thing which the Senator says can not be done.

This brings me, Mr. President, to the proposition that the only thing that we ought to do is to provide that the bonds of foreign Governments shall be taken under and in accordance with the terms of the acts under which the money was loaned and then, in addition, to provide authority to the commission to receive bonds for the past-due interest and for the indebtedness of the United States Grain Corporation, for the War Department indebtedness, for the Navy Department indebtedness, and the indebtedness of the American Relief Administration, and stop right there. We ought not to enact a law under which the rate of interest may be changed, and the commission ought not to have the power to extend the time of the interest payments. That time has already been extended quite long enough; it has been extended longer than we were asked to extend it; and, of course, if we continue to give authority to extend the time for the payment of the indebtedness, we know that it is going to be extended; there is not a particle of doubt that that is what the commission is for, namely, to extend this indebtedness. The international bankers of this country want to have it extended. They have appeared before the committee, as I understand, and have urged the passage of this bill, so it must be to their satisfaction. An amendment was put on to which they objected, and it was afterwards changed. This bill is so worded as to permit the extension of the interest at will, and that ought not to be permitted.

For these reasons I shall support very heartily the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], which is a simple amendment, an honorable amendment. It is an amendment which provides that we shall stand by our agreements just as we made them; that we shall stand by our people from whom we borrowed the money; stand by the contract which we made with our people at the time of borrowing it; and stand by the contract that we made with the people to whom we loaned the money. It is the only honorable, straightforward course to pursue. We ought not to give the commission the enlarged powers which are proposed, and we ought not, above all things, to give the commission the right at will to extend this indebtedness to 1947.

AGRICULTURAL CONDITIONS.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, if no other Senator desires to speak on the pending bill this afternoon, I wish to make a few remarks in connection with the condition of agriculture and the farmers of the country.

Mr. President, the most important problem awaiting solution to-day is to relieve the depression existing in agriculture and to make farming permanently profitable. When agriculture has been sensibly and scientifically organized and placed upon a remunerative basis the most serious barrier to our material betterment has been removed. Experience discloses that every panic and every financial and industrial depression which has cursed this country invariably has been preceded by a great fall in agricultural products, and hence a great reduction in the profits derived from the farm. The severe panic of 1893, with its long-continued depression, was accompanied by the lowest prices that had ever previously been received for the varied agricultural products. No relief came from these distressed conditions until the prices of agricultural products increased and farming became again profitable. The beginning of the present frightful financial and industrial depression was first heralded by the great fall in the prices of all the varied agricultural products. No relief will come from these wretched conditions, as the past has clearly demonstrated, until the prices of farm products have greatly increased and this business again becomes profitable. The history of the past discloses this fact beyond contradiction. The reason of this is plain when you give the matter thoughtful consideration. One-fourth of the entire wealth of this Nation is invested directly in farming. Thirty-five per cent of our people are directly engaged in agricultural pursuits. If we add to these the varied industries that use the products of the soil in manufacturing, the mercantile establishments that traffic in farm products, the transportation and shipping companies which distribute these, and those industries that furnish implements and supplies to the farmers, it may be fairly estimated that almost practically one-half of our population is either directly or indirectly dependent upon the prosperity of the farms.

Agriculture is without doubt our basic and most important industry, and the prosperity of all of us is largely dependent upon it. When farming ceases to be profitable, the factories, mines, and other industries have lost their largest market, are compelled to close, and depression and business paralysis strike all of our industrial centers. The inability of the farmer to buy or sell causes the varied transportation companies to lose a very large part of their traffic. The farming communities, directly or indirectly, furnish about 40 per cent of the traffic of the transportation companies. Thus railroads and the large shipping companies soon acquire the depression that afflicts agriculture. But for the farms the streets of the cities would grow in grass and be filled with hunger and want and crowded with unemployed.

The most important of our problems to relieve the Nation from its present depression is to put agriculture on a lasting profitable basis. When this has been accomplished prosperity will again bless this Nation, and we will not be cursed by frequent recurring panics and financial distress.

It is remarkable on examination to ascertain that the last products greatly to advance in price are farm products and the first to receive the severe shock of falling prices are farm products. This was strikingly illustrated during the last seven years. All other products had greatly increased in price long before farm products had a material advance, and the first great depression that came in falling prices came to these products. Thus, under present conditions, the agricultural interests enjoyed a much shorter period of prosperity than other industries. In rising prices what they buy advances earlier and much more rapidly than what they sell. This condition detracts largely from their profits in prosperous years. When falling prices and depression come, they are confronted with a serious condition by having raised a large crop at great expense which they are compelled to sell at a great loss, thus quickly eliminating all the profits made in the short period of prosperity. This was forcibly illustrated by the farmers' crop of last year. This crop was a large crop. Providence was generous and bountiful to the farmer. He had an unusually splendid crop, raised at more than double the cost of all previous crops, on account of the high prices he had to pay for everything he put into the making of it, so when falling prices and depression came his losses were immense, and he lost on this one crop more than he had made on the three previous crops.

The Department of Agriculture estimates this crop of 1921 at $5,675,877,000, which is $3,400,000,000 less than receipts for the crop of 1920 and $8,000,000,000 less than receipts for the crop of 1919. This entailed a great loss. The Agricultural Department estimates that if a fair wage is allowed the farmer for his work in production and then 5 per cent on the capital invested, that the selling price received for the crop of last year would not return more than 50 or 75 per cent of cost of production. The evil effect of this great loss is seen to-day in idle factories, in bankrupt merchants, in reduced railroad traffic, in embarrassed banks, and in general business depression. Every phase of our material national life is interested in returning prosperity to the farm. Banks, merchants, and manufacturers are, indeed, nearsighted and suicidal to their best interests if they do not recognize this and will not aid in putting farming on a stable and profitable basis.

Mr. President, when we consider the products needed for mankind and which are indispensable to his comfort, life, and well-being, those of the farm surpass all others. With mankind requiring his products more than the products of all others, if farming was as well organized as other industries, the profits of the farm ought to at least equal, if not exceed, those of other channels of business. I have often thought that it was remarkable that in the long run farming, the most important and indispensable business to mankind, shows less profit to those engaged in it than in the secondary undertakings of mankind.

A most careful estimate has been made of the value of the products produced per person engaged in agriculture and of those engaged in manufacture. This estimate, which is the most accurate and best that can be furnished, shows that in 1899 the product per person of those engaged in agriculture was $340, and the value of products per person for that year of those engaged in manufactures was $930. Thus for the year 1899 the value per annum per person engaged in manufactures over those engaged in agriculture was more than 250 per cent.

In 1909 this estimate shows that the value of the product per annum per person of those engaged in agriculture was $559 and the value of product per annum per person of those engaged in manufactures was $1,100. Thus, for the year 1909 a person engaged in manufactures made twice as much as those engaged in agriculture. This estimate shows that for the year 1919 the value of the product of those engaged in agriculture per person per annum was $1,540 and the value of the product per person per annum of those engaged in manufactures was $2,500. This was the most prosperous year that agriculture has known, and yet in that year a person engaged in manufactures, on the average, received $840 per year more than those engaged in agriculture. This disparity becomes more striking as we reflect that the hours of work of those engaged in agriculture far exceed the number of hours per day of those engaged in manufactures. The farmer begins work almost before light and works until far into dark, and yet these statistics show that in these 20 years he received less than one-half of the compensation derived by those engaged in manufactures.

When we reflect that the products of the farm furnish the raw material largely for the manufacturer, and are absolute necessities for mankind, it is remarkable that his compensation should be so far less than those engaged in other industries. If we take the enterprises of this Nation, like banking, transportation, and merchandizing, we will find the disparity still greater. In the last 10 years farm indebtedness has more than doubled. The present low price of farm products has more than doubled lately this great increase. These dry figures tell more forcibly than language the injustice that has been inflicted upon the farmer and the heavy burden that he has been carrying. They tell more vividly than language the story of how the profits of his labor have been transferred into pockets other than his own. In them can be read the story of our last census, which discloses how the people have left the rural sections and are congregating in the great industrial centers, where compensation for labor far exceeds that derived by working on the farm.

Unless the farming business is organized on a better basis and the profits of the farm are made greater we will each year have less and less people in the rural sections and more and more in the great manufacturing and industrial centers. Unless this is arrested and the profits of the farm are increased the day is not far distant when this Nation will cease to produce its own supply of agricultural products, and we will be dependent upon other nations, and instead of being exporters of farm products we will be great importers. This day will mark a sad day in the history of our Nation and will add greatly to its trouble and bring national decadence.

Mr. President, the question naturally presents itself, how has the farmer been deprived of his natural superior advantages over other industries and been forced to obtain far less compensation for his efforts? There has been a great improvement in production in agriculture. Scientific methods have been inaugurated, modern machinery has been utilized, and the farmer has made a great advance in the development of production. It is in his wretched methods of selling and distribution where his great losses occur, and these have prevented him from availing himself of his natural superior advantages.

A very careful statistician has estimated that out of every dollar of farm products sold to the consumer the farmer gets only 38 cents; that 62 cents of this dollar goes to the other agencies that handle the products of the farm before it gets to the consumer. It is generally estimated that the cost of distribution of the varied farm products to the consumer range from 50 to 65 per cent. In these estimates we read the story which largely tells the cause why farming is not as profitable as other industries.

In Denmark, by a cooperative system of selling and distribution, it only costs the farmer 10 per cent to sell and distribute the product of his farm.

This great disparity between the cost of selling and distribution in this country and Denmark, amounting to almost 50 per cent, vividly portrays the reason why farming is so much less profitable in America than it is in Denmark. In this country, except in a few isolated cases, this system of selling and distributing has not been inaugurated. The farming that is the most profitable in this country is the farming whose products have been organized in a cooperative system of selling and distribution, and this great cost in selling and distribution has been saved. The farmer is the only one engaged in any business who has no voice in fixing prices of things he produces. He has been compelled to take any price he can get. It is one business in which large production is penalized. Unless a fair and just system of cooperative selling and distribution is organized in this country farming will become less profitable. The small farmer will more and more disappear, and the only farming that will ultimately survive will be the immense farms organized on monopolistic principles. When this occurs it will mean great detriment and disaster to this country. The great mass of farmers can only be saved by a scientific, fair, and just system of cooperative selling and distribution. Such Federal legislation should be enacted to make this legally permissible. It is the only way to save the small farmers and prevent farms from being merged into large estates owned by a few. When this occurs this country will then be cursed with what has cursed so many civilized nations of the past—a large land monopoly.

Legislation should be promptly enacted and properly safeguarded which will bring to the masses of the farmers the blessings and benefits to be derived from cooperative selling and distribution.

Not only is the farmer under present conditions forced to sell at wholesale prices with great competition among themselves, and thus at low prices, but he is compelled to buy at retail prices with consequent great increase of price to him. You can readily understand the present deplorable condition of the farmer under the existing situation when you realize that what the farmer sells under this system has fallen more than 52 per cent and that what he buys has only fallen 23 per cent. The Department of Agriculture estimates that, taking the country as a whole, an acre of crops produced in 1920 will buy only 67 per cent of what the same acre produced in 1914 and only 60 per cent of what it produced in 1919. The yield of an acre of corn this year will only exchange for three-fourths as much as the five-year average before the war. This is the lowest in 20 years. A similar situation exists, if not worse, with oats. Thus, the farmer is seriously discriminated against both in selling and buying. These figures tell why his profits have disappeared and why he is cursed with losses.

The farmer should also be permitted to buy cooperatively and thus get the benefits of reduced prices, thereby making great savings in the cost of production. When the farmer is enabled to purchase cheaper and sell and distribute cheaper it will result in a great benefit to the mass of consumers in this country. Such legislation properly drawn and safeguarded, enabling the farmer cooperatively to sell and cooperatively to buy, will redound to the great betterment of the masses of the American people.

But, Mr. President, no system of relief would be effective to agriculture unless this great interest had extended to it a larger and longer system of credit. A restricted and insufficient credit to our manufactures, industrial, and merchantile enterprises would result in a great retardation of these varied industries and produce instant depression. As important as is credit to furnish the lifeblood for such enterprises, it is far more important to agriculture. The turnover in manufacturing and commerce is far shorter than it is in farming. The turnover in these enterprises is many times each year.

The raising of an agricultural crop takes almost a year and its sale and distribution six months more. In our usual agricultural products completion of production, sale, and distribution means a year and a half. In our stock-raising industry it takes a longer time than this, frequently running into several years before completion. Under these conditions agriculture needs more credit, and a longer credit, in order to be successfully conducted than do our other industries. The farmer in order to economically and successfully produce needs the loan of money for machinery, implements, and various improvements upon the farm, which would require several years before he would be able to pay. A large part of our farm products are exported to foreign countries for sale and distribution, which requires some time before full payment therefor can be made. These conditions, which can not be denied, confronting our agriculture require the creation of a system of credits which can meet these needs and relieve the situation. No system of credit to the farmer can give him full benefit that does not include an extension for sale and distribution along with production. The farmer's transaction is not completed until his products have been distributed and sold. To extend to the farmer credit to enable him to produce and then to withhold it and not permit him to sell and distribute is to put him completely at the mercy of speculators who have the means to buy what he is forced to sell. One reason that farming has not been as profitable as other businesses is that the farmer has not been given sufficient credit to complete his transaction by sale and distribution, but he has been forced to sell in a few months the products of his farm to rich speculators able to hold them for higher prices and reap the profits. This should not be permitted. A certain and sufficient part of our credit facilities should be set aside for the movement of crops and should be made available for the farmer. With our banking resources equal almost to that of the rest of the world, we are amply able to furnish our credit facility to the farmer to raise, sell, and market his products in an orderly way with the best possible results. It is an outrage to deny him the credit facilities that are now obtained by dealers, jobbers, and speculators in his products. The farmer is entitled to the credit and our resources are amply able to provide it.

Mr. President, every effort should be made to furnish credits by which industrious and frugal farmers can buy farms, improve them, and thus become freeholders. This constitutes the most splendid citizenship of the country.

The great Federal reserve system extended many benefits to the farmers never before possessed by them. All benefits given them under this system should be further extended and the system should be administered in the most liberal way to carry out the benefits conferred upon agriculture in this great measure. I believed at the time, and so stated repeatedly to members of the Federal Reserve Board, that I thought further extension of credits to farmers during the last year, when farm prices were falling with such disastrous results to the agricultural interests, and a lower rate of discount than that given by the Federal reserve banks would have gone far to relieve the situation at that time and would have greatly lessened the depression to farming and all business and enterprises in the country. I believed and urged at that time that the farmers, being unable to sell on account of the cessation of foreign markets, should have credits extended so as to give them longer time for the sale and distribution of their products. I believe if this had been done that the business situation would have been far more encouraging than it was then and is now.

Believing that agriculture, which is such a basic industry and upon the prosperity of which all others are so greatly dependent, should be fairly represented in the Federal reserve system, I supported and did what I could for the passage of the amendment recently passed giving representation to agriculture along with commerce and finance upon our Federal Reserve Board.

Recognizing that the farmer needed longer credits for the purchase of his home or farming implements, machinery, and improvements, Congress passed a measure known as the Federal farm land bank act. I earnestly supported this measure and did all I could to secure its passage. It has been beneficial in its results. It has proven its usefulness in many directions.

These banks should be given larger resources and their usefulness further extended. These banks, properly organized and operated, made large and resourceful, would bring untold benefits to the agricultural interests and all other enterprises of our country. A system should be devised, either independent of or a part of the Federal reserve system, which would extend to the farmers, upon a safe and sound basis, a larger and longer personal credit. This can be made secure by a proper State or National warehousing system, with a proper and fair credit on farm products deposited and the issuance of certificates as security. These certificates properly graded, secured, and insured, furnish a safe basis of credit, as the products represented are indispensable for the world's life and comfort. When farming is organized on a businesslike and scientific basis like other industries the products of the farm will become a safer basis of credit for a limited period than the products of the factory. Frequently the products of a factory, on change of style and depreciation, become as unsalable and undesirable as any farm products. All that is needed to make farm products form as safe a basis for credit as products of the factory is for the farm to be organized equally as well on a business basis. I believe a just and fair system of cooperative buying and selling will enable the farming business to be thus established. A proper system of State or National warehouses to be effective should have farm products fairly and properly graded. This grading should be done by persons who will do it justly and fairly to the seller and the buyer. The complaint of the farmers in the past is that this grading has been done for the benefit of the buyer and unjust to the seller. Frequently the wheat graded to the farmer has been sold to the consumer at a far higher grade than the farmer was paid for. Some of the elevators disclosed that often first grades of wheat sold to consumers far exceed the number of bushels of first grade paid for to the farmer. This should not be permitted, and there should be no question of the fairness and justice in grading. I hope to see enacted at this session of Congress these legislative measures of reform extending proper and legitimate grades to the farmer which will permanently relieve the situation and go far toward making farming stable and permanently profitable. The farming communities should also have provided better wholesale terminal facilities for handling surplus at large primary markets and more thorough organization of depots of distribution at large consuming centers of the country.

Mr. President, no effective or lasting relief can come to the farmers until they are provided with a cheaper and better system of transportation. It is useless to disguise the fact that much of the present depression in agriculture and industry is due to excessive freight rates now paid to our railroads for the transportation of farm and other products to the markets. Freight rates for farm products have increased in an average of 80 per cent since 1913. The increase on live stock is much greater than this. I have seen an estimate, which I assume to be correct, made by the economic committee of the Georgia Farm Bureau Federation, that the average freight rate per ton on live stock and farm products in 1913 was $3.74, and in 1920 was $6.74, and that for the year 1920 the increased cost for freight rates over those of 1913, either to be deducted from the price of purchasers or added to the price paid by consumers, or both, amounted to $599,094,719. This is the estimated increased cost for one crop movement in that year.

This will give us an idea of the amazing increase of freight rates upon farm products, and it can but have a most injurious result upon the profits derived from farming. Many cases were disclosed before the Joint Commission of Agricultural Inquiry, directed in this Congress, where the freight rates upon many products were equal to the price received. Many cases were disclosed where the freight rates were one-half of the price received, and many cases were less or more. The railroads get a much larger proportion of the value of farm profits. Farm products are reduced greatly in value while railroad rates are stationary. The inquiry disclosed to this commission that the present freight rates are entirely too high upon agricultural products and have resulted in the great retardation of agriculture and prevented the shipment and rapid sale and distribution of farm products. Many cases were disclosed where farm products were allowed to rot on the farms because the freight rates were equal to, if not exceeding, the price received for the products. These rates have been so excessive that it has prevented many shipments over the railroads and thus has worked to the detriment of the railroads. Their profits have been far less than they would have been with a fair and reasonable rate.

These excessive rates have permitted foreigners, who had cheap water transportation, to drive our farmers out of the markets of cities on the seaboard. Especially is this true of the shipment of farm products from South America. The effect of these high freight rates is practically to double the distance of the farm from the market. It has dislocated long-established markets, disarranged business, and produced chaos. These rates must be reduced and should be fixed with a fair consideration of the development and prosperity of agriculture.

The interests of the railroads are inseparably connected with the prosperity of agriculture and they should not be permitted to charge rates which are equally injurious to themselves and to the farming interests. If they are so shortsighted as to pursue such a suicidal policy, they should not be permitted to do so. The recent reduction of rates upon agricultural products was a step in the right direction and should be extended in territory and made greater in amount. As agriculture furnishes a very large part of the business of the railroads, this great interest should be properly represented upon the Interstate Commerce Commission, so that it should be permitted to receive fair and just treatment. The best interests of not only agriculture but the entire country demand this. The misfortunes of the railroads have come largely from the misfortunes of farming. Their improvement will not come until improvement in agriculture occurs. Agriculture being dependent upon the railroads for access to the markets and for returns upon the products shipped, these rates should be regulated fairly and justly to the farming interests.

In addition, it must be remembered that our farm products must meet the farm products of other nations of the world. High freight rates here to the port of shipment causes inability to meet foreign competition. When foreign competition is not met in the markets of the world it means a large surplus here unsold. This means further depression in agriculture, further loss, and further curtailment of the purchase of goods and shipment of goods by the farming communities. The failure to ship abroad ultimately will make a balance of trade against us to be met by shipment of gold abroad. This means banking and financial trouble and disturbance. Thus from whatever standpoint we view it the interests of the farmer and the interests of all our varied enterprises demand that agriculture must and should have a fair and reasonable freight rate, which if not given must result in serious detriment to all sections and all the varied interests of our country. I am satisfied that high freight rates have been one of the causes that have largely contributed to a great reduction in our foreign commerce and exports. Freight rates must be promptly reduced.

Mr. President, no system of transportation can be complete as far as our farming interests are concerned unless it is supplemented by a splendid system of public roads. The farmers can not produce economically and profitably unless they have good roads over which to haul their products from farm to depot. It is estimated that the average haul of the products of the farm to depot is 9.41 miles. It is also estimated that where these roads are bad and muddy it costs almost as much to the farmers to haul their products to the depot as it does from the depot to the markets for sale and distribution. Thus, with high cost to the farmer on the road from the farm to the depot and the increased freight rates, we can readily understand why his profits so rapidly disappear. The first bill I introduced in Congress was one providing for the Federal Government to cooperate with the States in improving public roads. One of the first speeches I ever made in Congress was in advocacy of this plan. I supported in every possible way, and was on the committee and the conference committee that prepared the present road plan of Federal aid to public roads. I believe this Federal aid to public roads should be continued and increased as rapidly as our financial conditions will permit, that farms may be brought into closer touch with the cities and depots for the shipment and sale of their products. This is indispensable to the successful and profitable operation of farms—a part of the transportation system so badly needed by them.

Another matter in which I am deeply interested as part of the transportation system for farmers is the parcel post. This system should be further extended and improved. I was a member of the joint commission which investigated the subject and reported the present system of parcel post, which report was adopted by Congress. This has been most beneficial to the farmers, and it should be further extended and enlarged.

As a part of the parcel-post system for farming communities it is necessary to continue and enlarge the rural free delivery system. Parcel post in the country is impossible without a continuance and extension of this system. With rural delivery, parcel post, good roads, and fair and just freight rates, and good, prompt, railroad service the domestic transportation for our agriculture will be secured. But agriculture needs additional cheap and efficient transportation. A large part of our agricultural products must find sale in foreign markets, and in order to reach foreign markets we must have ocean transportation. In order to meet our competitors ocean transportation must be reasonable, prompt, and regular. We have now the second largest merchant fleet in the world. With this merchant fleet our great agricultural and commercial interests have the facility of reaching foreign markets and successfully meeting their competitors. We can never have foreign trade in agriculture, mine, or factory successful and remunerative when we are dependent upon other nations for our ocean transportation.

To be dependent upon another nation for transportation would be like two competitive department stores in a city, one store being dependent upon the other for the delivery of its goods sold. The store that was dependent upon its competitor for the delivery of its goods would not survive many years of the competition. The preference given to the sale of its own goods over those of the competitor would soon drive the dependent concern from business. This was the condition we were in as to foreign markets when we did not have our merchant marine for the delivery of our own goods. This great merchant marine, built up by so much money and sacrifices to the American people, should be used for the development of our foreign trade from factory, mine, and agriculture. When the work of this great merchant marine is properly organized and efficiently run, it will insure our agricultural and commercial prosperity. Its success is interwoven with our own success.

Mr. President, agriculture can be benefited in other directions. The work of our statistical division of the Department of Agriculture should be further extended—broader and more accurate statistics can be obtained. As it takes a year for the farmer to raise his crop, and since when he once commences raising it he is compelled to complete it or else he sustains a great loss, it is of the utmost importance that he should have his statistics regarding the condition of the world's markets pertaining to his crops before he commences his crops. Farming in its best phases is a great venture, and one of the most effective ways of lessening the risk incident to farming is providing the farmer with complete statistics both in this country and other countries as to the conditions of the crops he is engaged in raising. I have always believed that farming could be greatly improved by the procurement of these statistics.

The Government should also make more experimental and scientific investigations for the benefit of agriculture which should be more generally distributed. The risk and expense of these experiments should be incurred by the Government. The extension of this would be a great benefit to farming and result in a greater production, and would enable him more successfully to overcome difficulties he encounters in connection with insect and other pests which destroy the crops. The Government can well aid in such commendable work.

In addition to that, our Government should have agricultural attachés in order to obtain statistics and to find markets for our products in the principal foreign countries producing and consuming agricultural products. These would give us statistics in regard to production in other countries and aid in procuring markets and let us know where profitable markets can be found. This work would bring great benefits to the agricultural interests if properly developed and operated.

Mr. President, no system of farm life or development would be perfect without increased educational facilities in every farming community. Rural high schools, increased facilities for primary schools, instructive agricultural schools and experimental stations should be more extensively set up in rural sections. These are indispensable and in order to make rural life complete and successful the best educational facilities should exist in the country.

Mr. President, these are some of the urgent measures for betterment of farming and which I hope to see promptly enacted. There are some others which could be enumerated, but these are the most pressing and urgent. I have and will continue to cooperate with those interested on both sides of this Chamber in the procurement of this legislation. I favor these measures as an act of justice to the farmer, putting him in a position of equality with other industries of the country, and which we believe will go far toward stabilizing farming and making it permanently profitable. I believe until this is done there can be no betterment of our material and financial conditions, and that the very best interests of this country demand that agriculture should be made one of the stable and profitable industries of this Nation. Until this is done we will be cursed with financial panics, curtailed markets, lessened sales, and general business depression. Agricultural prosperity means national prosperity, a healthier, stronger, and better Nation.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I wish to thank the Senator from Virginia for his splendid argument in favor of the bill which I introduced yesterday providing for a general and comprehensive system of marketing of all farm products. I bespeak for the Senator that he will study that bill and will advise with me, and that we may join our efforts in securing legislation along the line of a complete and comprehensive system of marketing and distribution of farm products under Government supervision.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I wish to state to the Senator from North Dakota that while I am not acquainted with the details of the bill to which he refers, yet I assure him that I shall earnestly cooperate with him in having enacted into legislation the suggestions contained in my speech to the Senate this afternoon.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, announced that on January 21, 1922, the President approved and signed the bill (S. 2776) to authorize the construction of a bridge over the Columbia River at a point approximately 5 miles upstream from Dalles City, Wasco County, in the State of Oregon, to a point on the opposite shore in the State of Washington.

REPORT OF BOARD OF DIRECTORS OF PANAMA RAILROAD CO. (S. DOC. NO. 120).

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HEFLIN in the chair) laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying report, referred to the Committee on Interoceanic Canals and ordered to be printed, as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit herewith, for the information of the Congress, the Seventy-second Annual Report of the Board of Directors of the Panama Railroad Co., for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1921.

WARREN G. HARDING.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 25, 1922.

ADJUSTMENT OF FOREIGN LOANS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8762) to create a commission authorized under certain conditions to refund or convert obligations of foreign Governments owing to the United States of America, and for other purposes.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I understand there is no Senator ready to proceed with the discussion of the pending bill. I hope that after we have had a short executive session we will recess until to-morrow, and that if possible we may complete the discussion of the measure to-morrow and pass the bill.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

RECESS.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 12 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Thursday, January 26, 1922, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, January 25, 1922.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon and was called to order by the Speaker.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Gracious Lord, we know there is power and there is virtue in Thy love which never ceases. We have not lived up to Thy blessed benedictions. As a Father Thou art great to provide and most gracious to forgive. O it is a comfort to know that there is redemption as well as a providence. For the goodly measures of health and strength we thank Thee. Do Thou accept this expression of our gratitude as our hearts' testimony. Surely wide is mercy's door and loud is wisdom's call. Hear us now while we whisper our vows of fidelity to all the vital needs of our country. In the name of Jesus. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

STATUE OF GEN. E. KIRBY SMITH.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes. Will the gentleman say on what subject?

Mr. SEARS. It is on a concurrent resolution accepting the statue of Gen. E. Kirby Smith.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Speaker, in 1918, as I recall, the State of Florida presented to the United States Government the statue of Gen. E. Kirby Smith, one of her most distinguished sons. For reasons unknown to myself, I am informed this statue has never been accepted by the Government, and I therefore trust unanimous consent will be given for the passage of the concurrent resolution which I am sending to the Clerk's desk to be read for the information of the Members.

As my colleagues know, I have never made a sectional speech since I have been in Congress, and while I knew my course was right along this line, after reading the life of this distinguished son of Florida, I am more convinced than ever that my course has been correct. As I have often stated, there should be no North, no East, no South, no West, and we should be a united Union, as our people are one, and to make sectional speeches can but do harm.

I shall not ask the House to go through the formality of unveiling Gen. Kirby Smith's statue, which has been in the Statuary Hall of the Capitol for several years, because of the length of time that has elapsed. However, I briefly desire—in justice to the memory of Gen. Kirby Smith—to give you a short history of his life.

In 1821, the father of this distinguished general was appointed judge of the superior court of Florida by President Monroe and immediately removed to that territory and fixed his residence at St. Augustine. On the 16th of May, 1824, there was born to him this distinguished son, who, though descended on both sides from Connecticut people, was a native southerner. When a young man he entered the Alexandria Boarding School, which was at that time a training school for students who desired admission to West Point. From there he went to West Point, where he was graduated with honors. He played a distinguished part in several of the Indian wars, but his most distinguished service for the Union was during the Mexican War. When the War between the States came on, although many of his relatives were in the Union Army, which was natural, as they lived north of the Mason-Dixon line, Gen. Kirby Smith was true to the State of his birth, resigned his commission in the Federal Army, offered his services to his native State, and joined the forces of the Confederacy.

Several resolutions were introduced in the Confederate Congress, in 1864, evidently for the purpose of annoying the President of the Confederacy, asking for an investigation of Gen. Kirby Smith, and to show you in part in what high esteem he was held I quote the resolution which was passed by the Confederate Congress:

Resolved, That Gen. E. Kirby Smith has distinguished his administration of the trans-Mississippi department by his justice, his firmness and moderation, his integrity and conscientious regard for law, his unaffected kindness to the people, the protection of their rights and the redress of their wrongs, and has thus won the confidence of congress. That the thanks of congress are due and are extended to Gen. E. Kirby Smith and to the commanders of the armies, Gen. Sterling Price, in Arkansas, and Gen. Richard Taylor, in Louisiana, and to all officers and soldiers of their commands for the brilliant campaign in Arkansas and Louisiana in the months of April and May, 1864. That the president be requested to communicate these resolutions to the officers named and to the armies of the trans-Mississippi.

As evidence of the character of this great man and to show you that he was not only a brave and fearless fighter but also a good loser, I quote you, in part, the following, which was perhaps his last communication to what was left of his command:

Your present duty is plain. Return to your families. Resume the occupations of peace. Yield obedience to the laws. Labor to restore order. Strive both by counsel and example to give security to life and property. And may God in His mercy direct you aright and heal the wounds of our distracted country.

Just after the war he wrote a private letter to Gen. Grant, in which he stated, in part, as follows:

I am most anxious to return and am determined that I will do so if practicable. I see that a change is taking place in the policy of the Government. The organization of the State governments and the end of military rule can not be long delayed. The South is too important an element in the political organization not to be conciliated and courted by the Government. Her coalition with the Democratic Party of the North is the aim of the President and will soon be accomplished with the ultimate triumph of those principles which we failed to establish with the sword and bayonet.

A few weeks later he wrote another letter to Gen Grant, much in the same strain, in which he said:

I did not fight for the Negro nor for the perpetuation of slavery. I took up arms through a sense of duty and in defense of principles whose complete triumph I shall live to see, if not by force of arms by the awakened sense of the people of the United States to their true interests and to wisdom.

These show the true character of the man.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Florida has expired.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Speaker, may I have two minutes more?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SEARS. Shortly afterwards he was restored to citizenship and established a school at New Castle, Ky., which he conducted wisely. In 1870 he became chancellor of the University of Tennessee, where he still pursued and followed his high ideals. In 1875 he went to the University of the South, at Sewanee, and there he rounded out the great work for the betterment of the young men of the country.

On the 28th day of March, 1893, the spirit of this great general and educator "passed over the river to rest in the shade of the trees," and in order that you may know the life that he lived it is only necessary for me to say his last words, so far as history records, were, "Yea; though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil."

To my mind that part of the biography of his life which stamps him as a truly great man are the beautiful letters which he wrote to his father and mother throughout all of the years of his life, and especially those written prior to the beginning of the Civil War.

In memory of such a man Florida presents this statue to the United States Government, and I sincerely hope it will be accepted and that the concurrent resolution will be unanimously adopted.

I send this resolution to the Clerk's desk, and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution. Is there objection?

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Speaker, it is in the usual form.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, let us know what it is. I do not think it ought to come up in this way.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the concurrent resolution be read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the concurrent resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House concurrent resolution 42.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the thanks of Congress be given to the people of Florida for the statue of Gen. E. Kirby Smith.

Resolved, That the statue be accepted, to remain in the National Statuary Hall, in the Capitol of the Nation, and that a copy of these resolutions, signed by the presiding officers of the House of Representatives and Senate, be forwarded to his excellency the governor of the State of Florida.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. MANN. What has been the practice in the past? Has it not been usual to have these resolutions come from the Committee on the Library, and does not that add a little bit to the value of them?

Mr. SEARS. I understand that has not been the usual practice. So far as I can understand, this is the usual practice in asking for the acceptance of the statue, because it has been in Statuary Hall since 1918.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the gentleman from Florida did not suggest, when he asked for unanimous consent, that he cared to have the resolution considered at the present time. It seems to me it would add dignity to the resolution to have it considered in the regular form, through the committee. I do not assume that there will be any question about the adoption of the resolution at the present time.

Mr. SEARS. Of course, Mr. Speaker, I recognize the fact that under the congested condition it is liable to sleep there three or four more years.

Mr. MONDELL. I do not think so.

Mr. SEARS. But I will follow the suggestion of the majority leader if he desires. This man's parents came from the State of Connecticut.

DISPENSING WITH CALENDAR WEDNESDAY BUSINESS.

Mr. MONDELL. I am sure the House will consider the resolution at the proper time. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the business in order under the Calendar Wednesday rule.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent to dispense with the business in order under the Calendar Wednesday rule. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what business is it proposed to take up under suspension?

Mr. MONDELL. The antilynching bill.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I object.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with Calendar Wednesday business to-day.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming moves to dispense with Calendar Wednesday business to-day. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The question was taken.

The SPEAKER. In the opinion of the Chair two-thirds——

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 69, noes 26.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. It is clear that there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. As many as are in favor of the motion to dispense with the business in order on Calendar Wednesday will, when their names are called, answer "yea," those opposed will answer "nay."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 252, nays 109, answered "present" 2, not voting 67, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.
Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 13) to assure to persons within the jurisdiction of every State the equal protection of the laws, and to punish the crime of lynching, with Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas in the chair.
The Clerk reported the title of the bill.
Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I submit now for the information of the House the amendments which I intend to offer in lieu of the last paragraph of section 3 and section 4 of the committee substitute, and I ask that they be read in my time.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota sends up amendments which he desires to have read in his time for the information of the committee. The Clerk will read.
The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the last paragraph of section 3 and insert in lieu thereof:
"Any State or municipal officer acting as such officer having under authority of State law in his custody or control a prisoner who shall conspire, combine, or confederate with any person to put such prisoner to death without authority of law as a punishment for some alleged public offense, or who shall conspire, combine, or confederate with any person to suffer such prisoner to be taken or obtained from his custody or control for the purpose of being put to death without authority of law as a punishment for an alleged public offense, shall be guilty of a felony, and those who so conspire, combine, or confederate with such officer shall likewise be guilty of a felony. On conviction the parties participating therein shall be punished by imprisonment for life or not less than five years."
Amend section 4 so as to read as follows:
"SEC. 4. The district court of the judicial district wherein a person is put to death by a mob or riotous assemblage shall have jurisdiction to try and punish, in accordance with the laws of the State where the homicide is committed, those who participate therein, provided it is first made to appear to such court that the officers of the State charged with the duty of prosecuting such offense under the laws of the State fail, neglect, or refuse to apprehend or punish such participants, or that the jurors obtainable for service in the State court having jurisdiction of the offense are so strongly opposed to such punishment that there is no reasonable probability that those guilty of the offense can be punished in such State court. A failure for more than 30 days after the commission of such an offense to apprehend the persons guilty thereof shall be prima facie evidence of such failure, neglect, or refusal."

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, in the last 32 years—that is, from the year 1889 to 1920, inclusive—3,372 persons were killed in the United States by murderous and lynching mobs. That is at the average rate of 105 per annum. Of these 712 were whites, including Mexicans in that category, and 2,660 were Negroes. Among this number were 11 white and 51 colored women and girls.

It is true that, taking the country as a whole, there has been a gradual and a very considerable decrease in the average number of lynchings per annum, but this decrease has been to a very considerable extent in the sections of the country that were formerly comparatively sparsely settled and where, with the increase of population and the establishment of courts, lynchings have become infrequent. On the other hand, there are sections of the country where there has been no decrease but a tendency to an annual increase in the number of lynchings, and therefore it can not be said that in the sections of the country where this crime against life and against civilization has been most prevalent there is any tendency to a decrease. On the other hand, there has developed an increasing tendency toward the practice of the most brutal, savage, and fiendish cruelty in connection with the commission of mob murder.

One shudders at the bare recital of the fiendish torture to which mob victims are subjected. The most degraded and brutal savages never indulged in more heartless and inhuman acts of outrage and torture than those which have become comparatively common in this twentieth century, in this land which we like to consider the haven of the downtrodden and the oppressed and the hope of the world. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Let us not forget that the taking of human life by mobs, the atrocious brutalities which so frequently characterize these crimes in our country, are practically unknown in times of peace over most of the civilized world; that we are subject to the condemnation and the odium of all the world by reason of these frightful atrocities; that notwithstanding the exalted and honorable place America, by reason of her method and system of government, her unselfish and altruistic foreign policy, her boundless generosity, has acquired in the minds and hearts of most of the peoples of the earth, our most emphatic and enthusiastic well-wisher anywhere may be shamed to silence by the perfectly plain and truthful recital of the facts of these frightful crimes.

I do not propose to discuss the constitutionality of the measure before us. That question has been ably handled by others very much better qualified than I, but I do want to propound to the gentlemen on both sides this question, In the light of these awful facts, and in view of this intolerable condition, what do you propose to do about it? Shall we simply drift along regretful, apologetic, shamed before all the world, making no definite attempt to cure this awful situation, or shall we say, as we should, this evil must cease; this blot upon the escutcheon of the Republic must be removed; this menace must be lifted; this vile fester must be cured.

Of course, we shall get nowhere so long as we assume an attitude of futile regret, a shoulder-shrugging posture of avoidance; or worse, an attitude of blind hostility to even a discussion of this frightful evil or the suggestions of remedy. Not until we bring ourselves to the proper attitude of righteous determination that this evil shall cease shall we even make a start toward its cure and its removal.

No Member on this floor is less disposed than I am to extend the police powers of the Federal Government, and I am not saying that as an idle and empty utterance; I state it as a fact supported by my more than 20 years' record on this floor, and known to all who care to know.

I voted to submit the national prohibition resolution to the States because I believed the people of the States were entitled to determine what they wished to do in that regard. I supported the adoption of the resolution, but I did it with serious misgivings as to the ultimate effect of the tremendously far-reaching extension of Federal police power involved—an extension that goes far beyond anything that could occur under the bill before us if it were a law. Yet, curiously enough, gentlemen who were enthusiastic in support of the extension of Federal police authority over every individual and every habitation in their States shrink from the comparatively limited extension of Federal authority and control contemplated under this act.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Very briefly.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. The gentleman voted for the constitutional amendment, but would he have voted for prohibition legislation which would have assumed that the prohibition amendment to the Constitution had already been adopted?

Mr. MONDELL. I do not understand the gentleman.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. The gentleman would not have voted for the Volstead Act before he amended the Constitution, would he? [Applause on Democratic side.]

Mr. MONDELL. There is some applause at that inquiry, but I do not understand how the inquiry quite applies to the matter before us.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I would like to explain it to the gentleman.

Mr. MONDELL. Clearly that tremendous extension could not have been made—no one believed it could have been made—without a modification of the Constitution. This legislation would not be possible except for the fourteenth amendment. The trouble with the gentleman from Texas is that he would fight even more vigorously a Constitutional amendment authorizing the Federal Government to punish mob violence than he is fighting the bill now before us. [Applause on Republican side.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I can not yield any further. If I have time at the end of my 30 minutes, I shall be very glad to yield. I have very high regard for the gentleman from Texas. He is a good lawyer, a good Member of this House, an honest, conscientious man, but I have not been quite able to follow the workings of his mind in respect to this particular matter.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. If I have time later, I shall.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming declines to yield.

Mr. MONDELL. There are few bold enough to frankly indorse and approve the torture of human beings, as they have been tortured by mobs in innumerable cases, for any reason, real or alleged, and yet there are many who suggest the impossibility or the improbability of any authority preventing the practice of lynching men, particularly black men, accused of certain crimes. There is no man worthy of the name who will not admit to the impulse in his own heart to visit swift and sudden punishment on those guilty of crimes against womanhood. [Applause.] But the fact is that in less than one-fifth of the cases of lynching in America was there a charge or allegation of infamous crime against women, and the cases, all told, in which there was any allegation of attacks upon women number considerably less than one-third of the total. Mob violence grows on what it feeds upon, and we all know that in those sections where mob violence has been prevalent almost any sort of a pretext, from bad manners to murder, is sufficient to arouse the mob spirit and lead to the most frightful excesses.

In apology or extenuation for mob violence men complain because, as they say, black people harbor criminals of their race. One of the black man's shining virtues is loyalty, and he has exhibited it toward white master and white friend through all of his history to a degree that has challenged the admiration of all. It is not to be wondered, therefore, that he shall be loyal to his own people; but how in Heaven's name can you expect a black man to deliver one of his own race to the almost certainty of torture and death? Can we ever hope or expect the black man in all cases to assume the attitude toward lawbreakers of their own race which the better class of white men do until and unless they may have some assurance of protection from torture and a fair and impartial trial?

The news dispatches recently brought the story of a young Negro in Canada fighting against an attempt to return him to his former home in the South for trial. Whether or no his story of outrages heretofore committed on his family in his native State are true, I have no means of knowing, but we are shamed in the face of proceedings like this, because of the fact that on the record it can not be denied that some men who return to certain parts of the country at least are in danger of mob violence, torture, and death.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask that I may have five minutes more.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I yield five minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I am not supporting this legislation wholly or principally because of the fact that in a majority of cases in America those that have suffered mob violence are black men. White men and white women have been the victims of these awful crimes, and any student of history must realize that lawlessness of this character allowed to go unchecked and unpunished will eventually seek out as its victims any against whom there may be a local prejudice.

Race prejudice is not limited to white and black men. It becomes almost as fierce at times between the various branches of the white race, and when to this is added the prejudices which differing religious beliefs sometimes engender, antagonisms become deep-seated and as easily aroused to violence as are the differences and prejudices between men of the white and black race.

We have a condition under which mob violence is now principally invoked in certain sections against black men, but allowed to go unpunished it will spread to the farthest confines of the Republic, leaving no man, no woman subject to local prejudice safe or secure in this land of the free and home of the brave, for this is the one crime we never seem to punish. He who commits any other crime, aye, even the slightest misdemeanor, stands in some danger of punishment, but seemingly never the fiend who applies the torch to one of his fellow men. None of them has been punished. In Oklahoma the other day they did sentence some men for the crime of mob violence. They were black men. Oklahoma has at least reached the point where black mobs must not murder black men, but so far no white men have been convicted as members of a mob taking the life of a colored man or woman.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I wish to say that in my own State of Alabama last year there were 10 or 15 white men convicted and sent to the penitentiary for lynching a white man.

Mr. MONDELL. I am glad to know that. They have gotten far enough along in the gentleman's State that they sometimes punish a white man for lynching a white man. But if his victim is black or brown or yellow no law is invoked against them. I am willing to admit that in the history of these frightful crimes in America there have been a very few cases where white men have been punished to some extent for the mobbing of white men——

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. And where black men have been punished for the murder of black men. But the cases are so rare that they simply prove the rule.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I have not the time.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield a minute to the gentleman.

Mr. MONDELL. All right.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I have lots of time.

The gentleman has just made the statement that in no circumstances are white men punished for lynching——

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman has told me of an instance, and I will take the gentleman's word for it. There have been a few cases and they are so rare that I want the gentleman in his time to blazen them to the world. It will at least hold out a little hope to us in this situation, in which we sometimes almost despair. [Applause.]

Mob violence is anarchy, and left unchecked and unpunished no man can say to what extremes it may go, to what proportions it may grow. And these crimes have largely gone unpunished. However tardy and uncertain justice may be in the punishment of other misdeeds, for no man committing any other crime or mere misdemeanor but stands in some danger of punishment, he who murders as a member of a mob and as such commits crimes of savagery and torture of the most revolting character has, however, been reasonably certain of going scot free. Few have ever been punished, and, as matters now stand, few are likely to be.

And so these men go forth in their communities, men who have indulged in the practice of the most fiendish torture of their fellow men, to become heroes of a certain sort, at least to the immature and thoughtless. Around these scenes of lynching and torture hundreds, even thousands, frequently gather, witnesses of the ghastly and revolting details, their hearts and consciences seared with the brutalizing and never-to-be-forgotten spectacle.

And so I say again, "What are you going to do about it?" Shall we close our eyes, stop our ears, seal our consciences against these frightful happenings in the vain hope that in some providential way they shall cease? Or shall we, as men charged with high responsibility, go on record as determined to do what we can toward removing this fester from the body politic, toward ridding the Nation of this frightful menace to its future, toward making punishment swift and sure, both to him who as an individual commits crime and to him who in the now safe shelter of the mob, a coward and a villain at once, sets up the standard of anarchy?

In the far West in years past, before the machinery of organized society had been set up and law had established its reign, unofficial organizations of citizens did take into their hands, with much justification, punishment of the criminal and the desperado, but that was a temporary expedient to meet a temporary condition. Those sessions of "judge lynch" were in the main without undue prejudice, and the judgments of his court were carried out without unnecessary violence and cruelty. But the disease we are combating in America to-day is in no way related to the reign of the vigilantes in the new and sparsely settled West. It is savagery in its most abhorrent and degrading form; it does not mete out justice and does not deter from crime. If allowed to go unchecked, it will break down and destroy law and order and civilization. It is in my opinion high time that the Federal Government assert its authority, the States having failed utterly to assert theirs. If we are not willing to attempt to do this, then we must confess ourselves indifferent to these crimes and their consequences or lacking in the courage necessary to take drastic and unusual action to meet frightful and intolerable conditions. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I have said mob violence is anarchy; it is anarchy in its most vicious and repulsive form. It is a thing that if not stamped out will grow and spread until it will undermine the foundations of the fairest Commonwealths of the Union. I realize that men on the Democratic side in their hearts know that to be true, but they hesitate to apply the cure. This bill may not be perfect; it may contain provisions that will require decisions of the courts as to their constitutionality, but we have done the best we could in the light of all of experience and of judicial decisions to write upon the statute books a law that is at least a forward step toward the prevention of these fearful crimes; that will, we hope, start in operation the causes and influence that will eventually rid our fair country of this great menace. [Applause.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself five minutes. [Applause.]

I endeavored to give the distinguished gentleman who has just taken his seat an opportunity to correct the statement that he has just made, and he failed to appreciate the opportunity that I tried to give him. I am under the necessity of doing it myself. The gentleman just referred to a lynching in the State of Oklahoma in connection with the statement that the States make no attempt to prosecute those engaged in lynching. I understand on yesterday they were exhibiting the picture of the man who was lynched there. I read from the Washington Post of this morning:

FIVE CONFESS LYNCHING; LIFE TERMS IMPOSED.—"DESERVING OF ELECTRIC CHAIR," IS OPINION OF OKLAHOMA JUDGE AT TRIAL.

(By the Associated Press.)

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA., January 24.

Justice was speedily administered in district court here to-day when five self-confessed members of the party that lynched Jake Brooks, Negro packinghouse worker, here on the night of January 14, pleaded guilty before Judge James I. Phelps and were sentenced to life imprisonment. The five are Lee Whitley, 29 years old; Charles Polk, 18; Elmer Yearta, 19, white men; and Robert Allen, 27; and Nathan Butler, 40, Negroes.

Whitley and Yearta are members of the Butcher Workmen's Union, on strike at the packing plants here, while Polk is an admitted strike sympathizer. Allen is a cousin of the Negro, who was lynched.

Judge Phelps told the defendants their conduct warranted the electric chair.

As soon as this lynching occurred the governor of the State of Oklahoma offered a reward for the arrest and conviction of these men.

Now, gentlemen, I have never apologized for lynching. I am ashamed of the fact that it is sometimes committed in my State. The position I take is that in the discussion of this question men ought to be fair to the States and to the people as a whole who are doing their best to deal with the situation. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER], in the opening speech on this bill, said:

A mother and her five children were lynched by a Texas mob in 1918, the mother having been shot as she was attempting to drag the bodies of her four dead sons from their burning home. The crime in this case was not rape. It was alleged conspiracy to avenge the killing of another son by officers who had come to arrest him for evading the draft law. Those are some of the facts.

I wired the State senate, and these are the facts. I wired the State senator who resides at Huntsville, the place where this offense is alleged to have occurred, for the facts. He replied that three members of the family were draft evaders; that in trying to effect the arrest of one he was killed. The other members armed themselves, a battle ensued between a posse led by the constable and the Negroes. They were in a state of siege. They had seven guns and several hundred rounds of ammunition; that the Negroes fired over a hundred rounds in the battle the Negroes were killed. This, of course, was regrettable, but the point I make is that it is not fair to any State or to any people to exaggerate such occurrences in order to swell the total of lynchings charged against any section. Through an error of my office in affixing the date to a news item clipped from the Washington Post I have made an erroneous statement with reference to the date of the Duluth lynching, and have been led into a criticism of the Tuskegee Institute for having excluded that occurrence from the total of last year's lynchings. My attention has been called to that error, which I greatly regret.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I will yield if you yield me time.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I do not know that I have got very much time. I just wanted to say——

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Briefly; I yield to you time to make a statement.

Mr. HAMMER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a second?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. HAMMER. I desire to state that I tried without success to get the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] to give me opportunity to make a brief statement. In 1908, when I was prosecuting attorney in North Carolina, a most brutal murder occurred in one of the counties. An old man, 75 years old, and his old wife and young grandchild were murdered by three Negroes and the house partly burned. When these Negroes were brought to trial they were lynched, and the leader of the mob was convicted, and I prosecuted him, and he was sentenced to 15 years in the penitentiary, the maximum penalty. Three years ago in North Carolina there were seven men sent to the penitentiary, or rather to the road, for engaging in an attempt to lynch Negroes, and last year there were three, all white men, convicted in the State court.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. When men get up on the floor of this House and say nothing has been done in the South to enforce the law against mob violence, they do that section an injustice.

The CHAIRMAN. The time allowed himself by the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I will yield myself five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for five minutes more.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Gentlemen, I have nothing against the people of color who sit in the gallery yonder. I played with black children when I was a boy. I sympathize with their situation. I confess it, gentlemen, that while I am anxious that every person have protection, I am not so much concerned about the criminal charged with crime as I am interested in the great body of black men who are not charged with the commission of any crime. In so far as this bill is concerned, and those who are behind it make their interest manifest, the concern is wholly for the criminal, that relatively small element which is causing so much trouble and race friction. But the innocent, the law-abiding, you put them in the big game class, with a 12 months' per year open season. [Applause.] That is your bill. This bill would not touch the East St. Louis rioters nor any race rioters. Under this bill black men and women may be killed with impunity just so long as they are above the suspicion of having violated the law.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Furthermore, this bill proposes to pay $10,000 life insurance to the relatives of the criminal, and both the innocent Negroes and the innocent white people must pay the taxes to meet that penalty.

The CHAIRMAN. The time that the gentleman from Texas has allowed himself has again expired. Gentlemen must not interrupt without recognition.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BRAND].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia is recognized.

Mr. BRAND. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRAND. Mr. Chairman, the general principle of the bill is, as indicated by the title, to secure to all persons in each State "the equal protection of the laws," and the specific intent is to punish the alleged crime of lynching.

The title refers to lynching as a crime. There is no such crime as lynching eo nomine in the common law or in any statute of any country or any State. It is true that in 1896 the General Assembly of Ohio passed a law which refers to lynching and in the first section thereof attempts to define it. This law is entitled "An act for the suppression of mob violence." In the first section defining what constitutes a mob and in the last paragraph thereof this language is used, "and any act of violence exercised by them upon the body of any person shall constitute a lynching." This is not the common usage and meaning of the term "lynching." With this exception, so far as my investigation discloses, there is no such thing as the crime of lynching eo nomine.

We must therefore look to the common usage of the term and the lexicographer to ascertain what is the meaning of the term "lynching."

Winston's Simplified Dictionary defines it to be—

> The infliction of punishment, especially death, by hanging without legal trial.

The Century Dictionary defines the word "lynch" as follows:

> To punish by lynch law; punish summarily for a crime or public offense of any kind without authority of law; specifically, to punish with death in this manner.

Black's Law Dictionary, under the words "lynch law," gives this definition:

> A term descriptive of the action of unofficial persons, organized bands, or mobs, who seize persons charged with or suspected of crime, or take them out of the custody of the law, and inflict summary punishment upon them without legal trial and without the warrant or authority of law.

Lynching is, therefore, as the term is ordinarily defined by the lexicographer, homicide, which is the killing of a human being, and is of three kinds—murder, manslaughter, and justifiable homicide. As a general rule, lynching, as the term is ordinarily used, is murder, though in some cases the killing may be manslaughter. In some cases involving the usual crime which provokes lynching, though not lynching as defined, the killing may be justifiable homicide.

It is a well-settled rule of law that parents and children may mutually protect each other and justify the defense of their person or reputation of each other. A father may kill another to prevent a felonious assault upon his wife or daughter, in which case the killing would be justifiable homicide. A brother may kill another to prevent a felonious assault upon his sister or his mother, in which case the killing would be justifiable homicide. A sister may kill another to prevent a felonious assault upon herself or upon her sister or upon her mother, in which case the killing would be justifiable homicide. A father may kill any Negro or white man who attempts to rape any female member of his family in order to prevent it, or to kill such a person who is in the act of committing this offense, in which case the killing would be justifiable homicide.

If one person a citizen of, a resident of, or a temporary sojourner in a State kill another without authority of law, it is murder or manslaughter, and is punishable by the laws of the State in which the crime is committed.

If there is nothing peculiar in the place where the crime is committed, as if on ceded territory, and nothing peculiar in the character of the slayer or the slain, as if killing or being killed while in the discharge of duty as a Federal officer, the courts of the State and of the State alone have jurisdiction to try the offender. The principle is the same whether the killing is done by one person or by a mob.

When the Federal Government was organized and the distribution of powers between it and the States was made as a result of a delegation of power to the Federal Government and a denial of power to the States, the pre-existing power of the State to punish for crimes against the State when there is nothing peculiar in the crime, the condition of the offender or the place of commission, remained unaltered and unimpaired. Therefore, as a general rule, murder is an offense against the laws of the State and not against the laws of the United States. The whole scheme of the bill with the exception of section 15 is founded upon the proposition that a lynching in a State deprives the victim of the "equal protection of the laws"—that is, the murder of a person by a mob is a denial of the "equal protection of the laws."

The phrase "equal protection of the laws" appears is only one place in the Constitution; that is in the second clause of the first paragraph of the fourteenth amendment, where it is declared:

> Nor shall any State * * * deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

The limitations in the clause in question are upon the power of the State in its organized capacity. It is provided that "No State" shall do certain things "nor shall any State" do certain other things.

The prohibitions of the amendment operate on the State and only on the State. But it operates on all the agencies of the State, the legislative, executive, and judicial departments, and all administrative agencies under the one or the other. If the State, through any of its agencies, deny to any person the equal protection of the laws, the act is within the prohibition. But the act must be done under State authority or under color of State authority. If one be denied the equal protection of the laws by an individual who acts on his responsibility, not by virtue of the authority of the State nor under color of authority from the State, the act is not within the prohibition, and if the act be wrongful the redress is by appeal to the State authority. If a denial of equal protection of the laws results from such an act which is criminal under the laws of the State, which is denounced by the laws of the State and punishable under the laws thereof, the offender neither acting under the authority of the State nor under color thereof, but in violation and defiance of the laws of the State, a fortiori, the act is not within the prohibition.

In Virginia v. Rives (100 U. S., p. 318) the court says:

The provisions of the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution all have reference to State action exclusively and not to any action of private individuals.

In United States v. Cruikshank et al. (92 U. S., p. 554) the court says:

The fourteenth amendment prohibits a State from depriving any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law; but this adds nothing to the rights of one citizen as against another. It simply furnishes an additional guaranty against any encroachment by the States.

The court adds:

Every republican government is in duty bound to protect all its citizens in the enjoyment of the equality of the rights of citizens, if within its power. That duty was originally assumed by the States, and it still remains there. The only obligation resting upon the United States is to see that the States do not deny the right. This the amendment guarantees, but no more.

In Civil Rights cases, One hundred and ninth United States, page 11, in discussing the fourteenth amendment, the court says:

It is State action of a particular character that is prohibited. Individual invasion of individual rights is not the subject matter of the amendment. It does not invest Congress with power to legislate upon subjects which are within the domain of State legislation. The wrongful act of an individual, unsupported by State authority, is simply a private wrong or a crime of that individual, and is to be vindicated by resort to the laws of the State for redress.

While the fifth section of the fourteenth amendment authorizes Congress to enforce by appropriate legislation the provisions of said amendment, this simply gives authority to enact legislation corrective of wrongs committed by the State and not of wrongs committed by individuals.

As stated in Ex parte Virginia, One hundredth United States, page 46:

The prohibitions to the fourteenth amendment are addressed to the States.

They are:

No State shall make or enforce a law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States * * * nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the law.

They have reference to actions of the political body denominated a State. The State acts by its legislative, its executive, or its judicial authorities. It can act in no other way.

In Civil Rights cases (109 U. S., p. 13) the court says:

Until some State law has been passed, or some State action through its officers or agents has been taken, adverse to the rights of citizens sought to be protected by the fourteenth amendment, no legislation of the United States under said amendment, nor any proceeding under such legislation can be called into activity, for the prohibitions of the amendment are against State laws and acts done under State authority.

In the case of United States v. Harris (106 U. S., p. 639) the court says:

When the State has been guilty of no violation of its provisions; when it has not made or enforced any law abridging the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; when no one of its departments has deprived any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, or denied to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws; when, on the contrary, the laws of the State, as enacted by its legislative and construed by its judicial and administered by its executive departments, recognize and protect the rights of all persons, the amendment imposes no duty and confers no power upon Congress.

On April 20, 1871, Congress passed an act similar to the pending bill, being section 5519 of the Revised Statutes, which sought to punish a denial of equal protection of the laws by a mob, the said act being as follows:

If two or more persons in any State or Territory conspire to go in disguise upon the highway or on the premises of another for the purpose of depriving, either directly or indirectly, any person or class of persons of the equal protection of the laws or of equal privileges or immunities under the laws, or for the purpose of preventing or hindering the constituted authorities of any State or Territory from giving or securing to all persons within such State or Territory the equal protection of the laws—

And so forth, shall be punished as prescribed therein.

It was attacked as unconstitutional and so held in United States v. Harris (106 U. S., p. 632, supra).

In the case of Re Rahrer (140 U. S., p. 554) Mr. Justice Fuller, delivering the opinion of the court, said:

The fourteenth amendment, in forbidding a State to make or enforce any law abridging the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States, or to deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, or to deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws, did not invest, and did not attempt to invest, Congress with power to legislate upon subjects which are within the domain of State legislation.

All of these decisions are from the same source, the Supreme Court of the United States. Most of the cases cited, and the principles announced taken therefrom, were called to my attention by a friend, to whom I acknowledge credit therefor. While illness prevented an elaborate investigation of the question, I may say, since my recovery, I reviewed all these decisions and many others from the Supreme Court. All clearly demonstrate that the Dyer bill, with the exception of the treaty provision, is clearly unconstitutional, and would be so held by any unbiased court anywhere if judicially determined. For any other view to be judicially maintained it would be necessary to overrule a line of decisions extending back to 1879.

I can understand why a Member of Congress who is not a lawyer may get his consent to vote for this uncalled-for and vicious legislation, but for a lawyer to do so means one of two things: First, that he has little regard for the oath he took when he solemnly swore that he would support the Constitution of the United States; or, second, that his study of law and the Constitution, and particularly his investigation of the decisions of the courts upon the question involved, has been in vain.

Lynching by hanging or killing people without legal trial did not originate in the South. The distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON], in a well-prepared speech, though I disagree with his legal conclusions, in quoting history only partly, impliedly, if not in express terms, charged the State of Virginia with being the author of lynching. His historical reference was to the law administered by Charles Lynch, a Virginia planter. During the career of this man and his neighbors, Robert Adams and Thomas Callaway, not a human being was killed. The mode of inflicting punishment was short of death.

Different writers have attempted to trace the origin of lynching to Ireland, England, South Carolina, Pennsylvania, and Virginia. The point I am making is that it is not a settled historical fact that Virginia or any other Southern State originated lynching as it is commonly known at this time.

The first killing of a human being for the rape of a white woman dates back centuries before the States known as the South were ever dreamed of. Absalom, the son of David, had a sister whose name was Tamar, and a half brother by the name of Amnon. Amnon was in love with Tamar, and claiming to be sick and by the help of his friend Jonadab, Tamar was allowed to go to his house to prepare his food and otherwise wait on him. When Tamar arrived at his room, Amnon tried to persuade her to yield to his lustful entreaties, when she refused, telling him not to force her, for no such thing ought to be done in Israel. The Bible declares that he did not harken unto her voice, but being stronger than she, he forced her and lay with her. This conduct constituted the offense of rape. Two years thereafter Absalom got up a crowd of his servants and at an appointed time and place where had gathered the king's sons, including Amnon, and while Amnon was drinking wine he ordered his servants, who went for that purpose, to kill Amnon, which they did. This is the first rape and the first killing for rape of which history furnishes any record with which I am familiar.

As I stated on the floor the other day in a brief colloquy with the Congressman from New York [Mr. FISH], Georgia never began or initiated the lynching business, but a company of Yankee soldiers did, which was the first lynching in Georgia and probably in the South. A Negro man in 1865 had committed a rape upon a white woman near Lawrenceville, Ga., and after committing the act he fled to Lawrenceville, thinking that these soldiers would protect him from violence by the family and friends of the outraged woman. When his pursuers arrived at Lawrenceville the officer in charge of the company was told what the Negro had done. He thereupon took the Negro in custody, purchased a rope, and had it tied around the Negro's neck. He called upon an old Negro man who was present with a wagon and yoke of oxen. The rapist was placed on the wagon and the old Negro man was ordered to drive under a certain tree in the courthouse square. One of the soldiers climbed the tree and hung the rope over a limb and the Negro driver was ordered to move off. He hesitated, but at the point of a bayonet finally moved and left the rapist swinging to the limb until he died.

Our people are opposed to lynching, though many are charged up against us. They abhor the cause which usually provokes lynching, because there is not a father with whom I ever discussed the subject who would not infinitely prefer to see his daughter dead and for all his remaining years hear the sound of the clods of clay as they fall upon her coffin than for her to become the victim of a Negro's lust; and yet, in all this discussion by the majority, not a thought has been uttered nor a word of sympathy expressed by any Republican who has spoken upon this question for the desolate and helpless victim of these brutes.

The truth is, this proposed legislation is partisan and political. It is a blow at the white people of the South—nothing more and nothing less. The bill was introduced and is being prosecuted in order to promote the welfare of many of the Republicans in this House. It was introduced and is being prosecuted at the instance of their Negro constituents, among others, and the Negro societies in the North, who are not so much interested in preventing lynching of Negroes for assaults upon our white women as they are for establishing social and political equality with the white people. This is the expected climax of their efforts. This is the fruitage which they hope and pray may grow out of the agitation of the Negro question and be the result of the pending legislation. Human villainy has sounded no lower depths than is here fathomed in this political effort to bring about such an infamous heritage.

The Negro associations and societies and the Republicans who are encouraging these conspirators are doing the white and colored races of the South an irreparable injury. Those of you who are actors upon the stage for these Negroes are playing with lightning. You are sowing to the wind, when the harvest may be a revolution.

The people of Georgia, notwithstanding she has been denounced in severe terms on this floor, are against lynching. The courts, the press, the pulpit, the bar of the State are a unit in opposition to lynching in all of its forms. All these classes are using their brains, talents, and influence to put an end to it, and yet this does not mean that they will stand for or submit to social equality for which these Negro agitators and their Republican brethren are longing.

Social equality may come to pass in the territory north of the Mason and Dixon Line, but the stars will cease to shine and the heavens will be rolled up as a scroll before this state of affairs will ever exist among white people of the South.

Mr. DRIVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DRIVER. Mr. Chairman, in the course of the discussion of the pending measure, House bill 13, practically all authorities in point from the court of last resort have been cited and construed by the advocates and opponents of the measure, and in my opinion an examination of such decisions by an unbiased and unprejudiced mind would inevitably reach the conclusion that such proposed legislation is without constitutional warrant. The arguments advanced and the construction given by the proponents revolve about the opinion of Hon. G. D. Goff, assistant to the Attorney General, whose conclusion may be summed up in the contention that the question of whether or not a State is remiss in affording to its citizens the constitutional guaranty of protection of life, liberty, and property is exclusively a question for legislative determination, and when so expressed by the Congress is conclusive on that question of fact, rendering the legislation impervious to attack, for explanation, or for meritorious showing to the contrary, and he blandly admits, on page 43 of the committee hearings, that the principle would carry to the extent of embracing all crimes known to the calendar. In other words, in its logical conclusion and in the last analysis, an amendment to the pending bill to include murder, larceny, and breach of the peace, with the sanction of congressional approval, would immediately oust the jurisdiction of the separate States and vest such power in the Federal tribunals, thereby destroying the last vestige of authority of the State courts and rendering impotent the most valued institutions created under State sovereignty.

If the situation necessitated such destruction of State rights as an expedient for strict enforcement of the law prohibiting the crime of lynching, then who will argue against the expediency with respect to the crime of murder? Statistics disclose that during the period of more than 30 years the crime of lynching has gradually diminished. This record maintains during the past three years, while it is a matter of general knowledge that during the same period all other crimes increased tremendously. In fact, we are engulfed in a wave of crime, especially murder and robbery, which rocks the very foundations of law and order. The Federal courts, in my opinion, exercising their utmost energies to cope with the situation, are so congested that the services of 22 additional judges are imperative, according to the record as made up before the Judiciary Committee of this body. Reports from the State jurisdictions are to the effect that their dockets are equally congested. The recent action of the Postmaster General in engaging the services of the marines for the protection of the mail is an acknowledgment that the ordinary and usual forces engaged in enforcing the law are unable to control the situation, and evidently, in the minds of the Congress, to an extent to justify the unauthorized act of such official in so employing the armed forces of the Nation.

In view of the conditions thus stated, the argument for such legislation as a matter of policy is entirely without force, if, in fact, such arguments have amounted to more than a specious plea or smoke screen behind which its advocates undertake to hide their hypocrisy. Many of the Members advocating this legislation declare themselves free of partisan spirit and sectional animosity, but I am constrained to accept the position of the distinguished young Representative from New York [Mr. FISH] as reflecting its purpose. He said:

I fail to follow the logic or political tactics of my Republican colleagues who try to pretend that this legislation is not aimed at special sections of the South.

I may differ with the gentleman on his estimate of the Negro generally, and am not disposed to dispute his assertion that the Negroes under his command made good soldiers, for I believe that when officered by brave white men the Negro is capable of bearing arms bravely. I also fully agree with him in the suggestion that a certain party could better employ his talent in directions other than the effort to inquire into the conduct of the American Expeditionary Forces in dealing with black rapists in France. However, much may be said to the credit of any particular Negro soldier, or any organization composed of Negro soldiers, this will be said, and it is borne out by the record, that the disposition of the Negro to commit the crime of rape was manifested in France, just as it is in his native land, and the perpetration of such crime on the women of France resulted in putting to death many Negroes in the uniform of the American soldier. I do not mean by this allusion to detract in the least from the value of the service performed by the Negro in the war. On the contrary, I am convinced that the conditions there but reflected the conditions here; that it was the brute, one of numbers, who committed the crime, thereby disgracing not only himself and his fellow Negro soldiers but in the minds of the people there reflecting upon the American organization as a whole. I repeat when I say that such is the danger confronting every community in which the Negro lives to-day the inability to distinguish the one brute out of the mass before his savage proclivities are viciously asserted.

The majority of those advocating the measure assert that it is not a party measure, and I take issue with this assertion. The able gentleman from my sister State, Missouri [Mr. ELLIS], is in full accord with my view. He said:

I want to say to the gentleman—

Referring to Mr. HERSEY, Republican, of Maine—that if his interpretation of the Chicago platform be accepted, if his advice to his colleagues on the majority side shall be followed, his party and my party will be guilty of a dastardly breach of faith, and he will soon learn whether the Republican Party owes any obligations to the Negro voters and Negro people of this country—and the gentleman proceeds to give his reasons for the commitment in this language—

Let me tell him some more for his enlightenment. In many communities, congressional districts, and in some States of the area I have mentioned Negro voters hold to-day the balance of power. Will the gentleman argue that the Republican Party owes no obligations whatever to these people? Shades of the immortals!

Of course, he is right. It is not a question of the constitutionality of the measure, it is not a question of the protection of constitutional rights, it is not a question of civil policy; but it is one exclusively of political expediency, and a reiteration of many proposals launched in this legislative body for the same reason. It seems to be the temper and purpose of the majority party as now constituted to agitate this racial question whenever in power, driven to it no doubt by the urgency of the Negro organizations of the North and Negro-phile supporters whose utterances are equally vicious, actuated by an unyielding animosity for and prejudice against the Southern States of the Union, both sources inimicable to the best interests of both races wherever located.

I append here a list of measures introduced in the Senate and House of Representatives since the 1st day of December, 1889, which measures sought to interfere with the local affairs of the South:

REFERENCE LIST OF BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED IN CONGRESS SINCE THE FIFTY-FIRST CONGRESS ON ELECTION REFORM.

H. R. 17421. By Representative Pearre, of Maryland: To prevent intimidation and corruption in elections of officers provided by the Constitution. Referred to the Committee on Election of President, Vice President, and Representatives in Congress.

It will be noted that the activities during that period of time were confined to our elections, and, notwithstanding the fact that the highest court in our land repeatedly upheld our State election laws, we still have at least one Member of this body who persists in an effort to hound this people on the same old score. But that theory has been overworked, and, in the face of the decisions mentioned, but little attention is now paid to such effort, largely due to the fact that equally rigid qualifications for an elector are written into the law of many States of the North, East, and West. In fact, I may plead guilty to an admiration for the splendid law of the great State of Massachusetts, prescribing the qualifications of an elector, more rigid than the great majority of the Southern States.

Now that the effort to regulate our election affairs has spent its force, we are confronted with this new threat and a more serious one. At best, not more than two States could have been outraged had you succeeded in forcing Negro political domination upon us by voting every ignorant Negro in the South. It would have aroused the white man to his danger and caused every one of that element to be polled, and even in the two States, as degrading and embarrassing as the rule of the ignorant and immoral Negro would be to the decent people, yet only office was at stake, while through this measure, and its misconceived, misunderstood, and misinterpreted promise to those whom you seek to protect, you present a threat to the home of every man residing in a community with a Negro population, and menace the sanctity and the lives of the mother, wife, and daughters of that man. We realize this. We believe, in your ignorance of the character of the Negro race, many of you do not realize the consequences. It is inconceivable to me that the splendid men with whom I have associated here from the majority side of the body, men of conscience, rectitude of conduct, and manly bearing, could do this thing in the consciousness of its consequences. I prefer to believe that it is through the want of information rather than inclination, however strong may be your party demand. I am surprised at the response, voiced in your utterances on the floor, to the appeal of your distinguished colleague from Maine [Mr. HERSEY], in which he said:

Do not, I beg of you, allow partisan appeals and party prejudices to blind you and destroy the peace and harmony of our national household, and do a terrible injustice and wrong to our own people in any section of this great and united Nation.

The statistics of lynchings relied upon is compiled by the Tuskegee Institute, a Negro school. It seems to be the only record available, but it is inaccurate in that it fails to include the lynching of three Negroes in the city of Duluth, Minn., in July, 1921. I believe that it is inaccurate in the percentage of lynchings attributed to the crime of rape. In many instances the crime of rape is mercifully followed by the murder of the victim, in which event the cause is charged to murder. I believe that I am corroborated in this view from the number of cases quoted by the Members discussing the circumstances of particular crimes in which the death of the victim ensued.

It has been suggested by some of the speakers that if the measure as now offered is not constitutional amendments may be made which would effectuate compliance with constitutional demands. Of course no one takes this promise seriously. If the measure fails in constitutional warrant, it is fundamentally so, and therefore beyond the reach of an amendment which would bring it within the purview of its sanction.

I reiterate the expressions heard from other speakers on the probable effect of the bill should the question of legality be waived and it be conceded as carrying the power necessary to enforce its mandates. It is beyond possibility to discuss the measure without discussing the race question, which will be a live issue so long as the white and other races occupy the same country. It is the theory of the sociologist that two nonassimilable races could not exist in harmony in the same environs. We of the South believe that we have disproved this theory, and are demonstrating by the conditions existing to-day that such life is possible, notwithstanding the constant nagging and interference by those who can not and do not appreciate the limitations of the Negro race. I do not believe an inflexible rule will serve in determining such relations. The application of the expedients necessary to adjust the relations of the white and yellow races on the Pacific coast may prove a lamentable failure when applied to the white and black races of the North, South, and Middle West. Recognition must be given to the social, political, and economic distinctions, and tranquillity demands that the status be fixed and definite. In addition, there must be a sentiment between the races, which has proven in the South to be the foundation upon which orderly life of the two people are based, the only medium which will bring about tolerance and mutual forbearance. This sentiment was a part of the life of the former slaveholder, and it abides in the sons and grandsons of these men to-day. They early realized that segregation offered the only possible solution, thereby removing the principal cause of friction. They provide and maintain separate accommodations on public utilities and separate schools. We are unable to subscribe to the theory of political equality as announced by the Chief Executive in Birmingham recently. We accord to the occupant of our political offices a social recognition which runs counter to such doctrine. The social barrier is fixed and immutable, and I believe our practice in that respect is supported by the unprejudiced judgment of the country at large.

As an evidence that the Negro is wholly unfitted for participation in political affairs, I invite the attention of this body to the hearings on the Senate resolution for the investigation of preconvention campaign expenditures in the year 1920, which resulted in eliminating the two principal contenders for the Republican nomination for President from the race. I especially direct you to the testimony of Hon. GEORGE H. MOSES, in charge of the Southern States campaign for Gen. Leonard Wood, and one Henry Lincoln Johnson, in charge of the Lowden candidacy in the State of Georgia. You will no doubt recall that Henry Lincoln, notwithstanding the putrid record there made up, and assuredly known to every candidate before the Republican convention, was more recently appointed to the office of recorder of deeds for the District of Columbia, but the body which swallowed NEWBERRY and his gilded chair were nauseated with the record of Henry Lincoln and placed the toe of the boot to him. The record referred to discloses individuals, township, county, and State conventions bought, time and time again, and which would not stay bought. They sold to MOSES' lieutenant, Pickens, and turned to Johnson, and from Johnson to Pickens, and when the aggregation reached Chicago no one dared claim it for his own for fear an overnight change had occurred. Read that record and tell me from that reiteration of the character of the Negro in politics from the very beginning, whether he is qualified for the discharge of official duties. It is the source of much wonder how the industrial life of Ohio is maintained in view of the number of her citizens employed in gainful political occupations, but I fail to hear of the appointment of many Lincoln Johnsons from that State. Thousands of postmasters have been appointed since the 4th of March, 1921, in the sections where more than one-fifth of the Negro population have their habitat in the North, East, and West. How many Negroes are intrusted with your mail matter? How many Federal judges, district attorneys, port customs officials, registrars, receivers, and so forth, are serving the citizens of that section? Surely they are loyal Republicans. While Ohio may not have a Henry Lincoln Johnson, Maryland has the Right Rev. Harvey Johnson, and who entertains strong convictions on political affairs and is not at all timid in expressing his view:

RACE PREJUDICE AND PRIDE.

[By Rev. Harvey Johnson, of Baltimore, Md.]

The white race can not tell when they began to be known as such. This being a fact, for a fact it is, why is the white man so proud, haughty, and boastful of his race, which has such an uncertain origin, and what have they done since they became a race that had not been done long before they came on the stage of action? Yes, so great were the works and deeds done by the race of Ham that the white man is still digging, exploring, searching, and excavating all over Africa, Egypt, and Ethiopia among the bones and skulls of the long buried dead in the effort to find out their great refinement and culture. And there is at the present time an English excavating society in east Africa digging up the bones and skulls of the dead, with an effort to prove that these Africans are not Africans but Caucasians, and yet at the present day the white man thinks and acts as if he knew it all, and what he does not know is not worth knowing.

The day has gone by, and gone forever, that the colored people of this country will take the white man's religion for the religion of Jesus Christ. What! Take the white man's religion for Christianity, when white preachers join the mobs that murder, lynch, and burn members of the colored race, and that, too, simply because they are colored. No, I say thrice no! For the white man's Christianity and religion is but a pretense. Not only so, it is hypocrisy gone to seed. So we, the colored race, are refusing to receive it. Not only so, but we are no longer taking the white man's doings and sayings as a criterion, for we have known and studied him carefully for more than 300 years. We have weighed him in the balance of divine justice, and he is found woefully wanting in every capacity that is necessary to make him a proper custodian of the affairs of the people and the Nation. Yes, we have found him, and still find him, totally unfitted for that great and ponderous task. For everything he undertakes, no matter how prosperous at the time, soon becomes entangled through his misguided machinery, and is perverted from its design and purpose, and so goes down or becomes more and more involved and entangled. Yes, the white man is a colossal failure in government all over the world wherever he is found attempting to govern. One has only to call to mind his recent war management, and the whole field of his mismanagement at once looms up before you, and you are morally and economically shocked and dismayed at the white man's war failure and waste; and yet he does not seem to be the least ashamed of the condition in which affairs are at the present writing.

What can the white man be other than a failure in business, when he deals entirely on a theoretical and sentimental basis? No sitting down and collecting the facts, and then undertaking to do business according to the facts acquired. Oh, no; none of that; but he just rushes in pell-mell, and the first thing the subscriber of the stock knows is the whole thing has gone in the hands of a receiver. The white man's system of government is conflicting and nullifying, for one officer can and does nullify the acts of another, and the first thing one knows he is in court, and then from one court to another, and all this because of the white man's incapacity to form a proper system of management.

The white man has no regard for business rectitude and honesty, but everything is a scheme, a political bargain and trade, with no regard to the best interest of the people, country, and State, "but what is in it for me, my party, or friend," and in no case is the best good taken into consideration; hence the people are greatly taxed and burdened to meet personal and selfish ends. Yet the white man, in his egotistical pride and blindness, thinks he is all of it, and only he. So he, in his selfish pride, says the colored man should have no part in the movement, though we are citizens born here and not naturalized, so have the fullest right to participation in all of the affairs of the State and Nation.

Yes, there is corruption in everything concerning the Government, in high places and low places, on your right and on your left. It is being exposed and shown up, and the colored people all over this country know this. The people of this country were only 3,000,000 when they entered a protest against what they considered the unfair government of Great Britain, but we are now 15,000,000, so have entered our most solemn protest against what we know to be a very unfaithful and corrupt Government.

The white man thinks he is fooling us, to use that slang expression, "by pulling the wool over our eyes," but we see through and through him as one that looks through an open knitted tidy, and we know him from head to foot. He is not fooling us; no, not a bit of it. And when he gets his eyes open he will find that we know far more about our rights than he has been willing to give us credit for. We have documentary proof that we were on this continent long before Columbus got lost and found himself on this continent. We know our rights, but the unfair and unjust white man has taken advantage of our numerical weakness and kept us out of them. But now all over this country we are contending for them, and will continue to do so until they are granted and given us, for we can take care of them much better than he has up to the present time. Indeed, we have found him incompetent to take proper care of his own, therefore we ask why should we longer trust him with ours? We will not do it, and the sooner he ceases to try to direct and lead us, the better it will be for all, for we will no longer follow his lead contentedly. If the white people want us to respect them, their religion, and Christianity, they must unload and throw off their great race prejudice and race hate and take on the manner and life of Christians.

But let us revert again to the white man's failure at government, and what do we find? Simply a state of wreckage and ruin everywhere. And who are the wreckers but the all-wise, proud, haughty white man; yet the Good Book says: "Pride goeth before destruction and a haughty spirit before a fall." I again ask, What do we see? A probe here, an investigation there; up high and down low; and the newspapers fairly groan with the stories of pillage, steals, and frauds everywhere. We know all this, and are governing ourselves accordingly.

Another reason why the white man fails in business is because he is a compromiser, and compromises settle nothing, but simply sidetracks them. But sidetracking is not settling things; it is just putting them off to come up again to perplex and plague their authors. Hence all compromises are economically wrong in that they are not business settlements, and this is another reason we are not willing longer to follow the white man's lead. We believe matters of business ought to be settled, and settled right.

This is the stuff which your type of Negro offers his race, and with which the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and other kindred organizations are circulating over the country, breeding discontent and inviting enough serious trouble without the aid of this body or encouragement by special legislation.

The charge that the southern white man is prejudiced against the Negro is only asserted by those with an entire lack of information. As has been stated in the course of this discussion, a race riot is a thing unknown to the South, while those who are not familiar with his character and without sentiment for him, when an atrocious crime is committed, are prone to indulge their prejudice against the race. It matters not how horrible may be the crime committed by the Negro in the South, that particular Negro is sought for, apprehended, and dealt with, and that is the end of the affair. I hale from the cotton plantations of the Mississippi Valley, which contain a large Negro population, where their relations are established and a spirit of tolerance and good will is displayed by both races. The people there realize the limitations of the Negro, and will make him accountable only to the extent that such limitations warrant. They realize he was not a volunteer to our shores, but came in chains, and was dealt with as a chattel. We were an unhospitable host to him. He was carried from the cold climate of the north to the more friendly atmosphere of the southland, and when the fortunes of war struck the shackles from his limbs he elected to remain under the sunny skies rather than follow his emancipators. By this decision he placed an unusual and wholly difficult responsibility upon the prostrate South, and we have worked with that monumental problem until the respective status of the white and black man is definitely reached. The Negro of the South is contented and will remain so just so long as the agitators do not disturb him with propaganda and hold out the false promises contained in measures of this kind.

We must remember that we are the product of a civilization of thousands of years, while the Negro is comparatively a child in moral training. He is an emotional being without our mental processes and control of passion, and therefore with but little moral restraint. He is a slave to his appetite and will respond to a mere suggestion without thought of consequences. This may not portray the character of the Negro you know or the Negroes generally of your community. There are many very intelligent Negroes with high ideals, but I am frankly dealing with the mass. To the average Negro of the mass, when the language of this bill is mentioned to him, with his distorted and immoral conception, the probabilities are only too great that he will feel himself licensed to yield to his unbridled passion, and I shudder at the consequences. We must recognize the fact that when a brute, black or white, places his lecherous hand upon our women, he commits suicide. Hell contains nothing to deter when that crime is committed.

Notwithstanding the sentiment I cherish for the black man, I can express but little regret that he is migrating to the industrial States of the North and East. In the year 1910 13 Southern States, to wit, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Kentucky, Tennessee, Alabama, Mississippi, Arkansas, Louisiana, Oklahoma, and Texas, contained 8,327,287 Negroes. By the same census it is disclosed that all of the other States and the District of Columbia contained 1,510,189. In the last decade we find that the addition of 521,949 Negroes made to the population of such States and District, or 29 per cent, while the increase of 113,419, or 1.3 per cent, appears in the 13 States mentioned. I append a table showing population under the census of 1910 and 1920, in accordance with the statement made:

This problem is therefore being rapidly transferred to sections not heretofore met with such conditions, and it remains to be determined how well you succeed in establishing a plane upon which peace and order may reign.

As an economic factor, the Negro is a distinct loss to the South. The State of Pennsylvania alone contains more wealth than six of the prominent Southern States, which wealth was produced largely within its border and without the raw material with which the Southern States abound. It will not do to ascribe the cause to the difference in the character and capacity of men, for the South has drawn on that State and other States from the North and East for business material with which to man many of their business enterprises. The answer is only found in the value of labor which is readily observed and unfavorably commented upon by those qualified to speak, and the condition only obtains and continues to exist through the attachment of the black man to his only real white friend.

My good friend, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CHALMERS], mentioned the lynching of one Henry Lowery in the State of Arkansas, and details circumstances in connection with the death of O. T. Craig and daughter at the hands of Lowery. He says that a controversy arose between Mr. Craig and Lowery, a tenant, over business transactions. I know the circumstances were misrepresented to him. The facts, as I am creditably informed, were practically as detailed by the gentleman from New York [Mr. ANSORGE]. O. T. Craig resided with his family upon his plantation fronting the Mississippi River and was a splendid citizen, peaceful, law-abiding, and very popular with his neighbors and the citizens of the county. He was a man of mature age and the father of an excellent family of men and women. On Christmas day in 1920 there was gathered about the fireside of that plantation home this man, his devoted wife, his daughter, and her husband and his three sons and their wives. While at the family table, partaking of the Christmas dinner, the wife of Henry Lowery, a tenant on the plantation, rushed into the room, terrified and panic-stricken, begging for protection from the murderous assaults of her passion-crazed husband. Mr. Craig rushed out, followed by his daughter, and as he appeared, this fiend fired point-blank, killing him instantly, then turned the weapon on the defenseless daughter, dropping her lifeless form upon the dead body of the father. The sons appeared, and the Negro fired upon them, wounding two. I cite this as a fair example of the distortion of facts in the reports often circulated about affairs of this nature.

The motive behind this movement renders it unworthy of the support of the splendid manhood represented on the majority side. The legislation is unconstitutional and unwarranted by the facts, dangerous in precedent, and the effect of such laws will be inimical to the peace and tranquillity of our people. Any political party moved to such extreme action on account of expediency forfeits its right to longer exist as a major party in this country. You may be sure that your action will operate to the serious disadvantage of the black man about whom you appear so solicitous for the sake of his vote; that it will seriously embarrass the efforts of his friends to assist him. It will hasten the day when he will be compelled to remove in larger numbers to your sections of the country, thus compelling you and your posterity to wrestle with a big and serious problem which your vote here is the best indication on earth of your inability to either comprehend or solve.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HAWES].

Mr. HAWES. Mr. Chairman, during the last four or five years the entire world has been debating the question of self-determination. The discussions in Ireland asking for the control of their officers of peace and asking the right that Americans secured to select their own officials is now for the first time in our history challenged in this House. In the State of Missouri we have 114 counties. In each of those counties is elected a sheriff and in each county is elected a prosecuting attorney. In each of the subdivisions of the county is selected a constable for that subdivision, all by the direct vote of the people, understanding the qualifications of these men, and all paid by the local communities which elect them. We have great cities in the State of Missouri. St. Louis has its own police department, Kansas City has its police department, St. Joseph has its police department. All of these are metropolitan systems, directed and controlled by the governor of the State. In each one of these cities is found a circuit attorney elected by the people in that community, and all of these officials, numbering some 5,000 in the State of Missouri, are paid by the people of Missouri. The prosecuting attorney is a man graduated from the law schools, selected because of his legal fitness. Yet for the first time since the days that immediately followed the Civil War the Congress proposes to place over 5,000 peace officers in my State under the direction and control of the United States Government.

In New York City there is a police department of 10,000 men. In Chicago there is a police department of 5,000; in Philadelphia, 4,500; in Boston, 1,500; and so on, until we extend to the smaller cities of the State, who elect their marshals to represent the police power in that particular community. Yet this bill proposes that the Federal Government shall assume control over 5,000 police peace officers in my State and 150,000 State and municipal peace officers in the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield to the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. HAWES. This bill describes a mob as five men. If this mob of five men commit murder against a man suspected of crime or guilty of crime, then the city of St. Louis may be fined $10,000.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. May I suggest to the gentleman that if it is proper to do that there is no bar whatever upon the Federal Government fining a State.

Mr. HAWES. None at all. If this bill was properly drawn it would not deal with the county, but would deal with the State, and in my own State it brings the governor of Missouri under the jurisdiction of this law. It brings the adjutant general, in control of our militia, under the jurisdiction of this law, and the spectacle is presented that the executive heads of 48 States in this Union may be haled before a Federal tribunal, prosecuted by a man sent from Washington, fined or imprisoned for some act that this special agent of the United States Government picks out as a crime. If this can be done, where has sovereignty gone? Not one of these State and municipal officials receives $1 from the Federal Government. Gentlemen try to draw a comparison between this law and the Volstead prohibition law. There is no comparison. The people of the United States amended their Constitution, and until the eighteenth amendment was placed upon our statute books Congress did not attempt to deal with the liquor question. It has only dealt with it so far and no farther than the amendment to the Constitution permitted.

My friends, what will you say when you return home in the canvass this fall? When you meet the sheriff of your county and call him by name, and he asks you the question, "Why have you placed me under peace bonds of $5,000 and threatened me with five years in the penitentiary? Have I not performed my services well, have I not been elected by the people of this county, exercising their choice, that I should enforce the law? Why should I now be placed in effect under bonds to obey a Federal statute?"

My friends, the crime of lynching is one that has my utter detestation. I am opposed to it. Every man in this House is opposed to it, but the question is, Shall the remedy be applied by the United States Government or shall the remedy be applied by the local community? This law means that if the United States Government can say that five men can be punished for murder, then the United States Government can say that one man can be punished for murder, and if the Government of the United States can punish one man for murder, it can punish another for theft, it can punish another for gambling, it can punish another for all crimes that may be upon the State statute books. When the United States reaches that stage, she must establish a national constabulary of police to enforce her regulations, and a national constabulary of police is the first step toward a monarchy. This bill is violative of those things which have been prohibited by our Constitution. Even in the days that followed the Civil War, when the South was not represented in the Congress of the United States, men tried to pass bills that violated the fourteenth amendment, and the courts declared their efforts unconstitutional, and when the National Bar Association holds its annual meeting and the State bar associations and the local bar associations hold their meetings there will be condemnations coming from one end of America to the other, denouncing the unconstitutionality of this law. [Applause.]

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN].

Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Chairman, it would be idle to deny and lacking in candor to ignore the fact that this bill, though general in its scope, is actually leveled against the practice of lynching in the Southern States. It is as one aspect of the Negro problem—the gravest probably—now confronting this Nation, that I propose to discuss it.

That problem may be defined, I think, as how to find for the Negro a place in the political and economic life of the country where all his rights of person and property will be safeguarded, and these being made secure his productive efficiency will be encouraged and enlarged. This question is not, as is usually assumed, one that concerns solely the people of the Southern States. It concerns even more seriously the people of the North.

I think it may be said with perfect confidence that in the South all the most difficult features of this Negro problem have been solved, except the one under discussion. In the North practically no progress has been made toward establishing a place for the Negro in our industrial system.

In the South the Negro is excluded largely from political activity, but he is encouraged and welcomed to practically every field of industrial activity. In other parts of the country these conditions are reversed.

In the North he is allowed to vote without hindrance, but he is allowed to work only under conditions that permit hardly any prospect of remunerative employment. In the South he is allowed without restriction to work, but he is not allowed to vote, except under conditions where his vote is not likely to be decisive of electoral results.

To the great credit of the Negro it must be said that when reduced to a choice between freedom to vote and freedom to work, he has elected for work; and until recently the theater of his largest growth in numbers and possessions was the South.

If we realize the Negro's condition under the system where he is welcome to carry a torch in political processions every fourth year, but is not allowed to carry a dinner pail in the industrial procession every day of every year, and compare it with his condition under the system where he is not allowed to carry a torch in political processions, but is welcome to carry a dinner pail in the industrial procession, we will find the contrast so astounding that it taxes severely our ability to comprehend it.

Mr. Chairman, I have here a report issued very recently by the Census Bureau giving the number and value of farms owned by Negroes in the whole country, and in each of the States. It shows the total value to be $2,257,645,325. Think of it! That stupendous amount of property has been produced by their hands since the conclusion of the Civil War, and under conditions more difficult than any that ever before confronted a branch of the human family.

Conceive for one moment the condition under which this marvelous result has been achieved. In slavery the Negro was a chattel. His subsistence was assured. In the main he received kind treatment, as the affection existing almost universally between the Negro slave and his master amply attests. Besides ties of affection, motives of self-interest impelled his owner to keep the slave healthy, comfortable, and contented, because his value as property depended largely on his condition and disposition. It was a vicious system, a horrible system, one that necessarily entailed the dreadful conflict through which it was ended. Its direst consequences, however, fell on the Negro, not during its continuance but after its abolition.

Freedom came to the Negro originally, not as a dispensation from conditions that were difficult but as an imposition of conditions still more onerous. Without warning or preparation of any kind he was suddenly required to find for himself means of subsistence, and thus forced under the most difficult circumstances to meet the crucial test to which civilization subjects all its members. Wherever civilization meets a man it exacts either his labor or his life. If he can not work, he must die. It met the Indian, and he is dead or he is disappearing. It met the Negro, and behold the result of freedom as he has exercised it! Property valued at $2,257,000,000 in farm lands alone is the proof, the unimpeachable, conclusive proof, of his right to a place in civilized society. It is also the monument, the impressive monument, of the shining success achieved by the white people of the South in leading and guiding the Negro from the deep abasement of slavery to the high dignity of self-supporting manhood. And this enormous volume of wealth, remember, is in farm lands alone. Estimating the personal property he has acquired as equivalent to one-half the value of his farm lands—a very moderate estimate—he has actually created and now possesses wealth amounting in value to some $4,000,000,000.

But more extraordinary even than the volume of wealth which he possesses is the manner in which he has produced it.

Substitution of free labor for slave labor in the Southern States was not a measure of progress freely adopted by a prosperous country. It was a hostile measure of war imposed upon a conquered country.

In a land completely desolated by war, the most devastating war ever waged up to that time on this earth, its fields ravaged, its cities sacked, its commerce destroyed, every dollar of its capital consumed in conflict, the flower of its youth—on whom direction of its industry would naturally depend after restoration of peace—killed in battle, its entire industrial system subverted, these Negroes, utterly unfamiliar with the methods of finding a theater of employment where their hands could be used to provide their own support, the women untrained even in the duties of motherhood, called almost in a night to face all the problems of freedom, have met the challenge with such success that in the course of little more than two generations they have produced and own a volume of property greater than the national debt which the United States incurred in setting them free. History records no achievement that parallels this for the interest it inspires or the hopes that it awakens.

But, Mr. Chairman, right here we are brought face to face with a very portentous phase of the Negro problem, but which, so far as I know, has been quite generally overlooked. Of the property in farm lands owned by Negroes in the whole country we find that 97 per cent is in the South. The exact figures are $2,191,005,642 in the South and $66,639,688 in the rest of the country. Fifteen per cent of the colored people, according to the census, live in the North, the East, and the West; 85 per cent of them in the South. Yet, instead of possessing 15 per cent of the total property which that race possesses, the Negroes outside the South possess but 3 per cent. If this striking fact prove anything, it is that elsewhere in the country the productivity of the Negro is just one-fifth what it is in the South. And, strange as it may seem, it is in those States where treatment of the Negro has been the subject of harshest criticism that he has produced and now holds the largest volume of property.

It is, of course, true that a statement of the total property owned by Negroes in different parts of the country, without giving their numbers in each place, might easily be misleading, and therefore I deem it necessary to state the authority on which the figures I have given are based.

Besides the paper already mentioned, I have here another issued by the Census Bureau entitled "Population of the United States by Color and Race." It shows that in the South—counting as the South all States from Delaware to Florida, and thence westward to Texas and Oklahoma, including Kentucky and Tennessee—the Negro population is 8,912,231. They own, as we have already seen, farm land worth $2,191,005,642. In all the rest of the country the Negroes number 1,550,900, and they own similar property worth $66,639,688. From these figures I have myself computed the average value of lands owned by Negroes in each section, with this result: In the South it is $245.84 and in the rest of the country $49.65 per capita.

In the light of these figures the statement will hardly be questioned that in the South the economic status of the Negro is established on foundations which indicate a future of growing prosperity, while in the North his industrial condition is little short of deplorable.

Mr. Chairman, there is another feature of the statistics furnished by the Census Bureau which is of even deeper interest.

From 1900 to 1910 the Negro population of the whole country increased 11.2 per cent. From 1910 to 1920 its increase was only 6.5 per cent. In the South, notwithstanding the enormous volume of wealth possessed by Negroes, the Negro population increased during the last 10 years less than 2 per cent—1.9. In the North during the same period it increased 43.3 per cent and in the West 55.1 per cent.

Now, the portentous significance of these figures is that in many of these States to which the Negro is going his opportunities of employment are practically nil. According to the census the greatest increase of Negro population is in the States containing large cities. In Michigan it reached the largest proportion—251 per cent—and in that State the census shows 60,082 Negroes own farm property worth $2,566,855—$43 per capita. In New England they own $13.62; in Pennsylvania, $11; in Massachusetts, $8; in New York, $7 per capita.

It is surely ominous, as it is startling, to find the Negro leaving States where his wealth per capita is extraordinarily large in farm lands alone—$303 in Texas, $326 in Oklahoma, $386 in Arkansas, $430 in Mississippi, and going in large numbers to territory where the average of his wealth is less than $50.

Mr. Chairman, I call attention to these figures and urgently ask gentlemen on both sides to consider them carefully. They are of portentous significance. I believe they show that this movement of Negroes from land where their prosperity is assured and their wealth already extensive to seek a livelihood in other lands where their position is difficult, their possessions few, and give their prospects of improvement fewer still can be explained only on one ground, and that is the prevalence of lynching in the States where they have succeeded in acquiring the largest measure of property.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCKRAN. I have not time now, but at the conclusion of what I have to say I will be glad to answer any question the gentleman may propound.

Mr. Chairman, that it must be some overwhelmingly powerful force which is driving the Negro from the South will be clearly apparent, I think, if we realize the conditions under which he lives in northern cities. The worst feature of them is that instead of improving with the lapse of time they have been growing more difficult from year to year until now they are probably the most dismal we can conceive.

In the North, at least in New York, when I was a young man—a good many years ago now—the Negro had a recognized place in the field of labor. He had practically a monopoly of domestic service. He was almost the only bootblack to be found in great cities. He was a waiter in almost every restaurant. I never knew anybody in those days to handle a whitewash brush except a Negro. But all this is changed. White men and women will not work alongside him. He is no longer to be found doing household work, except in rare instances. Bootblacking is now an occupation of white boys, who will not accept the Negro as a companion nor tolerate him as a competitor. The unions will not admit him to membership, and this has resulted in his exclusion from employment as a waiter in hotels—at least in those of any importance—and prevented him from wielding the whitewash brush or from working as a mechanic in any branch of industry. Except for occasional chances to do work for which white men are not available there is no legitimate occupation open to the Negro that I know of except that of porter on a Pullman car. And for the occasional job that he finds a chance to perform he receives less wages than a white man for the same order of labor. Indeed, it is no exaggeration, but a sober statement of actual fact, to say that the whole industrial system of the country, outside the Southern States, practically excludes the Negro from all opportunity of gaining an honest livelihood.

Even this does not exhaust the list of his difficulties. Driven by imperative necessity to seek the shelter of a roof, he is invariably charged higher rent than a white man for similar accommodations. And the moment he finds a lodging in any locality, white men and women fly from it as if a plague were scourging it, with the result that in New York and in all other great northern cities large areas are given over exclusively to the occupation of Negroes.

Into these Negro quarters, except a police officer or a sanitary inspector, no white man ever enters, unless he is compelled to pass through them in going from one part of the city to another. The white resident of a great city is hardly conscious that Negroes in large numbers are part of the population unless as he passes through certain streets, extending for miles in New York, he sees from the windows of a street car or automobile innumerable houses tenanted solely by colored folk and crowded sidewalks on which not a single white pedestrian can be discerned. Isolated in quarters usually squalid, paid less than the white man for what he does, charged more for what he requires, his opportunities for industrial improvement ever narrowing, is it any exaggeration to say that his condition and his prospects are well-nigh desperate? And yet notwithstanding all these difficulties and disabilities, we find him moving in ever-growing numbers to New York, Pennsylvania, and other States containing great cities.

I wonder if gentlemen here realize that at this moment there are more Negroes in Pennsylvania than in Maryland.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this, to my mind, is a very serious feature of our national existence. It is not alone the Negro who suffers from it. The entire body politic is deeply affected by it. The whole country and the civilization of which this country holds the primacy is gravely injured by any condition which tends to drive from the South, where they have shown productive efficiency that is quite remarkable, vast numbers of Negro workmen to take a worse than doubtful chance of obtaining a livelihood in northern cities. Surely no one will deny that it is a situation full of evil portent to find in any great community large and steadily increasing numbers of people who are excluded from a full share in its industrial life.

For the deplorable condition of the Negro in the northern States he himself can not be blamed. There is no complaint or ground for complaint against the way in which he discharges the duties of citizenship. No one dreams of withdrawing the ballot from him. He is, in the main, law-abiding—remarkably so when we consider the complete isolation from any influence by more intelligent white men in which he lives. He has shown no lack of capacity or willingness to work. In the one field of employment still open to him—the Pullman car service—he renders service immeasurably superior to that rendered by white men on the best appointed trains in foreign countries, as everyone who has traveled abroad must realize.

I think it will be conceded that nowhere can be found a body of workers more intelligent, painstaking, polite, diligent, and efficient than these same Pullman car porters.

Mr. SPROUL. Will the gentleman yield.

Mr. COCKRAN. I would like to have an agreeable colloquy with the gentleman, but I want to finish this argument first.

I submit to the judgment of this committee that where the Negro or any other man shows exceptional abilities in any field of industry it is a crying shame, a grave injury to our country, that he should be excluded from full opportunity to exercise his productive capacity in other fields. But how is this shame to be removed? How is this injury to be ended? I confess I am unable to answer.

Exclusion of the Negro from industrial opportunity in northern cities is not the result of any elaborate combination or conspiracy by white men. It is spontaneous, and therefore it can neither be removed nor controlled by law. You can not by law force labor unions to admit Negroes, nor force white men to work alongside them. It is neither possible nor desirable to make white men live alongside them.

We can not prohibit Negroes from leaving the South, where their opportunities to gain property are ample, for the North, where their opportunities are few, and their growth in numbers constitute a menace to the welfare of the community, and, indeed, of the whole country. But we can ascertain the causes for that movement, and if we find it is due to any violation of their elemental rights in any part of the country we should take measures to deliver them from that oppression.

Mr. Chairman, I can not conceive any explanation of this movement northward by Negroes, so radically opposed to their material interests, unless it be their horror of death by lynching. It is perfectly natural that when human beings have advanced in civilization to a degree where they have acquired property and education, a sense that by reason of their race they are exposed to such a barbarity would suffice to make them forsake States where their material condition is high and steadily improving for States where their industrial condition is difficult, if not desperate, but where their safety from such personal violence is assured. But whether this be the true explanation of the Negro's exodus from Southern States or not, the fact remains that lynching is abhorrent to every instinct of humanity and destructive of civilization itself. It must, therefore, be driven from this country and from every part of it. About this there is no division of opinion here or elsewhere.

I agree with everything the gentleman from Wyoming has said against lynching. But he has said nothing stronger than has been said on this side of the House. Everybody agrees that it is a crime which has no parallel in the annals of human depravity. But when it comes to considering this or any measure for its suppression, we are met with the objection that it is unconstitutional. When we ask what measure would at once be constitutional and effectual, we get no answer except "Leave it to the States." Well, it has been left to the States these many years, and behold the result: More persons have been put to death in certain States by lynching, according to figures given here, which remain uncontradicted, than by the regular processes of law. If, in face of such a dreadful condition and the insistent popular demand that it be remedied, we can do nothing—give no answer except a non possumus—we will neither satisfy the awakened conscience of the country nor meet the requirements of its security.

For my part, I am unwilling to admit that the constitutional system under which I live forbids all attempts to end a crime so dreadful. That Constitution by its own preamble declares its object first and above all is to establish justice. I am unwilling to believe it can ever be invoked to entrench monstrous injustice and prevent its overthrow. I am not an admirer of this particular measure. Its terms are muddy and misleading. If its description of lynching be accurate, then the bill is utterly unconstitutional. The remedy it proposes is of very doubtful efficiency. The hope that by merely transferring jurisdiction of an offense to the Federal from a State court a revolution will be effected in the administration of law so profound as to remove conditions under which convictions for the crime of lynching are difficult, if not impossible, to secure is puerile—indeed, preposterous.

But none the less I believe it to be of some value. Its enactment will be a solemn declaration by the American Congress that something must be done to end this awful crime—to eradicate it in every part of the country, and cleanse our political system from the stain of it.

As this bill is now amended, it will not become effective if the Southern States themselves take action to end lynching. And I believe this curse can be removed by none but the southern people. They who have achieved such marvelous success in establishing wholesome industrial relations between the two races can, and I believe they will, complete their glorious service to humanity by devising measures—lawful, civilized measures—which will prove even more effective than lynching to prevent the unspeakable atrocity out of which the horrid custom arises.

Much of what has been said here in explanation of lynching is entirely comprehensible to me. I know that were I in the place of a man whose wife or child or sister had undergone the unspeakable profanation of which all women throughout the Southern States stand in constant fear, I would hardly be bound or restrained by regard for law. The animal in me would undoubtedly be let loose. I would probably be a savage demanding savage vengeance on the wretch baser than a savage who had done me an injury which nothing could atone. But for that very reason I would be the last person who should be intrusted with administration of the law or with the right to determine the guilt of any person accused of so monstrous a crime. To restrain me from obeying the impulses of savagery would be essential not merely for the credit of civilization but for the welfare of the community where the crime was committed.

For let me say this to you gentlemen: The community in which a lynching occurs is more deeply injured than the individual who is its victim, even though he be burned by the torch. After all, his tortures are necessarily brief, soon ending in death; and in the grave there is surcease of all suffering. But the men who have perpetrated the lynching can never again be the same law-abiding loyal citizens they were before taking a human life by such barbarous methods. Nor can the community which permits it ever pass from out the dark shadow of it. Never again can it be felt sure that there the law will be supreme. For lawlessness once let loose is hard to bring under restraint. When the castle walls that surround the citadel of the law are broken down in one direction by armed bands to avenge in lawless fashion one offender against the law, the breach remains after the vengeance has been effected. Other invaders will enter through it to wreak lawless vengeance upon men accused or suspected of other offenses. This has actually come to pass in the South where of all those who suffered death in this manner only a small number were accused of the crime which is said to have provoked the savage custom of lynching.

And so, Mr. Chairman, we come back to the fundamental proposition: Lynching is barbarous, savage, unspeakably criminal, a blot on our civilization which must be removed. But how can it be ended?

Although we have debated this bill for a long time, I can not help feeling that the precise character of the barbarity with which we are dealing is but very imperfectly understood. I have heard it stated here that lynching was worse than cannibalism. I can not concede the accuracy of this description. Anyone who has studied the subject will realize that lynching is a peculiar manifestation of American life. And, strange as it may seem, this form of lawlessness—reprehensible, savage in the last degree—nevertheless embodies not dislike or disregard but passionate regard for the law. It is the uprising by a community against methods of administering law which do not satisfy its sense of justice and substitution for these ineffective officers of the regular Government other agencies selected for the purpose of making sure that persons accused of heinous offenses shall not escape the death penalty.

I think it must be obvious that a lynching could not occur anywhere unless with practically unanimous approval of the community. And this explains why it is that while the body of the Nation has always abhorred lynching, the people in the place where it occurred have not usually shared in that general reprobation.

Lynching did not originate in the South. The South adopted it from the West. And there the memory of past lynchings do not generally awaken regrets. I do not think you will find anybody from California denouncing the vigilantes as having injured the prosperity or discredited the civilization of that State. I doubt very much if the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] would denounce the regulators—I think that is what they were called—who 25 or 30 years ago lynched horse thieves in Montana and Wyoming, with half the vehemence which he displayed in denouncing lynching in the South here this afternoon. But in all these Western States lynching was a desperate remedy applied to desperate conditions, and these conditions, in the nature of things, were temporary. When they passed away the lynching which ended them and which they provoked disappeared with them.

But in the South lynching has continued to be of frequent occurrence, and the States having failed to prevent it, the Federal Government must take steps to end it or else it must be suffered to continue indefinitely.

I regret very much to find lynching defined in this bill as "mob violence" and persons engaged in it as a "riotous assemblage." It is the exact opposite of both. If that description were true this bill should never pass, for it would be a solemn enactment by Congress that the State should be abolished. The very object for which a State is organized is to maintain peace. If it can not discharge this function against mobs or rioters it has no excuse for existence whatever and it should no longer be tolerated. But lynching is not mere rioting, and it is more—much more—than "mob violence." It is, in fact, revolution—a temporary revolution, it is true—but none the less revolution.

Riot is forcible resistance to law and government. Lynching is the forcible maintenance of law, but by agencies outside the law. Mob violence is directed against order. Lynching is the enforcement of law and order by methods and agencies different from those of the established government. Lynching is a rebellion against the lawfully constituted authority of a State, and an attempt to substitue for the republican form of government established by the Constitution, another government established by an armed band composed of persons dissatisfied with existing methods of administering the law. When the lynching is completed the rebellion is successful, and successful rebellion is revolution.

This was clearly enunciated when the Duc de Liancourt reported to Louis XVI the fall of the Bastile, and the startled King said, "This is rebellion." "Sire," answered his wiser minister, "it is revolution."

No one will dispute that when a lynching occurs the regular government is displaced for the time being, and its power assumed by the armed men who impose the death penalty on a human being in defiance of its authority. The duly constituted government established by the Constitution remains a government de jure, but the lynchers are the government de facto. This must be clear to anyone who realizes the nature of government.

Government is the depositary of sovereignty. The supreme test of sovereignty is the power to take human life without incurring responsibility to anyone. That is precisely the power exercised by the lynchers. They are, therefore, the sovereign. There can not be two sovereigns within one sovereignty. While a lynching is in progress, the lawfully constituted authorities are set aside, and the lynchers are in supreme control. The armed band is therefore the actual sovereigns. When the lynching is accomplished the usurping government—the de facto government—dissolves; then, but not till then, the regularly constituted officers once more become the government de facto, as well as the government de jure. To prevent such a subversion of republican government is obviously within the powers of the Federal Government and within the scope of the duty imposed on it by Article IV of the Constitution. Can there be any doubt about this?

Suppose lynchers undertook to extend their operations and dispossess every colored man in a State of his property, threatening to execute by lynching anyone who was found occupying the land after a certain date, and the duly constituted government refused or failed to interfere, so that the whole State was in the hands of this revolutionary body. Can anyone doubt that under such conditions the Federal Government would intervene and restore republican government? How would this differ from the condition of an ordinary lynching, except that in one case usurpation of power extended over the whole State, and in the other it was confined to part of it? Taking property by lawless methods would certainly not be as heinous an offense as taking human life. It is true that these lynchings do not displace republican government in the whole of a State. But if it would be the duty of the Federal Government to interfere for restoration of republican government when it had been subverted in the whole State, surely it is equally its duty to interfere for its restoration in every part of the State. If it can prevent total subversion of the Government, it can prevent partial subversion of it. Punishment is ordinarily the most effective prevention for crime, and therefore to punish lynchers for the purpose of putting an end to lynching is not merely within the power, but it is among the duties of the Federal Government.

It may, however, be objected that even though this bill is consistent with the letter of the Constitution, yet it is in clear violation of the principle that matters affecting the administration of law in any particular place should be left for settlement to the people and laws of that locality. That principle I have always regarded as the very essence of democracy.

I have defended it all my life. I have invoked it on the floor more than once since I returned to service in this House, but each time without avail. It is entirely true that until recently this bill would have been irreconcilable, not, perhaps, with any specific provision of the Constitution, but with the general constitutional polity of this country. But the time when that objection could have had weight was before the passage of the eighteenth amendment. If it be consistent with our scheme of government that the Federal authority can, as the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] said, step into every village, town, and household to regulate and control what a citizen may drink, it can step in to save human life. I am not much concerned about the army of spies which the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HAWES] believes will be brought into existence by the passage of this law and which he views with such alarm. A huge army of spies is already organized and in active operation throughout the length and breadth of this country to enforce the Volstead Act. And surely if the Federal Government can step in to take a mug of wholesome beer from the hand of the workingman, it can step in to take a murderous halter from the hands of the lyncher. [Applause.]

It may be that this act is inconsistent with the American constitutional polity that was, but of the constitutional polity that is it is the very embodiment.

Mr. Chairman, although I shall vote for this measure, I do not believe lynching can be cured by legislation. It must be cured, if cured at all, by voluntary cooperation of both races in providing measures that will end the crime that produced it.

I have here a speech made by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ASWELL], which contains the best constructive suggestion that I have heard so far. After having pointed out that in the South both races are animated by feelings of mutual good will, and that it is by these kindly relations the extraordinary prosperity achieved by the Negroes in that part of the country has been established, he says:

> It is out of these kindly relations that the whole racial problem will be solved. It is imperatively important that these ties be actively strengthened by the enlistment of Negroes themselves in preventing the crimes that provoke mob violence.

To that sentiment I say, Amen! Gladly I accept it as my own. It is by the methods he suggests that we may hope to reach full solution of this whole race question.

While I do not believe this measure of itself will end lynching, I believe that the personal safety of the Negro will be decisively promoted by passing it. I am quite confident that the Southern States rather than suffer it to become effective will themselves establish some method by which his life and person will hereafter be made secure—as his property is now—from invasion of any sort except through due process of law.

Mr. Chairman, when this last phase of the race problem shall have been finally settled in the South, as I am sure it will be, there will remain many other phases confronting the rest of the country. We can not in the North count on that affection between the races to the existence of which in the South every one from that section who spoke here has testified. I do not see in the North how we can ever enlist the sympathy of the Negro. We do not know him. Without sympathy or understanding it is difficult to see how we can find the proper place for him in our civic life, or guide him to it even if it were discovered.

Yet I do not despair.

I do not believe that the instinct which abhors anything like social intercourse between the races can ever be overcome, and I do not think it ought to be. But I am one of those who believe that every human instinct, every appetite which is given to man, every quality with which he is equipped, every tendency to which he is subject is a force which, though it must lead to deep abasement if suffered to master him, will, if mastered by him, contribute powerfully to his improvement, moral and material.

The appetite which when abused has caused the worst and most terrible diseases that affect humanity is the same impulse which when it finds proper expression brings into the world that sublime, most wonderful, most beautiful element of creation, the human child, radiating in some measure the glory of the Creator from whose hands it has freshly come. And I believe this tendency of the races to remain apart—the necessity of keeping them apart socially—may in the providence of God be made the means of bringing them together in closer, more effective, industrial cooperation, with results infinitely valuable to the whole human family.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. COCKRAN. I have just one word to add.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman one minute more.

Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Chairman, I support this bill in the fond hope that its enactment will cause the Southern States to take effective measures for the suppression of lynching. And then this particular phase of the race problem having been settled, we in the North may hope to be afforded the assistance and guidance of the people who have met all its other phases so triumphantly in enlisting and marshaling both races and all the moral forces of the country in a successful effort to secure for the Negro a place in our civic life, where he will be able through industry and frugality to attain in every part of the country the measure of prosperity which he has already achieved and the prospect of further progress which he enjoys in all the States of the South. [Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. KETCHAM having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message in writing from the President of the United States, by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House of Representatives that the President had approved and signed joint resolution of the following title:

On January 21, 1922:

H. J. Res. 30. Joint resolution to amend a joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution giving discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines a preferred right of homestead entry," approved February 14, 1920.

ANTILYNCHING BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MOORE].

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I gather that my friend from New York [Mr. COCKRAN] is in favor of the bill. Even if I were left in doubt by his somewhat uncertain expressions, I should suspect that he is in favor of it from the fact that he obtained his time from the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD], and, by the way, it is certainly the first time that the gentleman from New York has ever willingly accepted a gift tagged with the name of Volstead. [Laughter.] Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is always eloquent and entertaining, and he is usually sound. This time, however, I must say that, in my opinion, he is unsound. He seemed to forget in one part of his speech a very strong statement contained in another part. He said, in substance, that the colored man is held in a sort of economic bondage elsewhere than in the South. He wanted to know how he can be relieved of that condition. His answer was that he can only be relieved by the growth of a healthy public sentiment; and that is correct. He then turned and argued that this bill should be approved because it is the only method, in his opinion, of dealing with mob violence, his assumption being that you can not deal with it unless by Federal legislation of this or some other character.

I respectfully suggest to him that the best remedy, the only effective remedy, in my opinion, that can be found to check and eradicate mob violence is the growth of the same sort of public opinion that he relies upon to rescue the Negro from the economic bondage in which the gentleman thinks the Negro is held. Public opinion, I say to my friends on the other side with great confidence, is the only process that will get the results we all hope to achieve; and we do hope for the advent of the time when mob violence will entirely disappear in every part of the Union. [Applause.] Many of us have heretofore exerted ourselves to bring about that consummation, and will continue our exertions in the future. And the effort to bring a great public opinion effectively to bear in the attempt to do away with mob violence in the southern country has been in large measure successful. Take my own State of Virginia. In Virginia lynching has decreased and is decreasing.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield to the gentleman four minutes more.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. It is decreasing more rapidly, for instance, than in the State of Missouri. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER] brings this bill here directing it against the southern States. He is its patron. Yet in Virginia in the period of 34 years ending in 1919, and also in the decade ending in 1919, the record has been better than that of Missouri. In Virginia instances of mob violence resulting in homicide have become so infrequent that we can regard lynching as practically a thing of the past in that State, due to the enforcement of the laws, supported by a strong public opinion.

And what has happened in Virginia is going on in the other Southern States. He must be a very pessimistic American who thinks we will not work the problem out in the manner now pursued and without formal legislation, and he must be a very blind Member of this body who can not see that legislation of this kind is more than apt to increase the offenses that we all desire to do away with. There are strong possibilities in that direction. It is not improbable if this bill is enacted into law it will defeat its declared purpose. It may serve to discourage and weaken the operation and influence of public opinion in upholding and insisting on the enforcement of State laws. There has been a great deal of talk about the constitutionality of the measure. I have no opportunity to discuss that matter now, but shall make a few observations on it later during the 5-minute debate. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY].

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, for eight years I was district judge in the State of Texas. On two occasions I stood with the sheriff in my court to prevent lynching. [Applause.] I know that the white people of the grand old State of Texas oppose lynching and do all that can be done by mortal men to stop it. [Applause.]

I was somewhat gravely impressed by the fact that the gentleman from Wyoming, when he recited the alleged facts of a great number of lynchings, solemnly asked, "What are 'we' going to do about it?" And all his talk was along the lines that we had no other government in the United States to handle or punish crime except the Federal Government.

That is the line of argument of many advocates of the bill. There are crimes, there are evils existing in the States. What are we going to do about it? That same question will be asked when the political exigency calls for another injection of Federal power into the proper sphere of the State's power. Advocates of this bill have admitted that under the principle on which it is based any other crime can be punished by the Federal Government. This bill is shrewdly drawn to apply practically only to the commission of rape, and is aimed specially at the South, because it eliminates any mob violence resulting in death that is not for the punishment or prevention of a crime; so that race riots in the North and in the East do not come within the purview of the bill. If under the heat of that passion which God has planted in the hearts of white men to protect their women some man with his friends takes the life of a fiend in human form who has violated her who is dear to him, this law applies to that man, but we then can have a race riot such as we had in Springfield, Ill., which burned down half of that city's Negro habitations, or in East St. Louis, in the same way, and it does not call for Federal intervention, because the law does not apply.

I hope I shall have time to say just a few other things. Oh, this bill would wake the shades not only of Thomas Jefferson but of Alexander Hamilton himself, if they could but have a consciousness of what is going on. In passing this bill, gentlemen, you break faith with the fathers who founded the Government and formed the compacts between the States. It has been said that the United States is an indissoluble Union of indestructible States. This bill, instead of tending to keep the Union indissoluble, will tend toward the destruction of that Union by the destruction of the States. This is the entering wedge, this is the precedent under which you can pass and justify by analogy any other legislation violating the rights of the States.

The last man on the floor of this House that I expected to see champion this bill was the gentleman from New York, the Hon. BOURKE COCKRAN.

Since the time when Cromwell put his iron heel on the neck of Ireland that great old country, with which we have sympathized, has been struggling to regain the privileges and the rights of local self-government, and I presume the gentleman's heart has beaten in unison with that people. For over 200 years Ireland has struggled to obtain the privilege of local self-government, which we in a moment of political exigency are now proposing to throw away. In this bill we surrender the right of local self-government, and—God save the mark!—the gentleman from New York is for the surrender. Oh, that I could but call the shades of Curran and of Grattan here to the presence of the gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN] and ask them, "What think you of your son from old Ireland?" Has the time come when our States are so weak that they can not take care of themselves? The gentleman said that the South had solved all their other race problems. Why not then, in God's name, leave them to the solution of this? [Applause.] By this bill you inject the Federal authority into the administration of the criminal laws of the different States, and you have done much to destroy the friendly relations that at present exist between the white man and the black in the South; yes, and you do it in the North, too, because they are going to your homes, they are going to your communities, and you will be confronted with the crime of lynching when after the rape of a fair daughter the irresistible tendency of man to protect his own makes him commit this offense. If you by this law say that you will not leave the punishment of any crime to your own people, but will put it into the hands of the Federal Government, then you will find that you have destroyed the very essence of our Constitution.

Leave aside the question of constitutionality, although I must say that upon that point you have broken faith with the fathers and treated as a scrap of paper the sacred document that I still revere, whether anyone else does or not. It was for local self-government that the world plunged into the Great War. The Serajevo assassination took place, and the little Government of Serbia wanted the right to punish her own criminals. She yielded on every demand of Austria except on the right to judge and try her own people accused of crime. Austria wanted the right to go in and administer justice by establishing courts there, and that brought on the World War. To-day you want to say to the people of Texas, to the people of Minnesota, when a lynching occurs, that the Federal Government will administer the law. That their courts and their people are unfit to try the offenders against their law. I am here to tell you that Thomas Jefferson was right when he said that the gradual absorption into the central Government of the power of local administration was fraught with danger to the liberties of the people, and this law is fraught with vast dangers of that kind. When you subject the heretofore independent judiciary of the States to supervision and to possible punishment at the hands of the Federal judiciary you destroy, if not the last, at least the highest symbol of State sovereignty. Had we guarded and not usurped the powers of the States we might invite adjacent countries to join our Union. But we are proving that we can not be trusted to keep faith once plighted, and Canada to our north wisely prefers to remain with England, who is expanding and confirming the rights and powers of local jurisdictions rather than join the United States and lose her freedom. I warn gentlemen from the North that in the years to come the principles of this bill, if it is enacted and allowed to stand by the courts, will return to plague them. [Applause.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. LOWREY].

Mr. LOWREY. Mr. Chairman, I ask permission to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LOWREY. Mr. Chairman, it is to be lamented that in a debate on so serious a question as this the ever present and ever deplorable partisan spirit should be aroused or appealed to, and more to be lamented that local or sectional prejudices should come in. Yet I congratulate the House and the country that this particular debate has been rather unusually free from these features.

Every thoughtful man, be he northern or southern, Republican or Democrat, must realize that the mob and the mob spirit as a fact can not be otherwise than hurtful and dangerous, and that the safety of our civilization depends on our getting away from it and attaining a stage in organized society where we can and will punish all crimes, settle all public disturbances, and administer all justice by the strong hand of the law. This principle obtains whether we contemplate the management of an industrial strike, North or South, or the punishment of a Negro for assault on a white, North or South. And these troubles occur in both sections and have been dealt with by the mob in both.

And just here let me say that I am a friend to the Negro, as every true southern white man is. We prefer for him to be a black Negro. If he has the misfortune to be a mulatto, it is not his fault. It shows that his parents, or some of his ancestors, have been guilty of the foulest crime that stains the record of the two races.

There are few questions on which there has been so broad a misunderstanding as on the real spirit that prevails between the southern white man and the southern Negro. Note, please, that I say Negro, and not colored man. I beg no man's pardon for adopting the terminology of B. K. Bruce and Booker Washington, and the ablest and best men generally of the race. You do the race an injustice when you teach them to be insulted at their correct and historic name and the most honorable name by which they can be called.

But back to my thought. I borrow an illustration: The pessimist reads in the morning paper that Bloody Bones got up at 6 a. m. and took the hatchet and split his wife's head open. Whereupon the pessimist begins to moralize, "What is the world coming to? We have fallen upon evil times, when nobody's life is safe. Any man or woman may be murdered any hour, and by the nearest and seemingly the dearest friend or relative." But the pessimist forgets that on that very morning a hundred thousand loyal and loving husbands each got up and split kindling with the hatchet, made the fire, and helped the cheerful and patient wife through the morning work, and sat down and reveled in her love and smiles as she served the wholesome breakfast, and then hurried away to his day's work singing in his bounding heart, "For my bonnie Annie Laurie I would lay me doon and dee." But none of the hundred thousand cases got into the newspapers.

So some people form their whole idea of the race situation in the South from a few horrible things that are paraded under big headlines in the papers. "Pity, 'tis, 'tis true" that these people know nothing of the hundred thousand and more cases that do not get into the papers where white men of financial ability bestow all kinds of patience and consideration upon needy Negroes and maintain between labor and capital the finest spirit to be found anywhere on earth.

As a southern man who has spent more than a half century in a State where the population is less than half white, I say to you, I like the Negro. His spirit, in the country where I live, is generally kindly; his wit and humor are often rich and startling, and his philosophy unique. Take, for instance, the case of Henry, who was just out from serving a three months' sentence in jail. Ed asked him, "Well, Henry, how did you injoy stayin' in jail?" "Oh, purty good," replied Henry, "it ain't much hard, but its mighty constant." Or the life philosophy of the aged minister, the Rev. Tommy Giles, "Now, if a man will consider the latitude of life and not agrieve hissef' 'bout bein' pore, his poreness ain't gwin' to hurt him." Or the superstitious awe of Foster when he protested against being sent on an errand that took him by the church and graveyard at night. "No, suh, I don' 'zactly spec' anything to hirt me, I'm jest kinder sceered somp'n might sort o' jump up in dat graveyard and make me hirt mysef." And, finally, the reasonable conclusion of Arkansas Bill, in his argument with Susan about the elephant. "Dat thing eat hay wid his tail." "Why, you fool nigger, dat ain't no tail." "Well, if it ain't a tail, I don' know what you gwine to call it. It hang down jest lak' a tail, and it curl up lak' a tail, and it shore look lak' a tail to me." "Naw, fool, dat ain't no tail; dat's his trunk." "His trunk? Well den dat little one what he carry back behin' him, I reckon dat's his suit case."

But while the Negro is generally unique, docile, and humorous, yet those who have tried hardest to befriend him know best his weaknesses and have often found in him a preponderance of the animal. This is exhibited in his reckless indulgence of physical appetites and passions, and in a trend toward cruelty, which is seen in the merciless and frequent abuse and beating of his children, and in his savage fights with knives and razors. Out of these two traits has come the crime which has been the prolific source of the lynching evil. Understand, I do not say the crime for which the greatest number of lynchings now occur. Yet southern men know that the foul source from which the foul stream of mob violence flows—in our section—is the crime of rape. But for this crime the stream would never have reached its large proportions. And with the same proportion of black population and the same number of assaults on white women in any other section, much the same conditions would follow.

With a feeling of horror and revulsion, but with a very serious purpose, I refer to one of these unspeakable crimes, the account of which I received from a young man who had lived in my own home, and from other certain sources. The young woman assaulted and murdered was of a family bearing a most honored name. One man of the family has been chief justice of the supreme court of his State, one has been State superintendent of education, and one has been president of a great college, another president of a large national bank, and another pastor of a great church. The young woman was found dead in her home. She lay on the floor with her head thrown back, her white marblelike face, in horrid contrast with the pool of red blood which clotted her hair and in which her head and body lay. The blood had flowed from two great razor wounds, one of which half severed her neck, close up to her chin, and the other, as ghastly and deep down next to her collar bone. Her skirts were torn to shreds by the brutal rage of the author of the crime.

Through the agency of a Negro woman the guilty man was detected. He made a full confession, outlining the gruesome details of the crime. He told how he went into her home to assault the lady, after seeing her husband leave for his day's work. How she fled into the back yard, where he caught her, choked her senseless, and then dragged her back into the house and there committed the nameless deed while his victim was seemingly dead. Then he had gone through the house to see what he could steal. Finding a razor in a dresser drawer he decided he would best be sure she was really dead, lest she might recover and identify him. So he went back and inflicted the two razor wounds, and after that committed the nameless crime again, which accounted for the blood on his clothing, through which he had been detected.

I hesitated, and I beg pardon for afflicting human ears with an account so horrible. But I want Members to realize just what we are exposed to. This occurred in the county adjoining that in which I live; I have known other cases equally as horrible. I want to say that I do not approve of mob violence under any conditions. It is known through my State that for 20 years I have spoken out against it and in many instances have taken issue with papers and public men who spoke in approval of it. I do not speak in defense of the devil in human form who commits a crime like this. No penalty given him in this world could approach adequacy. But I do speak for the men and boys who come together in a mob to execute on him the tortures of a death even less excruciating than he has inflicted on his innocent victim and less excruciating than his guilt deserves. I do not believe that they can witness or take part in such proceedings without having their consciences and their ideals somewhat debased or without coming away a little nearer capable of taking human life than they were before. I at least do not want my boy to have any part in it, and it can not be done without somebody's boys taking part. So I am opposed to its being done at all. It is bad for individuals, bad for public morals, and bad for the cause of law, order, and good government.

Yet I can not find it in my heart to abuse a community that under the shock of crime like this loses control and resorts to almost any measure. And I can not vote for a Federal law to punish the officers of a State or county with dismissal and the whole people with a heavy fine because the people of one community did thus demonstrate an indignation which was in itself righteous. And that, too, when in many cases the bulk of the fine would be paid by people who knew nothing of the lynching till it was over and who were as innocent of it as one of you gentlemen in your home a thousand miles away. What kind of justice do you call that? I call it both travesty and infamy.

I do not believe that a Federal law to penalize the county or State, even if it were constitutional and in accord with fundamental principles, would help matters. Again, if we are going to give somebody $10,000, I have the temerity to suggest that it might be as well to give it to the family of the victim of the rape as to the family of the rapist, and that the officers of a county might as reasonably be punished for allowing a rape to occur as for allowing the mob to occur.

No, gentlemen, we will never cure the mob evil with a law like this. My candid opinion is that we would aggravate it. And we are in a fair way to do this at the cost of the Constitution which we have sworn to maintain.
